The sons and daughters of Indiana have gained almost as much fame in the movie world as they have in a literary way. Those who have won prominence are Edna Goodrich, Logansport, who has found that there is more money in posing for movies than there is on the legitimate stage. Elsie Janis, although born in Ohio, claims Indiana as her home. Madam Olga Petrova, wife of Dr. John Stewart, Indianapolis, has just finished a piece called "The Tigress" for the Film Corporation of New York. Leah Baird, who in private life is Mrs. Beck, of Indianapolis, is being featured by the Vitagraph Company. Alice Washburn, of Indianapolis, with the Edison Company. Donald Hall, of Indianapolis, is a Vitagraph player. Russell Powell, is a well known bass singer, who left comic opera to join the Biograph forces. J. Warren Kerrigan, of New Albany, is now playing leads for the Universal Company. Gilbert M. Anderson, has gained fame as Broncho Billy in the Essanay films. Victor Potel, of Lafayette, is the Slippery Slim of the Essanay productions. Tom Santschi, of Kokomo, was starred in "The Adventures of Kathlyn" for the Selig Polyscope Company. Charlie Murray, Muncie, and Ollie Mack, Indianapolis, who teamed as Murray and Mack in Irish comedies have won fame and are now producing their successes for the Keystone studios. Harry Benham, of Indianapolis, recently starred in "Zudora" for the Thanhouser Company. Harry Meyers, of Indianapolis, is with the Victor Company, and Emmet Beck, of Indianapolis, is a character actor with the Frontier concern.

OTHER INDIANA NOTES.

Dr. Bayless, New Richmond, Ind., has sold the Crystal theater to Edward Conn. Glen Harriman, former manager of the house, has been engaged to run the business. He will change the film service.

Half of the receipts taken in at the exhibition to be given at a moving picture house in Corydon, Ind., owned by Mr. Terrell, will be turned over to the school fund to be used in buying furniture for the school house.

Films of the Odd Fellows Old People's Home, located at Greensburg, Ind., are being shown over the state to advertise the place.

A "KNOW CLEVELAND" CONTEST.

By J. D. Raridan, Special Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

A CONTEST of unusual interest has been started by the Reel theater, East 9th street, Cleveland, its pulling power appearing in its unique style. "Answer the following questions by March 1, 1915," the rules read. "What are the names of the 'commercial' schools of Cleveland, and other questions about Cleveland. The first one to send a correct answer of the above questions to the Reel theater by March 1, 'commercial' schools of Cleveland, and how send a correct answer of the above questions to the Reel theater by March 1, 1915, will receive ten dollars."

CREDIT ASSOCIATION ACTIVE.

The Film Men's Credit Association, organized recently in Cleveland, already has asserted its activity in the settlement of several cases that have been presented. The association is co-operative and studies the problems of both exhibitor and exchange man for the mutual benefit.

COMMITTEE DISAPPOINTED.

In an attempt to provide what has been termed a "higher class pastime" than the ordinary picture show affords for those who have little money to spend for recreation, a series of free entertainments were inaugurated by the educational committee of the Women's Club Federation at Niles, O. Needless to remark, the club leaders found the attendance disappointing.

OTHER OHIO NOTES.

The management of the Opera House, Ashland, O., advocates feature photoplays for entertainment value and has adopted a policy of one feature each night.

The Atlas, one of Cleveland's newest photoplay houses, recently opened at East 138th street and St. Clair avenue, is acquiring its patronage from a rapidly increasing population in this section.

In shifting to a continuous program from 1:45 p. m. to 10:45 p. m. the Majestic theater, Lancaster, finds its repayment in a heavy increase of receipts.

The Bijou, at Xenia, is co-operating with the newspapers of that city to the extent that a free ticket recently was given to each patron reading the advertisement of the theater.

Matinees for school children have been inaugurated for Saturday performances by Manager John J. Murray at the Warren theater, Warren, O. Five cents is charged for children under twelve years of age.

The Grand theater, Athens, O., is now running three shows a night, reducing the price of admission to children accompanied by parents to five cents.

The New Columbia, Alliance, O., is running four shows daily, matinee and three evening performances. All seats at the matinees are ten cents, though at night the prices are ten and fifteen cents.

On the anniversary of the birth of President McKinley, the Alhambra theater, Canton, O., presented patrons with carnations. The martyred president was born in Canton.

The Grand, Canton, announces: "Positively no five cent tickets sold after six o'clock."

Proctor E. Seas, manager of the Priscilla theater, East 9th street, Cleveland, is defendant in a suit for $10,000 damages, filed against him by Stanley A. Hackett, attorney, who charged Seas with forcibly ejecting him from the theater.

H. W. Riddle, Ravenna, O., will take bids about April 1 on construction of a theater building in that city.

Guy Tilden & Son, architects, Canton, O., have plans for a theater to be erected at Massillon for J. McLain.

Stadler Bros., managers of the Jewel theater, East 124th street and St. Clair avenue, Cleveland, have established a heavy patronage as a result of their policy of presenting feature productions in addition to a program of regular releases.

Censoring in Montreal

Maxwell Sinn of District Censor Board Complains of Attitude of Some Picture Men Toward Board's Decisions—Attempt to Buy Its Savor with Bribe—Some Real Causes of Dissatisfaction with Board's Methods—Exhibitors' Way Out.

By G. Gallagher, Special Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

MR. G. MAXWELL SINN is responsible for the statement that efforts have been made to bribe the local censors, and that the Board, of which he is a member, has received letters of abouse, because it condemned certain films. The statement was made in the course of an address before a local society last week.

With some of the Censor's decisions we quite agree. Unhappily, there have been films which could under no circumstances be tolerated. But the local censors are not without fault. It is true that the Province of Quebec is different from many other provinces, inasmuch as there are many questions arising constantly between the two languages and religions. We are given to understand that films which were passed by the boards of all the other provinces, and which dealt with no religious or racial question, have been condemned by the local gentlemen. Surely this cannot be just. Another example indicates that the local censors' methods cannot be complete and just to the film men. A recent firm, by some mistake or other, submitted two copies of the same film on different days. One was passed and the other condemned. Evidently, how this happened, was that different members saw the copies, and, that while the first gentlemen saw fit to pass it, the other thought it worhy of being "killed." Surely the local censors should change their methods so that the exchange men could be more justly treated.

Regarding the statements of Mr. Sinn about bribes being offered and abuse being cast at the Board, the attitude of the Moving Picture World on such things is too fully known to need much comment. Perhaps the Censors are doing what they fully believe to be right. Be diplomatic. Go down and talk to them civilly. Name delegates; in other words, get together for your own good.

NEW MONTREAL TAX BILL.

Bill Attempts to Press Last Possible Penny from Exhibitor—May Cripple Business.

The Montreal Bill, now up for consideration at Quebec, will go down in the annals of the local film trade as notorious for its clauses relating to the moving picture exhibitor. Besides the proposed new system of taxing theaters, another tax is proposed whereby amusements are called upon to help charitable institutions. We quote Section 39 of the Montreal Bill:

The council may, by by-law, impose and levy a tax of one to five cents on each admission ticket, or for, or on, each person admitted into any theater, moving picture hall, * * * * or any other place in the city where any exhibition or entertainment whatsoever is given and where an entrance fee is collected and charged; compel the owners, lessees or occupants of such theaters and other places above mentioned or any other persons operating the same to collect themselves the said tax and to render an account thereof to the city under pain of being held personally liable therefor, and adopt any other measures which it may deem necessary in order to ensure the collection of said tax and even reserve the exclusive right to sell the said tickets, and, for the infringement of any by-law adopted in virtue of this section, by the person holding a license for such theaters or other places above mentioned, impose as a penalty, in addition to that already provided by the charter, the suspension or even the revocation of such license."

B. C. FEATURE CO. HANDLES CONNESS-TILL PICTURES.

The B. C. Feature Company, 701 New Birks Bldg., announces that it has secured the sole rights for the handling in Canada of the output of the Conness-Till Film Company. The first release will be "On the King's Highway," written and produced by A. J. Edwards, with Edward Robins and Clara Whipple in the leading roles. The initial release is in three parts and is said to possess merit. We have seen some still pictures, and these show some fine interior settings. F. M. Buckland manages the Montreal office of the B. C. Company. Branches are located in Truro, N. S., and Winnipeg, Man.

OSWEGO, N. Y., VOTES FOR SUNDAY SHOWS

Aldermen So Decide; but Are Meeting with Opposition—In Other Cities.

By Billy Bison (23 Victoria avenue, Buffalo), Special Correspondent of the Moving Picture World.

THE vote taken by Oswego, N. Y., aldermen in favor of moving picture shows on Sunday is meeting with widespread opposition. The ministers, with few exceptions, have taken a decided stand against the proposal. An Oswego newspaper has printed several interviews with local clergymen opposed to Sunday shows. In Fulton, Syracuse, Utica and other cities of the State the picture theaters are open on Sunday and there seemed to be no justice, the Oswego Aldermen claimed, in maintaining a city ordinance aimed at keeping the picture houses closed on the first day of the week. The Oswego aldermen amended an ordinance so as to allow the operation of moving picture theaters under certain conditions. The principal restriction is that no theater shall advertise Sunday shows by display signs of pictures visible from the street and the operation of the places shall not interfere with the peace of the Sabbath. It provided also no entertainment shall be less than one hour and thirty minutes in duration and the theaters can be operated only between the hours of 2:30 and 10 o'clock.

NEW PALACE OPENS SHORTLY.

The New Palace moving picture theater, Main street, Buffalo, will cost $150,000. The Mitchel H. Mark Realty Co., builders of the Strand theater, New York, is erecting the Palace, which will open shortly. The house will seat 1,200. Harold Edel, who will manage the Palace and Strand theaters, Buffalo, says there will be a change of program at the Palace on Monday, Thursday and Sunday, with master productions of the film world. There

OTHER BUFFALO NOTES.

Leon W. Gaut is making good as manager of the new Circle moving picture theater at 444 Connecticut street, Buffalo. He was formerly at the Globe theater, that city. Mr. Gaut sent this word to your correspondent: "I have taken the Moving Picture World for the past four years and couldn't do without it."

Walter C. Moon, manager of the Happy Hour Moving Picture theater, Buffalo, was formerly a professional 'cello player. His ability in this line was of special service to him when he recently showed the Essanay single reel picture, "At the End of the Perfect Day," based on a song of that title. The piece called for 'cello music, which Mr. Moon supplied.

New Censorship Bill

Massachusetts State Senate Is Considering New Bill—Would Place Film Censorship in Hands of State Board of Labor and Industries and Provide Funds to Pay Censors—Supervision of Film at Present Left to District Police—Exchangemen Prefer Present Method.

By Edwin H. McCloskey, Special Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

EXCHANGE managers throughout Massachusetts are expressing much dissatisfaction over a bill which has been presented to the State Senate by Senator Bates of Boston. This bill was drawn up by C. C. Carstens of the Massachusetts Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children and asks that the State Board of Labor and Industries have jurisdiction over all moving picture films. It also provides for the appointment of a censor and two assistants and asks that a fee of one dollar be charged for each reel that does not exceed 1,000 feet and a two dollar assessment on each reel exceeding 1,000 feet.

In Massachusetts, at the present time, the district police have charge of all films and act as the official censors. Although they are rather strict at times, nevertheless exchange managers believe that the censorship of films should not be taken away from them, as it would be if this bill is passed.

WANT BOARD OF PUBLIC AMUSEMENTS IN BOSTON.

"State Censorship for Motion Pictures" and "A Board of Public Amusements in Boston" was the subject of discussion for the legislative conference of the Boston City Federation, which was held in Perkins Hall, Women's Industrial and Educational Union, last week. Ordway Tead of the South End House and Ralph S. Thompson, of the Children's Welfare League, of Roxbury, Mass., were the principal speakers. The support of the different organizations belonging to the federation was asked for.

MAYOR'S ASSISTANT MAKES REPORT ON THEATRES.

Mrs. Anna Steinauer, whom Mayor Curley appointed as guardian of the morals of young women and children, has made her first official report to the Mayor. She has confined her first investigation to moving picture theaters and states that in five houses of the city, she found that children under 12 years of age were admitted after 6 o'clock in the evening without an escort. In three of the houses, she found that children were permitted to enjoy the pictures during school hours. Otherwise conditions were first class.

BROOKLINE FRIENDLY SOCIETY SHOWS PICTURES.

A novel moving picture show was given in Brookline, Mass., last week, under the auspices of the Brookline Friendly Society, a charitable organization of the members of the 400. These shows will be provided weekly for the children and at this exhibition Miss Dorothy Jordan, daughter of Eben D. Jordan of Boston Opera fame, gave a series of dances, which have made her famous in Boston.

EDITH STOREY IN LAWRENCE.

Miss Edith Storey, the Vitagraph player, made a visit to Lawrence, Mass., during the week. She appeared at the Colonial theater, where "The Christian," in which she plays a prominent part, is the attraction. She was escorted from the South Station, Boston, to the theater by "Nap" Demarra, one of the proprietors of the Lawrence playhouse.

ELKS INVITE STARS TO BALL.

The Springfield Lodge of Elks have extended invitations to several screen stars to attend their annual ball which will be held next month. Among those invited are James Cruze, Marguerite Snow, Flo Labadie, Maurice Costello, Rose Tapley, Ethel Grandin and Gene Gauntier.

PHILLIPS-EXETER GETS SPECIAL SHOWS.

Jack Carney, of the Opera House at Exeter, Mass., is making a big hit with the special performances which he holds at his house for the students of Phillips-Exeter Academy. The faculty will not allow members of the student body to attend the regular performances on account of their studies. Manager Carney arranged for special performances, which start at 6.30 in the evening and end at 8 o'clock, when the regular performance starts.

OTHER NEW ENGLAND ITEMS.

A new moving picture theater is preparing to open at Brookfield, Mass. This house is a fireproof structure and will have a seating capacity of 250. Manager Mulcahey, of the new playhouse, visited Edward J. Farrell, of the General Film Company, last week to make arrangements for the use of General Service. He states that this is the first theatrical enterprise in the town.

Lawrence Hacking, assistant manager of the General Film Company, spent several days at the company's office at Bangor, Maine, where he installed a new booking system.

Louis Levine, who was recently succeeded by Harry F. Campbell as manager of the New England office of the Box Office Attraction Company, returned to New York last week, where he will do special work for the Fox enterprises.

Nat Burgess, manager of the National theater, Boston, which is the largest theater in the city, is well pleased with United Film Service productions, which are attracting large crowds to his playhouse.

All records were broken at the New Bedford theater, New Bedford, Mass., when Manager Walter Preston offered the Box Office Attraction Company's "Samson" as his feature. His patrons have asked him to rebook the feature at a future date.

"The Price of Crime," released through the United Film Service, proved to be a popular attraction when it played at the Music Hall, Pawtucket, R. I., during the past week.

George Hickey, of the United Film Service, was recently entertained by the Salem Lodge of Elks, while on a business trip in that city.

Manager Harry F. Campbell, of the Box Office Attraction Company, has arranged with the following theaters for the use of Fox features: Supreme, Jamaica Plain; Gem, East Boston; Unique, Boston; Roxbury, Roxbury; Colonial, Lawrence; Colonial, Brockton, and Brighton, Brighton.

"The Master Key," the Universal serial, is acknowledged by all to be the most popular serial with the moving picture patrons of New England. In every theater where it is exhibited, the flash of the title upon the screen is greeted with the greatest applause and when the episode is ended, many complimentary remarks are to be heard throughout the audience.

Manager H. B. Daly, of the New Magnet theater at Claremont, N. H., reports that his house has been playing to capacity since it opened a few weeks ago. Mr. Daly is using United Film Service.

"Bill" Gray, of the Gray and McDonough circuit, Lewiston, Maine, is preparing to entertain many friends at a birthday party which he will hold at his camp outside Lewiston. Mr. Gray will be 36 years of age.

Mr. and Mrs. Smith, of Smith's theater, Woonsocket, R. I., have just returned from a delightful sea voyage to Jacksonville, J. A. Jassamine, of the Bijou theater, Ware, Mass., has sold his popular little playhouse to C. H. Cleves.

WASHINGTON POST GIVES FIRST EDUCATIONAL SHOW.

By Clarence L. Linz, Special Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE first of the educational motion pictures in the campaign to secure the equipment therewith of all schools were shown by the Washington Post at St. Mary's Academy, in Alexandria, Va., last week. The director of the academy stated that she thought motion pictures are the way to teach. They can be used in almost every subject and by presenting the subject graphically they bring a picture before the mind and make clear what is only vaguely impressed by description.

SUFFRAGISTS RUN COLONIAL FOR WEEK.

The women of the Washington Woman Suffrage Council had complete charge of the Colonial theater during the first week of the month, during which time the now famous suffrage photoplay, "Your Girl and Mine," was run. Every suffragist in the city co-operated to make the affair a big one in the history of suffrage. Each day the theater was in charge of a different society under the council. The play, which was produced by Mrs. Medill McCormick, chairman of the Congressional committee, consists of six reels.

WASHINGTON INQUEST CLUB MEETS.

The Washington Inquest Club at its annual meeting last week in the Southern Building, selected W. B. Laub, as "coroner." The club has for its purpose the discussion of old plays for the instruction of the members. Included in its membership are Miss R. Tharin, Miss Cora VanSant, Lewis Denham, Oswald Camp, W. B. Islewood, Sullivan Johnson, and James Wheeler, who was elected as secretary.

NEW EXCHANGE.

The National City Feature Exchange is the name of the new firm of which Alex. G. Irvine is the manager, which has taken offices in the Bank of Commerce & Savings Building, at Seventh and E streets, Northwest. Mr. Irvine was formerly a traveling representative of the World Special Film Corporation. It is his intention to invade the field consisting of the District of Columbia, Maryland, Virginia and North Carolina with features of merit.

OPERATORS' LOCAL DANCES ON FEBRUARY 23.

"Hold this date open—Tuesday, Feb. 23," say the members of the local union of moving picture machine operators, for it is on that day that they will hold their fourth annual dance in the Old Masonic Temple, at Ninth and F streets, Northwest. This is to be a red-letter day in the history of the local and an exceptionally large attendance is looked for, the previous annual dances having proven very successful.

WHAT WAR TAX BROUGHT IN NOVEMBER.

The office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, of the Treasury Department, has just completed the compilation of the returns under the so-called war tax measure of Oct. 22, 1915. The figures show that Uncle Sam is the richer by $123,938.61, obtained through the taxing of theaters, museums and concert halls; $200.01 from circuses, and $646.91 from exhibitions not otherwise provided for. All of this money was collected during the month of November. Additional sums were collected during the month of December.

LICENSED FILM STORIES

KALEM.

HER SUPREME SACRIFICE (Special—Two Parts—Feb. 15).—Disinherited by his father because of a runaway match with Ora Miles, a typist, Gordon Ames secures a position as secretary to Hale, an elderly millionaire. Hale accidentally meets Ora. Ignorant of her identity, he falls in love with her.

A year after the birth of her baby, Ora learns that Gordon's father offers to forgive him, providing he leaves her. Realizing that her husband is breaking down as the result of overwork, Ora, on the impulse of the moment, decides to sacrifice her happiness for his sake.

Leaving home, she establishes a residence in a western state and later secures a divorce. Gordon thus freed, Ora returns East. She again meets Hale. He offers her a position, which she accepts. Too late, Ora learns that her sacrifice has been in vain—that Gordon's father died without forgiving him.

Hale proposes to Ora. Thinking of the comforts her wealth would provide for her child, who has remained in Gordon's care, Ora agrees to marry the millionaire. Elaine, the old nurse who is taking care of Ora's baby, learns of the approaching marriage. Her effort to prevent it causes the woman to take Ora's baby and place her on the veranda of the Hale mansion, on the day of the ceremony. The child, however, wanders into the street and is injured by an automobile.

Ora and Hale are about to be wed when a policeman brings the infant into the house with the request that he and the child be allowed to remain until the arrival of the ambulance. Ora, recognizing her baby, throws her arms about the child. Gordon, watching the ceremony from an adjoining room, enters and kneels by his wife's side. Ora then realizes where her happiness lies and bravely declares her intention of facing the future with Gordon.

LOVE VERSUS CHICKENS (Feb. 16).—The love affair between Mable Diggs and Chester Spriggs is rudely interrupted when Mable's father accidentally kills a chicken belonging to Chester's mother. After Mrs. Spriggs has vented her ire upon Diggs' head, she pulls her son into the house and forbids him to talk to Mable.

Diggs follows the same course of procedure with Chester. The parents lock their children in their rooms to make sure that the two do not see each other. Chester and Mable, however, escape via the windows and make a bee line for the minister's house.

Mrs. Spriggs and Mr. Diggs discover what has happened. They pursue the elopers, but arrive too late. Although the parents are spoiling for a fight, Chester and Mable persuade them to make up, and all ends well.

YOU'LL FIND OUT (On same reel as Foregoing—Feb. 16).—Jones accepts a position as nurse companion to Mrs. Welkins. The lady is suffering with a temporary mental derangement. Arriving at the Welkins home, Jones sees the former nurse departing. The latter, swathed in bandages, declares "You'll find out!" when asked for the cause of his injuries.

Welkins informs Jones that his duties consist of humoring Mrs. Welkins' every whim—if she imagines him to be a dog, he must act like a dog. If she declares him to be an elephant, he must act the part.

Jones agrees, but gets in bad with his patient from the very start. Before long, battered and bruised, he realizes the meaning of the former nurse's words. Jones quits the job on the run.

THE MYSTERY OF THE TEA DANSANT (A Two Part Episode of The Girl Detective Series—Feb. 17).—Shortly after the mysterious disappearance of Marguerite Wheeler, an heiress, her mother receives a note demanding $5,000 for the girl's return. Ruth, the girl detective, assumes charge of the case and advises the frantic mother to comply with the demand.

Harry Warrington, whose life the girl detective had saved in a previous case, uses his political influence to secure a position on the force. He becomes Ruth's assistant. The two find that the trail leads to the Tea Dansant conducted by Marmaduke. At Ruth's suggestion, Darby, Marmaduke's assistant, is arrested and questioned.

The man breaks down and confesses that Marguerite is being held a prisoner by Marmaduke, who is in financial straits. Darby relates further of how he had served time in an English prison because of Marmaduke's treachery. The man possesses a hypnotic influence over Darby, which the latter is powerless to break.

The girl detective secures Darby's co-operation. The man returns to the Tea Dansant. Ruth and Warrington visit the place. The girl detective fascinates Marmaduke, who invites her to his office. Knowing that Marguerite is locked up in an adjoining room, Ruth accepts the invitation.

At an opportune moment, she thrusts a pistol into the scoundrel's face and orders him to release his prisoner. Marmaduke, however, overpowers Ruth. Darby rushes to her rescue. A shot rings out and Marguerite's kidnapper falls dead. But Ruth no sooner returns the girl to her mother, than she finds herself confronted by another case.

A MELODIOUS MIXUP (Feb. 19).—Although Ham and Bud are bosom friends, the parting of the ways comes when both fall desperately in love with Tottie, the soubrette of a burlesque troupe. Ham, seeing Bud smile at Tottie, heaves his baton in the direction of his former chum. Bud, perceiving Ham flirting with the girl, lets fly at the former with his drum stick.

When Ham goes back to Tottie's dressing room for the purpose of presenting her with an apple, he finds Bud ahead of him with a bouquet of flowers. The two get into a rough-and-tumble battle. Bill Jones enters the room. At Tottie's request, he manhandles Ham and Bud. The two foes combine forces. Turning upon Bill they give him a beating. That evening, Ham visits Tottie once more. Again he finds Bud present. Grabbing him by the nape of the neck, he heaves Bud through the door. Jones is just entering and Bud lands squarely into the pit of the man's stomach.

Jones promptly loses all interest in the proceedings. When he comes to, he tackles Ham and Bud. By the time he gets through, the rivals makes the discovery that Tottie, the idol of their hearts, is none other than Jones' wife. Shaking each other by the hand, Ham and Bud bid a sad adieu to the cruel world and head for the river.

THE ENGINEER'S PERIL (15th Episode of the "Hazards of Helen" Railroad Series—Feb. 20).—Helen, the operator at Hobart, warns her friend Anna, the operator at Montville, that Tim Hudson, a notorious swindler, is headed for Montville. Anna later brings about Hudson's arrest when the man, posing as a minister, attempts to swindle the people of the town.

Anna marries Tom Binfield, a locomotive engineer. Shortly afterwards, Hudson escapes from jail. The man secures a position as fireman on the railroad and is assigned to Tom's engine. Tom invites the convict to board at his home.

Anna fails to recognize her husband's fireman when the man comes to live at the Binfield cottage. Hudson, however, is filled with an insane desire for revenge upon seeing Anna. An attempt to shoot her is unconsciously frustrated by her husband. The convict thereupon resolves to punish Anna through Tom.

Hudson's opportunity comes the following day. Just before their train passes the Binfield cottage, the scoundrel strikes Tom over the head with a wrench. Believing his victim dead, Hudson leaps from the engine. Anna, however, sees Tom's body hanging from the locomotive cab. At frightful risk to her own life, the girl succeeds in saving her husband.

VITAGRAPH.

THE PROFESSOR'S NIGHTMARE (Feb. 15).—Convicted by his friend's glowing account of a play he witnessed the night before, that it must be a real "thriller," Professor Nicholas decides he will take it in. He phones his wife from the office that he has two tickets for that evening and wants her to go with him. When the thrilling climax to the play comes where the villain chokes the poor girl for not signing the papers, he becomes so excited he makes things very uncomfortable for those around him. Next day he meets a few friends and has a few glasses of light refreshment, with the result that his friends have to bring him home in a taxi. His wife calls him a brute and goes sobbing to bed, while the Professor also sobs and falls asleep in a chair by the fireplace. His mind still obsessed with the play he witnessed, the Professor dreams that he is the villain and his wife is the heroine. After unsuccessfully attempting to force her to sign some papers, he chokes and stabs her, then hides the body under the dining room table. He hears the police coming, but seems paralyzed and offers no resistance when they break in and dramatically arrest him. Without delay, he is sentenced to electrocution. The march to the chair begins at once and he is soon strapped in. While the wardens are awaiting the signal to throw the switch, Satan appears, and after giving the Professor the "Ha-Ha," sneaks in and turns on the current. Sparks and flames begin to shoot out from around the Professor's feet and he seems to be burning up. Just then, he wakes up to find his feet in the fireplace and his slippers all ablaze. With a yell, he kicks them off as his wife comes in greatly frightened. He tells her of his nightmare while she gets ice-water and bathes his aching head.

O'GARRY OF THE ROYAL MOUNTED (Broadway Star Feature—Special—Three Parts—Feb. 16).—Clarry O'Garry and Jan Larose are partners, working the same gold claim on the bank of the river. Jan grows increasingly jealous of O'Garry's friendship with his wife, Marie. O'Garry seeing that he is causing trouble between the two, decides to go away, first giving his share of the claim to Cummins, Marie's father. He leaves behind Pitah, an Indian whose life he had once saved, telling him to watch over Marie. O'Garry wanders aimlessly through the wilds until he meets Constable Miller, of the Royal Mounted Police, and the idea of that kind of life appealing to him, he joins Miller's company. After a year of rough service, O'Garry is promoted to a Constable in the Mounted and assigned to Fort Resolute, a Mounted outpost. One day looking over the records, he sees a photo of Jan Larose, wanted under another name by the Quebec police for murder, with a notation saying that he has left a wife and two children behind him. His superior officer orders him to set out after Larose and apprehend him. O'Garry finds his old partner, and a terrific fight takes place on the edge of a high bluff. Larose succeeds in striking Clarry over the head with the butt of his revolver and throwing the unconscious man over the cliff, into the river. Marie, out riding, sees him fall, lets himself down the side of the cliff with a lariat, and while she is in mid-air Larose creeps up and cuts the rope. She falls into the icy water, but swims to O'Garry, who is sinking, and supports him. Larose draws his revolver and is about to shoot the two in the water when Pitah creeps up behind him and stabs him. Marie and the Indian then rescue O'Garry and carry him back to the cabin, where they care for him until his recovery. He sets out for the Fort to resume his duty, but before leaving Marie proclaims his love and promises to return in the spring and make her his wife.

"SOME WHITE HOPE" (Feb. 17).—Gathered around an old "cannon-ball" stove in the country store in the little village of Hoshkosh, Hiram Limburger and some of the local village characters are warmly discussing the subject of prize-fighting. Hiram seems to think he is just about as young as he used to be and offers to prove it by licking any man in the crowd. This breaks up the meeting, and Hiram, filled with the spirits of fight and hard cider, starts for home. In his back yard he puts his hat and coat on the hitching-post and fights a couple of imaginary rounds with it. The noise awakens his wife, who yells for him to quit that foolishness and come upstairs to bed. He does so and dreams a dream. He imagines himself seated in the audience of a theater watching Professor Fakeovitch exhibit his well-known powers of hypnotism. When the Professor asks for volunteers from the audience, Hiram goes up and is made to act like a fish, a dog, and do other foolish stunts. The Professor ends up by telling Hiram, with a wild flourish, he is a "white hope." The words act like magic, and, starting one from the floor, Hiram lands a wallop on the Professor's jaw which puts him out for the count. The incident starts a riot in the theater, and in the free-for-all fight, Hiram makes his getaway. The fighting Rube "puts away" several policemen and the whole town is soon chasing him. Noticing a sign advertising the appearance of Sam Bangford and Torpedo Smith in a 20-round bout, he rushes into the building just as it is announced that Smith will be unable to appear. Hiram jumps into the ring, takes off his coat and announces himself as "Kid Limburger" of Hoshkosh. They put a pair of gloves on him and his actions cause roars of laughter. Finally, to every one's surprise, Hiram manages to land a well-directed haymaker on his opponent's jaw and it is curtains for the colored man. In the midst of hilarious congratulations, one of the seconds empties a bucket of water inside his shirt and—Hiram awakes to find himself in bed with his wife pouring water on him and yelling at him to get up.

"THE QUALITY OF MERCY" (Feb. 18).—Ill and destitute, Harry Van Courtland, the wayward son, appeals to his father for aid, but Jacob Van Courtland is of a stern, unforgiving nature, and the letter is returned unopened. Van Courtland is known as "The King of the Tenements" because of the large number owned by him. His secretary, Bratton Powers, is in love with Courtland's daughter, Eileen, but the 'King" frowns upon the match. Eileen does what she can, personally, to relieve the suffering of the tenement dwellers. On one of her rounds she finds her brother. She appeals to her father for forgiveness and aid, but he flatly refuses both. Then Eileen, without her father's knowledge, sells her necklace. Van Courtland learns that some of his tenements, due to be condemned, may be saved through political influence, and he sends Bratton with a letter to

Simplex

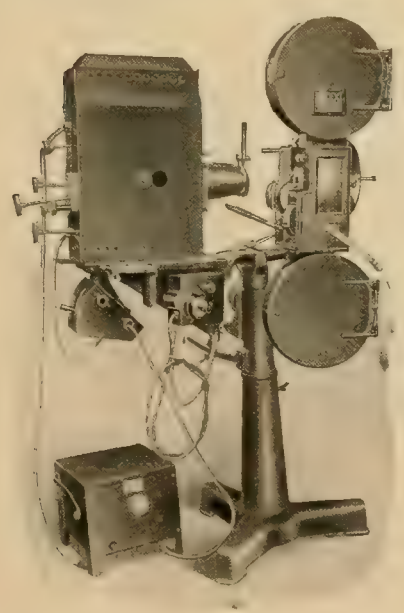
39,420,000 Revolutions

Simplex

A Western exhibitor, who, more than three years ago, bought one of the first Simplex machines manufactured, has written us as follows:

"Guess I had better send in my mechanism to be overhauled. It is running satisfactorily, but I have had it so long that I think it wise to give it a rest and have it looked over."

This exhibitor has been running his Simplex machine ten hours per day for this period of time; or, to be more exact, his mechanism has been running at the rate of 13,140,000 revolutions per year, which equals 39,420,000 revolutions for the three years' service.



This unsolicited testimonial surely is convincing proof our our claim that the upkeep of the Simplex is practically nil.

Think, Mr. Exhibitor, how much you would save in a year's time were you using the Simplex machine.

Is this true of the machine you are now operating?

Send for catalog "A" and we will give you further proof of our claim.

Tell us Man to Man

How are you and your theatre agreeing?

Is your theatre responding the way it should to your handling of it?

Is it producing all that you could possibly get out of it?

Get right down to cases with yourself. You're not going to overlook any chance to better your business, no matter if you are having the best business of your career. You owe it to your business to give it some serious thinking now and then. You also owe it to your business to give Kriterion Program a serious thought.

Mingle a few of these facts with that little conference you are going to have with yourself. There has been a spick, span, smashing program created. One that has been built from a study of the wants of the motion picture going public. One that is moulded on a 1915 model. A program that has all the essentials of the best there is in motion pictures.

It was conceived and made by motion picture people for people who know motion pictures.

You know that when people come to your theatre, they come to see pictures, regular pictures, with a clever story, good photography and loads of action. That will get them, and get them every time.

That's the sort of program the Kriterion has been offering you now for weeks. You owe it to yourself, your family, your theatre and your patrons to investigate it. We want you to examine it, look it over, consider it from every side. It is not our intention to try and sell you a cat in the bag. Buy it the same as you would a suit of clothes or an automobile.

There is a man right in your territory that has thought so much of Kriterion pictures that he has decided to make Kriterion pictures his business. If you don't know where that exchangeman is, drop us a line and we will send him over to see you just as quickly as the wires can carry our instructions.

Yours,

KRITERION,

B. E. CLEMENTS,

Gantling, enclosing a large check as a bribe. His daughter happens to see the letter. Courtland discovers the loss of the necklace, and when Powers, unable to see Gantling, returns, he is arrested and accused of stealing the necklace. The paste jewels which Eileen had ordered made and asked Powers to get for her, and the bribe letter are found in his possession, but keeps silent. Courtland claims the letter, but the policeman informs him all articles found must go to headquarters. Eileen whispers to her father that unless he rebuilds his tenements and consents to her marriage with Powers she will see that the letter goes to headquarters. Van Courtland promises, but angrily orders Eileen and Powers from his house. Eileen, however, gains his forgiveness.

A MADCAP ADVENTURE (Feb. 19). Willful, headstrong and inclined to be sporty, but withal, a very lovable girl, Thomasin Webb (called Tommy for short), keeps her Aunt Sarah, with whom she lives, on the jump. Tommy's greatest friend, Josephine Hall, be- friend. Guy Dunbar becomes deeply interested in Tommy, first from a psychological point of view, then fascinated by her personality. George Hilton, a society rounder, is after Tommy's money and carried off her feet, so to speak, by his fascinating manners and knowledge of the world, she becomes engaged to him. She meets Guy and he treats her somewhat as a spoiled child, which piques but interests her. One night at a restaurant Guy sees Hilton in the company of Pearl Courthorpe, a fast burlesque actress, and apparently on the most intimate terms. He consults Josephine on what to do and she insists on telling Tommy at once. Pearl learns of Hilton's engagement to Tommy and is furious. She informs Tommy that she can see Hilton and herself together almost any evening at a certain cafe. Tommy refuses to believe Josephine's story, but the letter from Pearl prompts her to investigate. Disguised in men's clothes and with a big roll of bills, she visits the restaurant the following evening. Guy is also there. Two crooks see Tommy's roll, she sees Hilton and Pearl making love and Guy watches them all. She walks up to Hilton's table and breaks off their engagement. She then leaves, closely followed by the two crooks; also Guy. She is held up by the thugs, but Guy succeeds in scaring them off. Tommy's gratitude is kin to love and when Guy proposes she accepts him.

TWICE RESCUED (Special—Two Parts—Feb. 20).—Saved from a terrible shipwreck by Stephen Royston, son of a farmer, Nana, orphaned by the catastrophe, is adopted by the family and the two sons, Stephan and Godfrey, fall in love with her. Stephan's artistic tendency for painting, etc., is classed as foolishness by his stern father, while Godfrey, realizing that the girl favors his brother, determines to get rid of him. He poisons his father's mind against him, and Stephen is ordered to stop painting or leave the farm. Godfrey then sets fire to the barn where Stephan's paintings are stored, accusing his brother of being the incendiary. Stephan rescues some of his pictures, and unable to clear himself in the eyes of his parents, goes to the city. There he finds himself unable, for want of money to engage a suitable model, to paint his greatest picture. By good fortune, he secures Elsie, a poor flower-girl, to pose for him. Meanwhile, Godfrey, failing to get Nana to listen to his love, intercepts Stephan's letters. She still remains true, however, and on receieving a small legacy from a distant relative, goes to the city to find Stephan. Elsie becomes seriously ill, but bravely keeps it from Stephan, as she wishes him to complete his painting. At the last sitting, she faints and while his landlady puts the girl to bed, Stephan hastens for a doctor. Nana arrives during his absence and seeing Elsie, thinks she is Stephan's wife. Leaving a note for him saying she now understands his silence, and bidding him a heart-broken goodbye, she returns to her lodgings. There she becomes despondent and wandering down to the river, tries to drown herself. Stephan hears her cry as she leaps from the pierhead, plunges in and rescues the girl from drowning for the second time. He hurriedly explains all, convinces her of the truth, and the lovers are joyfully reunited.

ESSANAY.

THE VICTOR (Feb. 15).—When Mrs. Justwed receives a note from her mother telling her that she expects to arrive next day, her husband seems overjoyed, and says he intends to make her stay all winter. She arrives next day, but it is not long before the well-meaning husband is hoping it will be a short winter. The mother-in-law finds fault with everything, including Mr. Justwed. He talks back to her one day, and now his wife takes offense. He is not allowed to eat at the same table with them and is ordered from his wife's room. That night he goes to the club very much downhearted. Here he meets a friend who suggests a plan to make them relent. Justwed goes home late and turns the water on in the bath tub. Soon the plaster comes tumbling down on his sleeping wife and her mother. They flee from the room drenched to the skin. Next morning they cannot be attentive enough to him.

A POUND FOR A POUND (Feb. 16).—Starvation faces the little post of Red Gold. Jack Thorpe, in a final effort to obtain food for his wife and baby, offers all his gold for one pound of meat. Buck Gibson, who has a secret passion for Hester, Thorpe's wife, goes to her and promises to sell meat to her husband if she will betray him. She refuses, so Buck refuses to sell his meat. In desperation Thorpe tries to steal the meat from Buck and is caught. He is punished by being sent into the wilderness to starve. Hester deprives Buck of his revenge by following her husband. Next morning they are found by a half-breed with a sledgeload of meat. Thorpe induces him to let him sell the meat in Red Gold. He refuses to sell to Buck. Half starved, Buck steals, and his lot is the same as Thorpe's. Thorpe then gives up all his meat to have Buck's life spared.

THE FABLE OF THE COLD GRAY DAWN OF THE MORNING AFTER. (Feb. 17).—Mr. Rounder awoke at 7:30 a. m. He felt rather rocky, and his tongue felt like a rug. He needed an orange and a few kind words, but the faithful servitor brought him ham-and. Just to help digest his breakfast, he took a few Manhattans. He then proceeded to the office, and while the Manhattans lasted he was up on his toes, but at ten-thirty they ceased working and he was slowly dying on the vine. An old friend from St. Louis happened in, and after talking over old times in Saint Louie, they went down to have a few drinks. By 12 o'clock, they were ready to loan money to each other. Two other friends then joined them, and the remainder of the day was spent in jolting pool balls, and of course numerous drinks. For dinner he ate two grapes, and incidentally had a few drinks. Next morning he couldn't imagine what had affected his stomach, but finally decided it must have been the fruit he had for dinner the night before.

SNAKEVILLE'S BEAUTY PARLOR (Feb. 18).—Slippery Slim answers an ad for a bright young man to work as assistant in the Snakeville Beauty Parlors. He is accepted. Handbills are then distributed announcing the formal opening of the parlors. Sophie is the first to arrive for treatment. She asks for a massage. The doctor proceeds with his treatment, first by placing a warm cloth on her face. He then leaves the room for a few minutes, and Slim, thinking he is rather idle for an energetic assistant, picks up the tea kettle and pours hot water on Sophie's cloth covered face. She jumps up and runs screaming from the place to tell her father. Shortly after she returns with almost all the inhabitants of Snakeville, and they attack the beauty parlors in full force. Slim and the doctor soon find themselves cell-mates.

BRONCHO BILLY AND THE VIGILANTE (Feb. 20).—The cattle owners have formed a lynching party and are in pursuit of a rustler who has been ravaging the country. Broncho Billy, the sheriff, goes after him and captures him single handed. He takes the prisoner to a hotel for the night, and while in the bar room the lynching party comes along. They leave their shotguns outside and step in for a drink. Upon seeing Broncho they suspect their man is in the place, so force their way into a back room where the bandit is in hiding. Broncho tries to protect him, so both are bound. While they go out to converse, the hotel keeper loads their guns with blanks. As they are about to string the rustler up, Broncho, who has been unbound, rushes forward and jerks the rope from his neck. The rustler then escapes while the lynchers fire their blank shells at him.

AN AMATEUR PRODIGAL (Special—Two Parts—Feb. 19).—John Andrews, a wealthy young clubman, returns to his apartment one night and finds a man under the bed. He hauls him out, and after a fierce struggle takes a gun away from him. He then throws him out. Returning to the room he finds an opened envelope addressed to Mr. John Andrews, Superior Apartments, Cleveland, O. He does not remember opening any such letter, but this is his name and address, so he reads the note. It is signed "your sister Ruth." It tells how his mother is now totally blind, and can do nothing but sit and remember and pray for his return.

Andrews is puzzled, but is still more vexed when he receives more letters to the same effect, begging him to come home to his dying mother. After some hesitation he decides to carry out an adventure, so goes to the small town in response to the urging letters. He is greeted with open arms by the girl who has been signing her name "sister Ruth." He is ushered to the bedside of an old lady, who throws her arms about him after being told that he is her son. She dies, happy that her boy had returned to her. It seems years ago, a John Andrews, her son, had been sent to prison. Now that she was about to die, she longed to have him with her once more. His last address was Superior Apartments, Cleveland. Most of the letters fell into the hands of a different John Andrews at the same address. While the adventurer is at the Andrews home, the real son arrives. It is then clear to him that the man he found in his apartment stands before him. He later discovers that he was the janitor, and while ransacking his room had dropped this letter. He gives the ex-convict money to get out of town. He later confesses to Ruth that he is not her brother and asks her to marry him. She has fallen in love with him and consents.

EDISON.

IN THE PLUMBER'S GRIP (Feb. 15).—With her kitchen flooded as the result of the bursting of a pipe Gertie's next door neighbor rushes out to get the plumber. Harry, the plumber, is unfortunately Gertie's sweetheart, and instead of answering the call to fix the defective pipe he stops in to see Gertie. His helper, an irresponsible fellow, rather than assume the task and responsibility of fixing the pipe, sits down and takes a nap while the woman goes frantic with anxiety.

Meanwhile, Harry and Gertrie are in close embrace in Gertie's comfortable sitting room. Gertie's father comes in, and when Harry suggests marriage there is a scene. Without ceremony he is ejected and on the way out says that he will not mend the water pipes for Gertie's ruthless father should they burst from the cold. Harry enters the kitchen of the family next door and eventually fixes the pipe. In the meantime, Gertie resolves to get even with father and chops a hole in the pipe. Water spurts out and in a short time the place is flooded. Father is aroused by a drop on his bald head. The whole family begins to rush wildly about and soon the water is up to their knees.

They rush from one room to another, but cannot find the leak. Gertie, at the right moment, goes in and gets Harry. He locates the leak and, as he stands near the young geyser, states that unless he is given Gertie in marriage he will not stop the leak. Father, in a fury, refuses. Then Harry starts to walk, or paddle, out of the room. All are standing knee-deep in water. Father calls him back and consents grudgingly. A crowd of persons, who had been waiting for Harry to seek his assistance in their respective houses, follow Harry into Gertie's house and all stand in the water. In the crowd there is a minister, and after he has been buffeted about in the deep water for some time is pressed into service and marries the two. Forthwith, Harry gets at the leak, after he has been interrupted in his love-making by the irate father. The concluding scene shows all of them standing in the water.

THE NEEDS OF COMMERCE—MANUFACTURING PAPER MONEY (Produced by permission of the United States Treasury Department—Feb. 16).—A panoramic view of the Washington Monument and adjacent buildings prefaces this unique picture. A close view of an artistic engraving of President Wilson lends color to this national subject. The engraving room, wherein only experts are employed, is shown, and immediately following the transfer of the engravings from roller to plate. The plate is then tempered or hardened. An interesting scene is that showing employees counting the paper used. Each and every sheet must be accounted for.

The new Federal Reserve bank note is shown in the printing and later at close range. The note which is now in circulation as a result of the revolutionizing of our currency system by the Glass currency bill, is an attractive bit of paper, well designed. Close views of the printing methods are shown, together with a view of some $10,000 bills, of which there are comparatively few. Many of us might covet the position of one of the employees whom we see handling $66,000,000, but for him it is only a case of "starving in the midst of plenty." Views of women counting and examining money are followed by the views showing the trimming. The cutting, sealing and numbering of the notes is especially interesting. Then the finished bill, so familiar to all of us, is flashed upon the screen.

Preparations for placing the money in the Treasurer's vault are shown. The doors of steel are closed upon the piles of newly-made bills, and they are kept there until needed for replacing old worn-out notes. We are given a glance at the room where the imperfect and worn-out bills are destroyed. To our surprise, $5,000,000 is thrown away before our very eyes, and we are powerless to prevent it. How well guarded is the money taken to the Treasury building can be seen in this excellent picture. A close view of the United States Treasury is shown as a conclusion.

A SPIRITUAL ELOPEMENT (Feb. 17).—Evelyn has just made a futile effort to gain possession of some papers left by her deceased father Hughey, her uncle, is loath to give them to her for some reason unknown to her, and locks the safe quickly. Jack, Evelyn's sweetheart, happens along just as Hughey is a bit peeved because of Evelyn's dissatisfaction, and on general principles he is ordered from the house. Jack resolves to get even.

He waits outside and sends the butler in for Evelyn; not until he has administered him a light beating, however. Hughey goes out and places a well-directed kick somewhere on Jack's anatomy. When Evelyn appears, Jack has gone and she suggests that it must have been a ghost the butler saw. Evelyn conceives an idea whereby they can put one over on Hughey, so she calls Jack on the telephone, asking him to come over with a fiddle and a bass drum.

After telling Hughey and the butler that it is the night when the ghosts make their periodical visit, she repairs to her room and awaits the advent of Jack. Hughey and the butler arm themselves with axes, revolvers and knives and prepare for the ghosts. Jack arrives, and with the help of Evelyn begins to make it uncomfortable for the butler and Hughey. Bricks drop through the ceiling on to the butler's head. Hughey slashes the air with his weapon and then discharges the revolvers. But the "ghosts" continue their ravages.

So successful has been the experiment that Jack decides to take the place of the statue of Justice near the safe, so that he can get possession of the coveted papers. He puts on a mantle and holds the scales just like a real Justice. When Hughey takes the papers from the safe the next day, he is felled by a blow from the "statue." Jack grabs the papers and rushes from the house to the waiting automobile. Hughey is unable to prevent the getaway, and as Jack and Evelyn ride away to the minister's Jack waves the papers at Hughey. The butler has recovered from his fright and enjoys the situation as much as the two principals.

THEIR HAPPY LITTLE HOME (On same reel as foregoing—Feb. 17).—Sidney Worth and his wife have purchased a bungalow, and because of the fact that it is unpainted they get a reduction. Happy as they are, the fact that Sidney's pecuniary condition will not permit him to paint the bungalow causes him not a little uneasiness.

Irma Worth's father visits the bungalow and comments on the cozy appointments and the nice furniture. But he opines that the place should be painted, and without further discussion goes down in his pocket for his checkbook. Irma and he go to the paint store and decide on white as the best color. They order the work to be started on Monday.

In the meantime Sidney is paid a back debt and goes to a paint store and orders the bungalow painted. He picks out brown as the most pleasing color. The work is to start Monday morning. Both Irma and he withhold their plans from each other. Monday morning, the party leaves on an auto trip, and as they leave Irma tells the stupid maid that the painters will be on hand early and Sidney also tells her the same. Very soon, Brown and his crew of brown-suited men arrive with ladders, etc. The maid directs them to the left side of the house, and they start work with the brown paint. White and his men in white overalls and jumpers arrives with the paraphernalia and they are directed to the right side of the house. They start work with the white paint. The maid dips a finger into the brown paint and then into the white and is horrified. Brown soon finds out that there is another crew at work on the place, and vice versa, and the painters mix it up—not the paint. The maid rushes about hysterically and wonders what it is all about. Irma and Sidney return as the fight is at its height, and much explanation is needed. The house on the white side has been bedaubed with brown handprints and the brown side with white. Irma and Sidney embrace in grief and the maid is shown looking at her white and brown fingers, still wondering.

HER HUSBAND'S SON (Special—Two Parts—Feb. 19).—Robert Willard, after making a vow that he would never consider marriage again after his wife died, loves and marries Dorothy Druce, a girl in her teens. Robert, the son, who is sowing his wild oats at college, is surprised to learn that his father has broken the vow, and refuses to recognize Dorothy as his mother. After treating the new Mrs. Willard curtly, he leaves again for school.

In the meanwhile Mrs. Willard, only a girl, continues to associate with young people, although her love for her husband is as fresh as ever. He notices her actions with persons of her own age, and his jealousy is aroused. He does not chide her, however. Bobbie, at college, is taken with the gambling fever and continues to write home for money. Eventually, his father gets out of patience with him, and in his ultimatum states that no more money will be sent until Bob learns to behave himself. Bob's letter to his father is seen by Mrs. Willard and she desires to help him. She writes a note which she encloses with her husband's letter of refusal and Bob is overjoyed at the prospect of getting assistance. He writes to his new mother, telling her that he will be in town for the money at a given time. Dorothy conceals the letter from her husband and his suspicions are aroused. He gives her money upon her request, however, although he asks her what she did with the check he recently gave her.

A ball is given in Dorothy's honor and during the evening she drops the note from Bob (which is unsigned) to the floor and her suspicious husband reads it. He is infuriated, and with murder in his heart follows his wife out of the ballroom with a revolver. In the dark, he shoots at the form he sees standing and embracing his wife. Bobby is shot, Willard returns to the ballroom and is handed a letter which had been written by his wife in haste, to the effect that she had gone out for a few moments to meet Bobby and it was for him that she wanted the money. Bobby is carried in and when confronted by his father, whom, he at once realizes, has done the shooting, he tells the police that he does not know who shot him.

THE VOICE OF CONSCIENCE (Feb. 20).—"Thus conscience does make cowards of us all," has yet to be disputed with sincerity. No matter how calloused the criminal, at some time or other he has felt the vise-like grip of compunction and wished that he had followed in the path of rectitude. Probably after a few minutes or hours, or even days of unhappy recollection, he may fall back into his old ways again, but nevertheless he has experienced the feeling he has heard the dictate of that indescribable something inside and unconsciously he finds himself admitting his guilt. We are all casuists unknowingly at one time or other, and in this story the woman is suddenly brought to a realization of her wrongdoing while she awaits the arrival of her paramour so they can elope.

Dr. Yorke, a famous surgeon, because of his medical obligations, is unable to spend much time in his wife's company. By force of circumstances he is obliged to refrain from attending the many social functions to which they are invited. His wife resents this and when Jack Cravin, Dr. Yorke's cousin, arrives at the Yorke home for a brief visit she soon becomes infatuated with him and they plan to elope. As they are in close embrace, Dr. Yorke appears at the doorway and overhears their plans. He withdraws and goes to the hospital in answer to an emergency call. At the hospital he reflects and pictures their happy wedding and the indications of a happy companionship. His meditations are interrupted by the entrance of an orderly, who tells him that everything is ready in the operating room.

In the meantime, Helen leaves the house with her handbag and is seen waiting patiently at a small station for Cravin. Dr. Yorke happens to pass Cravin on the road in his automobile, and stopping him, orders him to go through with the scheme. The doctor lurks in the background as Cravin meets Helen. She has had a change of heart while waiting there and Dr. Yorke hears her tell Cravin to take her back to her husband. The doctor leaves quickly and is home when Helen arrives in all her humiliation. As if wholly unconscious of what had taken place, he listens to her story and then accepts her back into the fold.

LUBIN.

PATSY BOLIVAR SERIES NO. 8—PATSY AT THE SEASHORE (Feb. 15).—In the last number we found Patsy turned away from the Sunnyside Seminary with no object in sight. After weeks of wandering he finds his way to the seashore, where he secures employment in a fishing company. He is a failure as a fisherman, and after being almost smothered by being plunged into a boat load of slimy, living fish, he is discharged. Wandering aimlessly down the beach he picks up a small bag containing a number of medals, and these he decides to employ in the direction of securing other employment. This comes to him at the bathing pavilion of the summer resort near the fish ponds, where the medals and a letter of recommendation from Mrs. Squills of the Seminary secure him an appointment as instructor.

By a coincidence Father Bolivar has taken a cottage at the same resort, for the benefit of his wife's health. At the same time, the Sykes and Graces arrive at the hotel and encounter Patsy when they go to the beach for a swim. The reunion with his parents is touching and cordial, but Sykesy again suffers under the growing affection of his lady love, Tilly, for the now important Patsy. Sykesy and Tilly become caught in the undertow on the first day of their arrival, and their lives are saved by Patsy. He now becomes a veritable hero, is awarded the Carnegie Hero Medal and $1,000 in cash, and a reception is given to him at the hotel. All the young women insist upon dancing with him and all the men are jealous of him, but he selects Tilly as his constant partner, much to the grief of the faithful Jane.

In a secluded spot on the hotel balcony Patsy summons the courage to propose to Tilly, and seeing that he is now provided with a goodly amount of cash, she accepts him. Their interview is interrupted by Sykesy, the usual fight occurs, and Patsy throws Sykesy over the railing onto the pavement below. Sykesy is taken upstairs, the doctor pronounces his case a serious one, and it is decided to have Patsy arrested. But Jane, overhearing this, warns him. He runs away pursued by the landlord and the porters of the hotel, and is captured.

A DOUBLE ROLE (Feb. 16).—Reginald Quail, actor, is just married and loves his wife, but discovers she is fond of the theater, so decides to have her lead a nice domestic life and properly look after his home, telling her he is a business man. He tells his manager never to tell his wife that he (Quail) is an actor. His manager laughingly promises.

An old chum of Mrs. Quail's invites her to a matinee one afternoon at a local stock house in which her husband, unknown to them, is the leading man. They enjoy the performance very much, and the chum becomes very much smitten with the leading man, whom through the disguise, they do not recognize. When an usher presents the invitation in the form of a card from the ladies, Reginald sees his wife's signature.

He decides to teach her a lesson by accepting the invitation, as the actor, while still at the house, he removes his disguise unseen and plays the betrayed husband. His false desire to kill the man who is hidden in his house leads to many complications that are very amusing, and when he thinks his wife has had her lesson, he discloses his scheme, and makes his wife promise to hold no more pink teas.

THE RAINY DAY (Special—Two Parts—Feb. 17).—A young wife sacrifices everything that her husband may keep up appearance in his business. By the time promotion comes she has fallen into a rut and her husband is unable to get her enthusiasm aroused to a point where she will go out with him to celebrate the event. Her one thought now is to save up for a "rainy day"—a possible repetition of their poverty which he cannot understand. As his salary increases, this matter of saving becomes a mania with her and the one quarrelsome shadow in their lives.

He meets the "other woman" and finds the contrast a delightful one. Her home is beautiful and luxurious and she, herself, the epitome of attractiveness. He makes a last effort to arouse his wife to the fact that she should spend money on herself and their home, but she still fears the "rainy day." The inevitable happens and his wife finds it out. She goes to the "other woman," after unsuccessfully pleading with her husband to mend his ways, and demands that she give him up. This the other woman refuses to do and she leaves heartbroken.

The truth ultimately dawns upon her and she vows to bring her husband to her feet and then leaves him. Lavishly furnishing a new house she begins to spend the bank roll in making herself wonderfully attractive and giving dinners and affairs to which her husband isn't invited. It has the desired effect and finding the society of his wife and his home more of an attraction than that of the other woman he throws her over and seeks forgiveness and reconciliation. His wife listens patiently and then tells him she is through with him. He goes to his room broken and despondent. She hurriedly packs and is about to leave when a storm comes up. She realizes how much it all means to her. Going to his room she is admitted and he, thinking she has come to say good-bye, stretches out his hand. She turns to him, then impulsively raises his hand to her lips, but before she can kiss it finds herself in his arms. Their rainy day has arrived, for outside the rain comes down in torrents.

HER MARTYRDOM (Special—Three Parts—Feb. 18).—Jim Reynolds, bookkeeper for Waverly Hamilton, contracts tuberculosis, and is warned by his doctor that only a trip west will save his life. Jim is engaged to Dolly Daniels, a stenographer in the same office, to whom Hamilton, the employer, has paid considerable attention. Jim has no money to pay the expenses of his trip, and Dolly determines to ask Hamilton to advance the necessary sum, though she fears that he may demand a sacrifice from her in return. Her desire to save Jim, however, is strong enough for her to risk anything. Hamilton gives Dolly $200. He makes love to her, and she, willing to play the game to save Jim, submits. She is astounded when Hamilton asks her to marry him. To put herself in a position to give Jim more money, she agrees.

Her husband is considerate to her in the extreme. He knows that she does not love him, and is willing to wait until she does. He does not suspect her love for Jim. But Hamilton's kindness makes a deep impression upon Dolly, and she finds at length that he has awakened in her heart a love beside which her infatuation for Jim was as nothing. She cannot let Jim know of her marriage. He must be kept in ignorance of anything which might hinder his recovery. She keeps the old apartment in which he lived, so as to receive his letters, and she writes him such letters as he would expect to receive from her.

Managers

In time, the thought of Jim becomes only a shadow. Then, one day, a letter comes, saying that he is coming home—that he will arrive almost as soon as the letter. Even as she is reading it in the little apartment, he comes in. When she resists his caresses, he, noting her expensive clothes, accuses her of intimacy with Hamilton. Then she tells him that she is Hamilton's wife. Jim, thinking only of himself, accuses her of having tricked him, declares that he will not be left out of her good fortune. He has twenty-five of her letters, written since her marriage. He offers to sell these to her at one thousand dollars each; otherwise he will send them to Hamilton.

Dolly is distracted. She considers selling her jewels, but knows that Hamilton would miss them. But the mention of jewelry gives Jim an idea. If she will give him a key to the house, he will come and get them himself and will leave the letters. Dolly is forced to submit. That night, Jim comes to the mansion. Dolly is wide-eyed waiting. Hamilton is asleep. She hears Jim open the safe, and knows that he will soon be gone. Then there is a crash. In leaving, Jim has knocked over a vase. Hamilton wakes and dashes into the hall. At the head of the stairs he meets Jim. The two men lock in a struggle. Jim is armed, and in self defense, Hamilton hurls him down the stairs. Hamilton has secured the revolver and as Jim, rising, throws a heavy vase at Hamilton, he fires. In the safe, Dolly finds her letters. Hamilton has not recognized Jim, and takes Dolly in his arms, telling her that the man was only a "thief in the night."

THE LITTLE DETECTIVE (Feb. 9).—Kitty, a boarding school pupil, is fond of detective stories and is teased by her schoolmates on this account to a point of desperation. When Jim Blake introduces his accomplice, Nell, into the school as his ward, as part of a plot to rob the school, Kitty overhears them. This is her opportunity and she resolves to watch Nell without confiding her suspicions to anyone. The expensive trinkets worn by the pupils and a large sum of money for cashing their checks is sufficient booty for Nell, who plans her getaway.

At a dance the night before, Kitty confides her suspicions to Harry Ellis, a boy from home in love with Kitty. They overhear Nell when she phones final instructions to Jim to meet her at the depot next day, and plan to thwart the conspirators. Next morning Nell raids the dormitories, but is observed by Kitty, who conceals herself in a closet in Nell's room. Kitty is able to recover the stolen jewelry ,but is herself discovered by Nell, who locks Kitty in the closet and, setting fire to a curtain in the room leaves Kitty to her fate.

Nell hastens to the office to get the larger prize, a satchel full of money. By a ruse she induces Mme. Sterret, the principal to open the safe. An opportune alarm of "Fire!" takes Madame away, leaving the safe and its contents at Nell's mercy. She grabs the satchel and makes good her escape. Kitty is released in time to phone Harry, who hastens to the depot. He has two detectives posted and with their aid is able to head off the thieves at the moment of their escape by train. The crooks are led away much crestfallen, and Harry, triumphant, starts for the school with the satchel of money. At the school, Kitty is in disgrace for not reporting her knowledge of the plot, but the arrival of Harry restoring the lost money turns the current of Madame's wrath and when the young people joyfully embrace, she smiles on their happiness and tactfully exits.

IT ALL DEPENDS (Feb. 20).—Clara Dean, a wealthy young woman of musical tastes, has been carrying on a secret correspondence with iSgnor Marchese, principal tenor of the existing opera season. They have never met, because of her diffidence in meeting him under the circumstances, and he regards the romantic correspondence as only one more sentimental episode. Clara has a suitor in the person of Harold Flint, a society butterfly of no particular consequence, but his attentions are enciuraged by the mother on account of his social position. In order that he may escape from his army of admirers, and secure sufficient practice in his work, Sig. Marchese, under the name of Conti, hires an apartment immediately above that of the Deans, and with his accompanist begins his practicing. Mrs. Dean is subject to headaches and nervous attacks, and it is very seldom that she can even permit her daughter to pass her hours at her piano. Imagine her consternation when she hears nearly all day, sounds of voice and piano from the room above which drive her frantic. She appeals to the janitor, who carries the complaint only to be ejected from the apartment.

One morning when Harold is very earnest in his efforts to induce Clara to "name the day," the tenor's practice is particularly annoying and he offers to make a complaint in person. His errand is futile, however, and Marchesi sends his accompanist, Stetti, with a message to the people below that he has a right to do what he pleases in his own home. Then Clara decides to make an appeal to the tenor herself. As he opens the door to her, she immediately recognizes him as being the hero of her secret correspondence and is so aghast that she suddenly returns to her own apartment, followed by Marchese, who has fallen in love with her at first sight. When Marchese is admitted to the Dean apartment, he finds photographs of himself all over the walls, and a series of questions develops the fact that they are the two who have been carrying on the romantic correspondence. From this on, Marchesi's practice is continued in the Dean apartment, with Clara as accompanist, much to the horror of Mrs. Dean and deeply exciting the jealousy of Harold. Then follows a series of complaints from the various tenants and finally the owner of the building is appealed to. When he arrives, however, he recognizes the great tenor, and declares that he would not insult so important a person by interfering with his work. Harold then appeals to the Health Department, and when the officers arrive and Clara discovers Harold's perfidy, she at once dismisses him, and she and Marchese decide to make a match of it. Then the tenants are invited to the room to listen to the practice and are much entranced. Mrs. Dean's headache disappears under the satisfaction of her daughter's brilliant match, and there are no more complaints.

BIOGRAPH.

THE STRAY SHOT (Feb. 8).—Shortly after coming to town with his old partner, the young prospector is taunted into playing for high stakes by a gambler. Discovering that he is being cheated, he draws his pistol. His arm is struck up, and by a freak of chance, the bullet, passing through the ceiling, wounds his partner in the room above. Thinking himself a murderer, the prospector flees to the cabin where his young wife awaits him. The gambler, driven out of town, comes to the cabin, recognizes his victim and, on threat of exposing him, is given shelter. Left alone with the wife, he seizes her when she repulses him. She contrives to signal her husband, who leaps on the gambler and is throttling him when his partner, returning convalescent, interferes. The gambler flees, and happiness reigns in the cabin.

PERE GORIOT (Special—Two Parts—Feb. 9).—Madame Goriot, wife of the wealthy manufacturer, is fatally injured when her carriage is overturned by runaway horses. Her friend, Madame Blanc, gains ascendancy over Goriot and his daughters, Anastasie and Delphine. Through her the girls meet two titled fortune hunters. Goriot sells his business and his home to make the marriage settlement. Refused a lodging in their new home, he enters a pension, where he is known as "Father Goriot." The only brightness in his life is the kindness of Eugene and Victorine, two young lovers who live in the house. Anastasie and Delphine appeal to their father for money, and he sells his little annuity. Dying, he sends Eugene for his daughters. They are going to a ball and have no time to see their father. Eugene bursts into the ballroom and denounces Anastasie and Delphine. They hasten to Goriot's bedside, but he turns away from them and dies.

GETTING RID OF NEPHEW (Feb. 11).—The doctor thought he had got rid of him by apprenticing the boob to a photographer. After kissing a bride he fought with her husband and wrecked the dark room. Discharged, he went back to uncle's and fooled with some chemicals. Auntie swept him up in a dustpan.

THE BIG NIGHT (Feb. 11).—Hubby dodged wifey and went to see the Ginger Girls burlesque. There was a lot of excitement. In the midst of the Dance of the Seven Veils wifey caught up with him and gave the audience another good laugh when she led the wretch out by his ear.

THEIR DIVORCE FUND (Feb. 12).—Because his bride's first efforts at cooking are not a success, Jack, with the most innocent intentions, engages a cook; but Irma is furious at what she deems a slight, and goes home to mother. "Get me a divorce," she writes Jack. "All right," he replies, "but divorces cost money." On condition that he discharge the cook, she agrees to return and help him save the money. Irma begins to realize how adorable Jack is, and dreads the thought of losing him. So, when the divorce fund is sufficient, she plans to secrete the money and thus put off the evil day. Jack has the same idea. She has just taken the money from its hiding place when Jack comes on the scene and catches her red-handed. The absurdity of the situation makes them laugh, and they fall into each other's arms completely reconciled.

THE WOMAN WHO PAID (Feb. 13).—For her sake the man leaves his wife, who, on learning the truth, kills herself. "I am done with men like you!" cries the woman of the world, and goes out of his life forever. In a little village she meets a minister, a widower with a little daughter. He asks her to marry him, but before replying she shows him a newspaper account of the tragedy. "I am that woman," she says, and he turns away from her. They do not meet again until, his daughter being seriously ill, the minister visits the woman and asks her to come, as the child keeps calling for her. By the bedside he learns how noble she is, and when the danger is past he again asks her to marry him—but in vain. "I have no right to the happiness I stole from another," she says resolutely.

MINA.

PASTE AND PAPER (Feb. 25).—It is Nettie's birthday and she entertains a number of her many friends. Fatty Zamm, one of her admirers, asserts himself and monopolizes Nettie's attention. Happy Harry, upon whom the girls looks with favor, is not a member of the party, and at a safe distance from the house, he bravely ponders over the strange doings of fate, inwardly cursing the groundless opposition of Nettie's pater.

Nettie spies Harry and, touching the keys of love's wireless, the two are soon together, out on the porch, whispering sweet nothings. Remembering her assembled guests, Nettie tells Harry to wait, for she will promptly rejoin him. Alas, poor Harry! Surrounded by merry-makers, Nettie forgets the waiting lover, who waits and sighs in vain. Fatty, who persists in the "I-am-it" method, finds a worthy rival in Percy, who delivers an ultimatum. A ladylike war breaks out and ice cream and soft drinks are freely thrown about to the detriment of the wall paper. Papa intervenes, uppercuts the belligerents and then rushes out to the nearest paperhanger. Here he has considerable difficulty in being understood, but after ripping up the place, he selects the paper and makes arrangements for the immediate papering of his reception room.

Harry, who is still at his post waiting for the fair one, persuades the paperhanger to take his place, and, armed with paste, paper and ladder, he enters the home in which he is persona non grata. Harry uses paste and paper liberally but not judiciously. The guests in close formation charge upon him, but Harry uses his paste brush with accuracy and dexterity. Pandemonium reigns. Percy, after a taste of paste, beats an inglorious retreat, but Fatty continues to lead his coherts against invincible Harry. Papa joins the fray and is flabbergasted to find that the leading combatants, Zamm and Harry, wind up the war with an affectionate embrace in which Nettie participates.

THE VAN THORNTON DIAMONDS (Special—Two Parts—Feb. 15).—Alan Thurston, a clever thief, poses as a retired broker, and his successful depredations have supplied him with funds so that he carries out the role of a man of ample means. Katherine Selwyn, an orphan, is an art devotee. She earns a precarious living by painting, her favorite subjects being landscapes. One day while working at her easel at the seashore, Thurston spies her and introduces himself as an admirer of her pictures. Katherine is entirely ignorant of Thurston's profession. His attentions are pleasing and agreeable, and being without anyone to guide or assist her, she falls an easy victim to his wiles and agrees to marry him. As his wife Thurston can train her to become a clever confederate, while their marital relations, he believes, will prevent her from being called as a witness against him in case of detection.

After they are married Thurston tells his bride what he expects of her; that he is a society thief; that he requires her aid as an accomplice and that she must help him. In horror, she realizes for the first time that he has not married her for love. Heartbroken and horror stricken, she flees from the roof of her newly made husband, and returns to her precarious existence of painting landscapes for the market.

Thurston continues his thieving expeditions with such cleverness as to avoid detection. He receives an invitation to attend a house party at the villa of Mrs. Van Thornton, an invitation which he accepts with avidity, because he realizes that such invitations supply him with opportunities for abstracting valuable jewelry. On the street, one day, he accidentally espies Katherine returning to her humble apartment, filled with dejection and anxiety because she has been unable to dispose of her art. Carefully he follows her to the tenement house where she has a poorly furnished room. He hears a voice raised in anger and discovers that the landlady is threatening Katherine with eviction if she does not pay her arrears in rent immediately.

Thurston intrudes, with apologies and being well supplied with funds, pays Katherine's rent. Then, with clever argument, he tells Katherine why she should return to him and help him in his nefarious profession. Driven to desperation, she agrees to come back to him. Thurston attends the house party. He directs Katherine to come in the guise of a newspaper reporter to interview Mrs. Van Thornton in reference to the approaching festivities. He directs that Katherine shall pretend to sprain her ankle in order to permit her to remain in the house and locate the depository for Mrs. Van Thornton's diamonds.

The trick succeeds. Katherine locates the jewel casket, but in a fit of remorse, she refuses to disclose the whereabouts of the jewels to Thurston. She places them in another hiding place so that he cannot find them.

Mrs. Van Thornton's brother has become suspicious of Thurston, and succeeds in rescuing Katherine from the thief's anger when she refuses to tell him where the jewels are concealed. The brother intercedes, upon which Thurston draws a revolver and attempts to shoot the intruder. A struggle follows and the revolver is accidentally discharged by Thurston, so that the bullet enters a vital spot in his own body, with fatal results.

The body of the dead thief is hastily carried to his room and the inference is drawn by all that he has committed suicide. Katherine is forgiven and the interest shown by Mrs. Van Thornton's brother in the beautiful artist, indicates that they are candidates for future happiness.

BILL HAYWOOD, PRODUCER (Feb. 16).—Bill Haywood is ambitions to become a motion picture producer. He writes a scenario, which, considering the results, must have been awful, and sends same to a motion picture concern for approval. The scenario is hurled back to him with unmitigated scorn, as there is nothing to commend it. Bill is stubborn as well as ambitious. He engages a company of stranded actors, buys a second hand camera, and proceeds to produce his own picture.

The scenario is highly melodramatic, and is entitled to be called "yellowdrama." Bill falls in love with the leading lady and steps in all the pitfalls which surround him. He dresses his cowboy friends in evening clothes to do society "stunts" and when the film is finished it is a "bird." The camera man films some of Bill's love scenes with the pretty leading lady, thinking them to be a part of the picture. He also neglects to film certain scenes that he did not think belonged in the picture.

THE BLACK DIAMOND (Feb. 17).—Harry Hope, a bold, reckless young man, falls in love with Norma Towner, a beautiful and trusting girl, whom he deceives under promise of marriage. Hope disappears from the scene, but the wretched girl is saved from disgrace by marrying Raymond Benson. Twenty years later, finds Harry Hope as the chief of a clever band of counterfeiters. Norma has a boy, Howard, who has no knowledge who his real father (Hope) is. Young Howard becomes a United States Secret Service Operator, and takes up the trail of the counterfeiters.

Howard secretes himself in the den of the counterfeiters, but is discovered by them and when they learn that he is a Secret Service man, it is decided that he must die. Lots are drawn among the criminals and Harry Hope is selected as the executioner. By chance Hope discovers that Howard is his son. He releases him, surrenders his accomplices, blows up the counterfeiting plant with dynamite and perishes in the ruins.

THE LADY KILLER (Feb. 19).—DePeyster is a wealthy scoundrel, and finds his chief pleasure in illicit love affairs. He has broken up a number of homes, among that of Russell, a fellow club member. Leslie and some friends discuss the devastating career of DePeyster, and Leslie wages $5,000 that he will drive DePeyster out of the city within a month.

At one of the local theaters, John Strong, a woman impersonator, is appearing in his act, and Leslie, who is a close personal friend of the actor, holds a conference with him. He arranges that Strong shall appear as his bride, and DePeyster is invited into the Leslie home to meet the pretended bride.

Strong has been thoroughly posted and plays his part well. He inveigles DePeyster into incriminating situations, so that they are discovered by Leslie, his friends and a crowd of newspaper men. The exposure drives the home-breaker away.

LOVE AND THE LEOPARD (Feb. 20).—This picture tells the story of a young African hunter who becomes enamored of a pretty English girl, and nearly loses his sweetheart, as well as his life, in consequence. Paul flirts with Rose, an English visitor, and she mischievously leads him on. His sweetheart, Lena, is almost heartbroken. There are a number of leopards in the neighborhood and Paul plans to make some money by trapping them at $50 apiece. Lena wants a new dress and persuades her father to set a trap so that she can also earn $50. While setting his leopard trap, Paul is attacked by a lion and falls with both hands caught in the iron jaws of the trap. Lena discovers Paul in his predicament, releases him and all is forgiven.

THE COUNTERFEIT (Feb. 19).—For the past seven months there has been a gang circulating a ten dollar bill that is fooling the best of them. In a fashionable Broadway hotel a well-dressed fellow enters and calls for his bill. The clerk presents his bill and accepts the five new bills offered in payment. A moment passes when the manager of the house comes to him asking for some regular money.

"The Duke" has a yellow streak and when he reports at the den, and declares himself out of the game, "Jimmy" kicks the "Duke" into the alley. The captain is peeved. "I think I can give you information concerning the counterfeiting gang in a few days."

The captain could have been bought for a nickel when he saw the parade enter the station; but he felt like the Commissionair, when the Kid took his hat off and asked if he had got her notes. But the expression on the captain wasn't a marker for that which wreathed the faces of Jimmy and the professor.

POWERS.

A MARTYR OF THE PRESENT (Feb. 20).—William and Clay Strong, two brothers, are in the banking business. The bank examiner discovers a shortage. William is at a loss to account for it. He learns that his brother is the thief. Clay has a wife and child. William plans to take the blame for the loss upon his own shoulders and runs away.

William wanders far from "the haunts of man." He takes up his residence with an old fisherman and his daughter, Maria. Maria and William are married, being later blessed with a boy.

On his death bed, Clay Strong confesses. Clay's wife is brokenhearted. She and the doctor seek out William at the fishing village to plead with him to come back. William is ashamed of his plain wife. He finally consents to take his son back home for an education. Maria is brokenhearted. Realizing the storm which has broken upon her married life, she rows out to sea in an open boat. Later William sees an empty rowboat drifting.

JOKER.

FOOLING FATHER (Feb. 15).—Brown is a stingy man. He enjoys a life of ease himself and refuses his wife everything. She rebels and tears her year old dress to shreds. Brown rages in the garden. He discovers his daughter, Mandy, spooning with Tom. Brown strikes Tom with his cane. Tom drops as though killed. Brown becomes alarmed. A cop rushes up. He examines Tom. Determining to scare Brown, Tom confides in the cop. The cop is wise. Brown is scared. Fearing the consequences, he dashes into the house, confiding to wife his dreadful deed. She(alarmed, hides him and goes out to investigate. She discovers the deception joyously, for she favors Tom.

Then the four frame up a scheme to teach Brown a lesson. They rent the outfit of an Egyptian Seeress, mamma disguising herself as the Seeress, while Tom dons the shroud of a departed spirit. When all is ready the cop is dispatched for Brown. The cop delivers the supposed Seeress' order to Brown. He is further advised to bring his wallet, well filled. He goes in trembling and faces the supposed spirit. Escape is impossible. He pays the price demanded. Then when he finally discovers it all a hoax, his joy at finding Tom really alive more than balances the amount inveigled from him, and now realizing his former selfishness, he hastens to make still further reparations.

LOVE AND LAW (Feb. 20).—Tom is a city chap. Mandy is a country lassie. They love each other. But Judge Hardheart, the country justice, also loves Mandy. Tom and the Judge are bitter rivals. And the Judge has the best of it, for his suit is entirely favored by mamma. The Judge and Tom have a quarrel which results in the Judge causing Tom's arrest. Mandy encounters Slippery Sue who is making a get-away from a policeman. She begs Mandy to save her. Mandy gladly dons Sue's veil and cape. But the pursuing policeman does not pass Mandy up and her protest avail her nothing and she is rushed to the courthouse.

The Judge and mamma hit on a scheme to get rid of Tom. He sentences Tom, giving him his choice: "either marry the first woman brought into this court, or put in six months!" Mandy listens to Tom's declaration to gladly "bust rock" rather than give her up. She then reveals her identity, unnoticed by the others, to Tom. His decision is quickly changed, to the relief of mamma and the Judge. The latter at once performs the marriage ceremony. Then comes the discovery that this woman prisoner is Mandy herself.

ALMOST A SCANDAL (Feb. 17).—There have been Cinderellas, but when Peggy went wading on the sly, she had no idea she was going to be one herself. But she was, and in a way which caused surprise to her father, the Constable, and also to Oscar, the Prince Charming, who rescued her slipper. Oscar got into a fight with the Constable. Oscar located his Cinderella and was asked to meet her father. Father turned out to be the Constable. The latter's damp dignity did not go towards softening the introduction. This was just the beginning of Oscar's troubles, as father had had the Head Constable in mind for his daughter, and now considered it the opportune moment for forcing this issue. None of them had reckoned on the wounded feeling of Oscar. His misery called forth the cunning within him which resulted in the Head Constable getting locked in the closet with the hired girl and various other unpleasant things.

THEIR LAST HAUL (Feb. 21).—Both crooks, on the pleading of the girl, determine to turn square but with the provision of turning just one more trick. The first could not foresee that the second had placed a time bomb in the safe when he went to rob it. Likewise, the second could not foresee the other was going to pay a visit to the booty after he had planted the explosive. But worse, neither could foresee that a gang of burglars were contemplating carrying off the safe and that there were police loitering nearby. All this leads to events whereby the safe is suspended from a twenty-story skyscraper with a man locked inside and a time bomb threatening to go off in five minutes. The burglars on the roof did not realize they were defying the law of gravity when they attempted to pull the safe over the eaves. This was impressed on them, however, when the safe exploded. The man inside the vault also learned a lesson on the laws of gravity, and the same thing was impressed on the other crook and the girl when they least expected it.

THE FOX TROT CRAZE (Feb. 18).—Two hallroom boys decide to attend a dance in their hotel. They possess but a single suit each and get busy "fixing" up. Harold sends his suit to be pressed, but Percy presses his own, and while so doing burns a hole in the seat of his trousers. He sees a bellboy returning with Harold's suit and at once "cops" it. Harold, in the meantime waiting for his suit, grows impatient and sneaking into the hallway learns of Percy's theft. He grabs the first cover at hand and sneaks down near the ballroom, trying to regain his suit. Percy is having troubles of his own in the ballroom, however, for a hurriedly discarded cigarette causes a hole to burn in the suit he is wearing and his efforts to put it out cause him to seek seclusion in a corner, where he is found by Harold. The rightful owner of the suit demands it, for he is clad in his underwear and a portier, but Percy objects to return it. A fight for possession of the suit follows and in it both young men lose their coverings, and are carried into the ballroom where the fright and fight grows till both boys forswear dancing and ballrooms forever.

THREE BAD MEN AND A GIRL (Two Parts—Feb. 20).—The girl is traveling by stage coach to a Western town. The coach is held up and robbed by three desperadoes who make away with the cash of the passengers. When the stage arrives in town, the news spreads concerning the hold up. A reward sign is posted for the three bad men, dead or alive.

Three pals, Joe, Jim and Shorty, arrive in town and go up to the saloon, where they are very much surprised to see the consternation which seizes all present. The occupants of the saloon rush out leaving the three friends alone. They notice the reward sign posted for the three bad men and conclude that as the description given in the sign reads, "Two tall and one short" that the townspeople have evidently mistaken them for the three bad men Exciting moments follow. The sheriff is told of the arrival of the three supposed desperadoes and after many exciting experiences the three are coralled and captured.

The girl, who has been the only one who has had nerve enough to approach the three men, is convinced of their innocence and is very much pleased with Joe. She asks the sheriff for mercy, and the three, safely captured, are disarmed and told to leave town.

They run across the real three bad men and capture them. The girl has been captured and taken to a Mexican setlement and she, too, is rescued in turn upon which the three pals are heralded as the heroes of the town and receive the advertised reward.

Joe, who has found the way to the heart of the girl, we are left to understand will shortly become her husband.

THE NEW DRESS (Feb. 21).—There stood two houses. In one lived an old miser. A family came to live in the empty house next door, a man, a woman and three children. The children tried to make friends with the old man, but failed. One day the woman told her husband it would be their wedding anniversary on Sunday. Then a thought came to him; he would buy her a new dress. That night the man saw a crack in the wall. Looking through he saw the old miser lock his money in the cupboard. The miser was asleep as Dan came into the room and took from the hoard of gold. The anniversary was Sunday and the woman came down to light the fire. On the chair was the dress.

The miser, counting his gold, found that some was missing. He hastened to the sheriff. Back at the house they searched for signs of the thief. Through the window the miser saw the family returning from church and the woman wearing the new dress. A few moments later he was in the house next door with the sheriff. The woman looking at the miser remembered a day long past when her brother set forth from his home to make a name. And as she looked at him the miser remembered a pretty little sister. The family sat down to the anniversary dinner.

THE SON OF HIS FATHER (Feb. 15).—The story opens with John Wilson getting a letter saying that he has won a scholarship and that he will be admitted to college. John's father, the blacksmith, comes home and is told the good news.

We are now introduced to the Van Burens, whose son is going to college. They arrive in college, and Van soon becomes the leader of a certain set. When John arrives they take him for the new porter. Van Buren tells the others that John's father shoes his father's horses, with the result that John is left severely alone.

Van Buren one day insults him and John demands an apology. Van Buren refuses and there is a fight in which a fellow called Sadler is knocked down. That night Sadler steals into John's room and plants his watch, and then takes one of his handkerchiefs. The following morning the accusation is made. He is given twenty-four hours to explain or be expelled. John is heartbroken.

Sadler tells Van Buren, and, to his astonishment, Van tells him that he must go and tell the truth. Sadler refuses. John appears on the scene, and, as he thinks that Van is fighting a boy smaller than himself, he interferes. He is told to mind his own business, loses his temper, and a fight takes place, in which John knocks Van down. The president asks for an explanation. When John learns that Van has been taking his part he apologizes. They become fast friends, and when John's dad calls to visit him, Van Buren makes a great fuss of the old man.

When Van Buren's father calls he is shocked, but once again Van is the means of showing that class don't count if the heart is in the right place and John makes "his dad happy."

AN ORIENTAL ROMANCE (Two Parts—Feb. 19).—Heapley conducts a money lending business for Lian Kung, a wealthy Chinese merchant. Hop Kung, the Chinese merchant's son, returns from college with his chum, Dick Fenton, whom he introduces to his father. The young Chinaman's father warns him not to forget his race while mingling with the whites. Dick invites Hop Kung to visit his father and sister. Clara, Dick's sister is much attracted to the handsome young Oriental.

Dick spends much time gambling. In order to recoup his losses Dick plunges more heavily. He falls into the hands of Heapley, the loan shark. In the meantime Clara, her father and Dick returns the call made by Hop Kung to their home. Hop Kung gives Clara a necklace and an understanding grows between them.

While paying a visit to Dick, Hop Kung learns that his friend has fallen heavily in debt to Heapley, the money lender. Dick attempts to shoot himself but Hop Kung takes the revolver from him and assures Dick that he will help him out. Hop Kung begs his father to save Dick for the sake of his family. The old merchant thinks none too well of the plan, but to please his son calls in Heapley and collects from the money lender the notes which Dick has given him to cover his gambling losses. Dick then comes down to the merchant's shop, where Hop Kung tears up the notes and frees Dick from all financial obligation.

A month passes. In the meantime the growing attachment between Clara and Hop Kung has caused comment among Clara's friends. Her father hears of these slighting remarks and is angered. He upbraids his daughter for having fallen in love with a Chinaman. Dick, also, is infuriated at the thought of having his sister marry Hop Kung.

Again Hop Kung visits the Fenton home. Dick upbraids him and accuses him with having forced his sister Clara to love him. Hop Kung agrees to cure Clara of her love for him, although he breaks his own heart in doing so. That night at a formal gathering Hop Kung makes love to all the girls in turn. Clara looks reproachfully at him, and for a time Hop Kung fights against his desire to take her in his arms.

Then he again continues with his love making. Clara faints in her father's arms, and Hop Kung goes home to his father, who is secretly pleased to hear that his son has given up the white girl.

BIG U.

AN EXAMPLE (Two Parts—Feb. 18).—Joseph Bohn, ex-sheriff of Gray Gulch, Arizona, makes his home with his daughter and her husband a miner. Noticing the growing indifference on the part of the young wife towards her husband and being a man of experience, the ex-sheriff defines the cause. The husband, who finds his affectionate advances toward his wife repulsed, leaves for his work at the mine. The sheriff, overhearing his daughter making an appointment with David Morton, who possesses better looks and manners than her plain working husband, follows her to the meeting place, and confronts the man, gun in hand. He orders him to leave. Taking his daughter back to the little cabin, he sits down with her beside the open fire and remonstrates with her, knowing that she is just an innocent-hearted Western girl with really no idea of evil, to bring her to her senses and relates to her the story of his early life and experiences.

When sheriff of Gray Gulch, he gets home to his wife one day to find that she has offered hospitality to a man who is badly battered up and seems to be in unfortunate circumstances. Together they nurse the man to convalescence. The sheriff receives a letter from the Kansas City authorities warning him concerning an artist who has become a forger of bank notes and further stating a picture and description will follow later. He does not connect this criminal with the man he is keeping at his house, although he knows the latter is an artist. The friendship between the sheriff's wife and the artist grows. He paints her picture often and the husband little realizes the affection their constant association leads to.

Later he receives the description and photograph of the man wanted and it is then he realizes the man he has been keeping at his house and who they had nursed back to health, is none other than the criminal in question. He charged the man with the crime and shows him the photograph and description and takes him into custody. That night the wife leaves a note to her husband stating that she loves the imprisoned man. Taking the keys to the jail from his pocket and packing up a few belongings, she goes to the jail and frees the man, Edward Boyle. Next morning the sheriff discovers the state of affairs and sets out in pursuit, determined to capture the man at all costs.

The erring wife has taken with her her small child. The water supply is nearly exhausted and she begs some from the man. He refuses it to her. A struggle ensues between them for possession of the small remaining water supply, in which the woman is able to knock him down in his weakened condition. In falling he strikes his head against the wheel of the wagon in which they are traveling and is rendered unconscious. The sheriff's wife stumbles over the satchel in which she has brought her belongings and discovers therein the handcuffs taken from the man by her in the jail, and which she had inadvertently put into the handbag. Realizing that, should the man recover consciousness, he will cause her further trouble, she handcuffs him to the wagon wheel. She then goes to give water to her baby, but discovers that the canteen is entirely empty. Facing death for herself and baby, she becomes demented and wanders out across the desert.

The sheriff, meanwhile, closely following the trail, comes upon the deserted wagon and finds his man handcuffed to the wheel, dead. He takes up the trail of his wife, and, following it some distance, comes upon her body. She, likewise, has succumbed to to the desert thirst, but the baby is alive. He takes the child in his arms and, as the story closes, the old sheriff turns to his daughter and kindly tells her that she was that child.

Suddenly they hear a noise outside. It is the husband, who has returned from his work and is cleaning quietly the mire from his shoes. The wife goes to him, throws her arms about his neck and weeps. The husband is at a loss to know the reason for this but the old men tells him it is all right.

THE ADVENTURE OF THE SEA-GOING HACK (Feb. 18).—Lawrence Dallas, man about town, is asleep in his bed. The butler awakens Dallas and gives him a telegram. It is from his wife, who has been out of town, and informing him that she will arrive soon. She arrives as Dallas is dressing and a bawling out is handed to Dallas. He pleads for one chance.

Dallas receives an invitation to supper with his friend Daisy. Mrs. Dallas also receives an invitation to go to the Plymouth reception. Both determine to go. The butler, who is in league with a gang of crooks, plots with them to rob the house. Some hours later finds Dallas intoxicated in company with several other gay boys; the butler, robbing the house with the crooks. Dallas and the others happen upon a hack in front of a saloon. The friends bet with him that he is afraid to drive it. Dallas mounts to the cabby's seat. The burglars are discovered by an officer who pursues them. They hail the hack and enter it. But the hack goes too slow. In disgust the butler and his colleagues flee, leaving the silverware in the hack. The officer pursues them. Dallas' spouse comes from the reception and finds the last taxi taken. She hails the hack.

The officer returns to find the hack. He sees it and discovers Mrs. Dallas and the silverware in it. He arrests her and her husband. The warden asks Mrs. Dallas who she wants for counsel; she tells them her husband. The husband awakens from his drunken stupor and finds himself in jail. He is brought into court. The deputy, arriving at the home, is met by the butler. The deputy recognizes in the butler a famous thief and nabs him.

Dallas has just been freed on a plea of 'First offense' when his wife is dragged into the scene. She runs to her husband's arms and he winks at the judge. He hears his wife's case and agrees to defend her after sternly reprimanding her. The evidence is brought in and they are both astounded at the sight of their own jewelry. The butler is brought in, and, to the consternation of Mr. and Mrs. Dallas, is declared to be a notorious thief.

THREADS OF FATE (Two Parts—Feb. 21).—Two children are born into the world, a boy of wealth and luxury, a girl of poverty and simplicity. The man becomes a musician with the soul of a poet, keenly sensitive to the real beauty of life, despite his immense wealth. The woman bespeaks charming simplicity, underneath which is hidden a deep soul. Constantly dragged into the whirl of society, the man tires of the sham and pretense and finally breaks his social ties and assumes the disguise of a wandering street musician. He travels about from village to village and finds in the simplicity of the farmer folk that for which he has sought in vain on the higher planes of life.

Meanwhile the woman begins to ascend the ladder. She goes to the city to become a protege of a wealthy aunt and is introduced to the society from which the man has just escaped. Here she meets the Count, a profligate soldier of fortune, and is urged by her aunt to look with favor upon his suit. Soon after she attends a week-end party given at the country home of one of her aunt's friends. Here she is subjected to what appears to her mind an insult. She escapes from the house and sets out afoot for her aunt's summer residence, dressed in the simple garb of a country maid, a character she had been impersonating at the party.

In going along the path through the woods, she is attracted by the melodious tones of a violin. Her curiosity is aroused and she follows the music to its source, discovering the man. He plays for her again and a warm friendship springs up between them. Each is afraid to disclose his true identity for fear of dispelling the illusion. Other visits follow, always in disguise, and finally the inevitable happens. They fall in love with each other.

Meanwhile great pressure is brought to bear upon the woman in the interest of the count. Finally the woman, realizing the hopelessness of her love, capitulates and marries the Count.

When the little country girl comes to him no more, the man loses interest in the life he is leading and returns to the city, throws himself into the mad whirlpool of life in a vain endeavor to forget. He goes abroad, thinking to find solace.

Meanwhile the woman has been reaping the bitter fruits of her marriage to the count. One night, when stopping at a famous watering place, she hears again the haunting strains of the violin. It draws her irresistibly and she comes into the presence of the man and his real identity is disclosed. Finally a point is reached at which flesh and blood can resist no longer, and the unhappy lovers determine to elope. The count discovers their plans and they rush away to their death. The threads of destiny lie severed.

But unseen hands pick up the threads and weave them together in the life after death.

CHANGED LIVES (Three Parts—Feb. 16).—Maggie Cline, a slavey, is suddenly discharged from her position and registers as a red cross nurse in the midst of the war. She meets and becomes the confidant of Clara Grosvenor, also a nurse, who tells her much of her past life. While they are about their duties great havoc is being done outside and of a sudden the hospital building is shelled and Clara is killed.

Maggie rushes to her aid, but, discovering she is dead, is in the act of getting the girl's few belongings together, when she comes upon the photograph of a child together with several letters belonging to the dead girl, several of which she has already been shown. Among these is a letter from a Mrs. Grosvenor, grandmother to Clara, welcoming her to her door, and stating, that as she has never seen her granddaughter, she is anxious to meet her.

At this moment Maggie is handed a cablegram addressed to Clara, and she being her only friend, opens and reads the message. She has an idea. The girl is dead, and she (Maggie) is without friends or money—why can she not impersonate Clara and answer the cablegram in person? The cable notifies Clara Grosvenor of the death of her uncle, Henry Grosvenor, and of the fact that she has been named as his heiress. Maggie decides to take the chance, and leaves immediately for the Grosvenor estates.

She meets young John Holdworth, the attorney, presents various letters of identification to him and is put in possession of the Grosvenor fortunes, as Clara Grosvenor. Later she writes to Mrs. John Grosvenor, grandmother of the dead Clara, asking her to come and live with her, as she is lonely and yearns for companionship.

At the home of the grandmother we find her attended only by a maid and her butler, James, on whom she relies completely. He is a good servant, but evil companionship and gambling have wrought his ruin. One day, having brought his mistress her jewels, James conceives a plan whereby he may pay back his gambling debts. He watches closely as his mistress goes over the precious gems, and when she has finished cleaning them, Mrs. Grovesnor turns them over to him to be placed in the safe.

Instead of doing this he hastens to a pawnshop, where he disposes of the jewels, buying counterparts of paste, which he places in the safe. In the meantime, Mrs. Grovesnor complains of one of her frequent severe headaches and calls for James to administer medicine. He is just in the act of placing the fake jewels in the safe when she sends for him. He comes to her.

Then it occurs to him that if he were really encouraged sometime, he might add too much to her headache remedy, then all would be well with him. In the scene Mrs. Grosvenor receives the letter from Maggie, inviting her to come and live with her and share her fortune. She reads it over and over, and, getting a former letter written by the real Clara, before her death, she compares them and finds that the signatures are, of course, different. She becomes suspicious and decides to make the trip to America to see for herself.

Back in her new-found home, Maggie and John Holdworth have become great friends. He realizes, however, that her position is far above him in the social world. While they are seated in the garden one day, Maggie receives the message stating her grandmother will arrive on a certain date, but she does not read it to John. He becomes jealous of the cable, declares his love for her and learns it is returned. Later he is informed that the cable was from the grandmother.

A few days later Mrs. Grosvenor arrives with James and takes up her home with her supposed granddaughter. She decides to verify her suspicions and shows one of her own pictures to Maggie. She is not surprised when the girl answers: "My dear mother, how well I remember her." Mrs. Grosvenor is now convinced that the girl is an imposter.

In the meantime Mrs. Grosvenor, has been sent a message from the jewelers with whom she left her jewels to be re-set before leaving London, stating that they find them to be worthless pastes. James has intercepted the message, and is evolving a plan whereby he might save himself. About this time the Grandmother is attacked with one of her old headaches and again calls for James to bring her medicine, so she may have a clear head to deal with the imposter, Clara.

Mrs. Grosvenor sends for young Holdworth so she may expose the girl in whom the world has believed. James, at a loss, remembers the danger of an overdose of the medicine and that Mrs. Grosvenor, alone, could convict him. He decides to put her out of the way. Just as Holdworth arrives the grandmother is stricken and dies and Clara is saved from exposure. The law, however, takes a hand and the guilty James, who has been tracked by Scotland Yard men from London, is taken into custody.

THE STAR BOARDER (Feb. 6).—An exceedingly entertaining young chap, upon discovering that his landlady has a considerable sum in the bank, lays siege to her affection. He succeeds to such a degree, that she adds so materially to his comfort it causes her bank account to shrink. A pretty girl comes to the boarding-house and the young man falls in love with her. They are about to be married quietly, when the jilted landlady comes upon the scene and the bride-to-be is arrested. Although the fickle young man tries his best to get the landlady to reinstate him in her affections, she ejects him from the house.

THE ESCORT (Feb. 13).—Two young married couples find life intolerably dull. Even Rose, the maid of one of the couples, unable to endure the tomb-like gravity of the household, gives notice and leaves. Just after this, Eddie Rose, an old friend of the bridegrooms, invites them to go with him to a prize fight. There is considerable confusion over the name Rose—and the two wives learning of an appointment at the Litte Cafe, conspire to entrap their faithless husbands. They bribe the janitor to act as their escort. He shaves off his precious beard and is struggling into evening clothes—when the husbands unexpectedly return. In trying to escape, "the escort" is forced into the dumb waiter. He pulls himself up and down until he is exhausted, but at last is captured in the cellar.

THANHOUSER.

THE SHOPLIFTER (Feb. 7).—Meg and Meta, sisters, are employed in the Brock Department store. Meta is forewoman of the silk department and the manager has great confidence in her. Meg, however, has fallen under the influence of "Sport" Strubel, alias "the Widow," a thief and shoplifter, who has persuaded her to be his accomplice in stealing silk from the Brock establishment. Mr. Brock holds Meta responsible for the goods lost in her department, and to prove her own innocence, she determines to round up the real thief. She traces the crime to Strubel, who, to her knowledge, has a strong influence over her sister; and when he appears in the store, heavily veiled like a widow, she insists upon waiting upon him. She tells him that he is discovered. Strubel, in a rage, believing that Meg has "squealed," writes her a note directing her to meet him at a certain place. Meg, meanwhile alarmed over the turn things have taken, goes to the manager's office and makes a full confession. Meta gets the note from Strubel and notifies the police, where they can find the thief. He is captured. Then she learns of her sister's confession. For her sake, the manager pardons Meg—and Meta helps her sister to live up to her vow to be honest.

MRS. COOK'S COOKING (Feb. 9).—In spite of his wife being an excellent cook, Mr. Cook is a chronic kicker. At last, unable to endure his grouchiness, Mrs. Cook goes on the war path—and Cook departs to a restaurant. There he orders a meal, but, as usual, denounces every dish set before him. A quarrel with the proprietor and the waiters ensues, and during the excitement Cook yanks the cloth off the table, smashing a lot of crockery. The proprietor has him arrested. At the police station Cook calls up his wife and begs her to come to his rescue. Secretly amused, she tells him that it serves him right, and before he can retort hangs up the receiver. Cook is locked in a cell and put upon bread and water. The jailer tells him to eat it—or starve. As he drearily munches his dry crust, visions of his wife's cooking rise before him. When he is marched into the court room he learns that the restaurant proprietor wants thirty dollars damages. As he has nothing approaching this sum, he again telephones Mrs. Cook, frantically pleading with her to save him from thirty days on bread and water. At last she relents and hurrying to the court bails him out. Cook is permanently cured of kicking once his feet are safely under his home dining table again.

MAJESTIC.

THE DOUBLE DECEPTION (Feb. 5).—A wealthy girl, tired of her aimless life, runs away to the country where she lives an active, natural life on a farm. A rich young clubman, as blase as she seeks the same village where Laura has taken refuge, and the two fall in love and are married. She believes Henry to be a poor clerk, and returning to the city they set up housekeeping in a small apartment. One day Henry finds her trying on a necklace of pearls, and his suspicions are aroused. She disarms him, however, by telling him they are paste. But not long after this the jewels are stolen, and when Henry traces them to a pawn shop he learns from the pawnbroker that they are worth $100,000. Meanwhile, Laura has discovered in Henry's bureau a diamond-studded watch. She begins to think that she has married a burglar. But when next they meet, and each accuses the other, husband and wife mutually confess.

HIS LAST DEAL (Feb. 9).—Dan Mallory, a confirmed gambler, through a gambling scrape, is convicted and imprisoned. His son is cast upon his own resources. The son and a hired girl, on the farm where he works, fall in love and put their savings aside toward a place of their own. Long before the sum is completed, Molly is fired through no fault of her own, and young Tom Mallory goes with her. They marry, pay a deposit on a small farm, and start in bravely to work it together. Their crops are successful, and they are at last able to finish paying off the debt on the farm—when Dan Malory is released from prison. He comes to his son's home, and hearing of their returns from the harvest, madly entreats Tom and Molly to loan him the money, that by one last deal he may triple the amount, repay them and escape to another state. They refuse. Later he returns and steals the money. In the den the old father loses every cent. The following day he sees his son and his son's wife turned off the farm, broken hearted. Touched by their suffering, Mallory attacks the Mexican, who has won the money away from him and gets back the cash. Husband and wife overcome with joy buy back the place. But the old father, returning to the town, pays with his life for his last deal, at the hands of a band of Mexicans.

PRINCESS.

NELL'S STRATEGY (Feb. 5).—Nell Winter's father is an old scamp who drinks up his money. His daughter takes in sewing to support their home. Maurice, the son of a rich woman whom Nell makes dresses, becomes infatuated with the girl, who is by no means pleased to see her father and the young millionaire becoming great friends. She instinctively dislikes Maurice. But also she is in love with Bob, a young clerk in an iron company, who is devoted to her. Bob discovers a scheme for enriching the company and is sent to New York to superintend the city office. He writes Nell that as soon as he has the cash saved, he will come back to make her his wife. Meanwhile, the unpaid mortgage on the Winters' house is causing Nell a great deal of worry. The next installment coming due, they are unable to meet it, and her father points out to her that it is her duty to save the day by marrying Maurice. Nell pretends to consent. She writes Bob of her predicament, and he arrives just in time to pay off the mortgage and save his sweetheart from a miserable marriage.

KOMIC

BILL TURNS VALET (Chapter 16 of the "Bill" Series—Feb. 7).—Hadley engages a new office boy by the name of Bill. Ethel comes down that morning in a new skirt which she displays to Mabel across the hall. She decides that it is too long, and is wondering how she can get it shortened in time to keep a twelve o'clock luncheon engagement, when Bill comes out of the inner office bound for the tailor's with his boss's ink-stained trousers. Ethel gives him her skirt and tells him to hurry. Bill finds the tailor out and decides to make good by doing the repairing himself. Meanwhile, Hadley and Ethel, their nether persons clad in newspapers, are suffering many embarrassments, which finally lead to a visit from the police. But in the nick of time Bill returns with the missing garments—though what he has done to them, under any other circumstances, would have cost him his job.

RELIANCE.

THE BEAST WITHIN (Feb. 3).—Jim Rose, fond of drink, falls into bad company and is involved in a robbery. He serves his term in state prison, and then, returning to his native town, determines to do right for the rest of his life. A detective, who has no faith in the reformation of crooks, betrays Jim to his employer, but Tom Bailey, also a detective, who is in love with Mamie, Jim's sister, honestly believing in Jim, wins his job back for him. Spike Hennessey and another former pal of the ex-convict try to blow the safe of the firm where Jim is employed. They are discovered by Jim, who refuses all their inducements to remain silent, causes their arrest and saves the company's property. Tom Bailey's and Mamie's faith in Jim is vindicated, and the head of the firm honors his heroic employee.

HEART BEATS (Two Parts—Feb. 6).—Policeman Moriarty witnesses, silhouetted on the window curtain of a rear room in Frank Middleton's house, on the night of a masque ball, the murder of Middleton, himself, by a tall figure costumed like the Devil. Just previously he also has seen the shadows of Middleton and a young woman on the curtain, the latter struggling to defend herself from his embrace. Moritarty summons help, and the policemen, under the direction of Lee, the chief of the detective force, arrests all the guests. Lee also finds on the table of Middleton's room a diary, a woman's handkerchief, and a bunch of keys. Trying the keys in one door after another, he at last brings to light a beautiful girl who weeps but will tell nothing. He takes her to the police station, where already the other guests are awaiting examination. There Lee sets an electric lamp on the floor and with Moriarty at his elbow reviews in silhouette on the wall all the guests as they pass the lamp. Floyd Parker, who is dressed as Mephistopheles, is called aside, and then Edwin Hurlburt, whose cupid bow, in silhouette, resembles a devil's horns. Lee brings out the "heart-throb machine" and tests by means of written words on a blackboard both the suspected men. Parker is tried first. The heart throb register runs evenly. "Hurlburt, you killed Middleton," writes Lee, and the machine registers wildly. Suddenly, at the detective's signal, a door is opened and the girl runs into the room. Seeing Hurlburt in an attitude of supplication, she exclaims, "It was not his fault! The scoundrel trapped me." Lee draws from his pocket the diary he has found on the table in Middleton's room. He reads to himself the last entry:

"Wealth buys everything. Even little Janet, Hurlburt's fiancee, met me in my rooms tonight to save his business from my mortgage. She must pay my price——"

Then he tries the girl with the heart throb machine and she bursts into a storm of weeping. Hurlburt springs forward and throwing his arms about her, confesses. He had killed Middleton to save her honor. Lee closes the machine. "It was justifiable homicide," he says.

THE CHINESE LOTTERY (Feb. 10).—May gets a job on a paper through the friendly help of Jason Hunter, son of a newspaper owner, who is inclined to be somewhat wild. A public outcry against lottery schemes is on, and May is sent to locate the shop where the lottery is conducted. She discovers the plant in the rear of a Chinese laundry, and notifies the police. But she makes them promise not to raid it until ten o'clock the following night, so that she may have time to get the story for her paper, and also because at that time the owner of the place may be found on the premises. The next night when she goes to the shop, she is dismayed to discover that the owner is Jason Hunter. She has no way of heading off the police at that hour, though she resolves to "throw" her paper for Hunter's sake. She hurriedly runs out, takes down the laundry sign and puts it upon a shack two doors away. The police raid an innocent place, and May returns to the office and is dismissed for failing to get the story. Next day Jason learns of this. He confesses to his father, May is restored to her job and Jason gives up his foolish ways.

AMERICAN.

JUSTIFIED (Two Parts—Feb. 8).—Tom Allen, an industrious young miner, warns Beatrice, his wife, against Joe Hills, a worthless chap, who is continually hanging around their cabin. Hills steals Allen's gold, and is discovered by Beatrice hiding in a closet just as her husband comes in. Allen suspicious of his wife's relations with Hills, in a sudden fit of rage, drives her from the house. She is found many miles away, exhausted, and some time after this she gives birth to a child. Meanwhile Allen discovers in the closet the hidden nuggets and some baby things. He is convinced of his mistake and sets out in search of Beatrice. Five years later, Allen recognizes Hills in a saloon. The later fires at him and in returning the fire, Allen kills his enemy. He takes refuge in a barn, where he is found by a small boy, who leads him to his mother. Thus he finds Beatrice. She hides her husband from the sheriff, but the child innocently gives away his father's presence. Allen surrenders. Upon trial, however, he is acquitted of shooting in self-defense a man long wanted for murder. The Allens are then happily reunited.

A HEART OF GOLD (Feb. 10).—Jim is a fisherman, shy and gentle, and devoted to children and his flute. He lives in the attic of Mrs. Carr's cottage. Mary Price takes refuge with Mrs. Carr from Jake Price, her husband, a drunkard. Her beauty and sweetness make a deep impression upon Jim, who, on declaring his love, learns to his dismay that she is married. Later he meets Jake, and for Mary's sake determines to try to make him reform. One day Jake is swept out to sea in a small fishing boat by a heavy storm. Jim saves him. When Jake, humble with gratitude, asks Jim how he can reward him, the latter asks him simply "to go home and take care of Mary." After that, Price leads a new life, and Mary is happy.

THE WILY CHAPERON (Feb. 12).—Dick Willis proposes to Myrtle Stern and is promptly put out of the house by her irate father, who advertises for a chaperon to guard his beautiful and wilful daughter from designing beaux. Mrs. Brown Smith, a dashing widow, who, at the end of the season finds herself financially embarrassed, immediately applies. Her winning ways captivate Father Stern, who engages her at once. Myrtle resents the intrusion of a chaperon, but soon finds out that the widow has too many plans for her own to interfere with her love affairs. With Mrs. Brown Smith's help Dick and Myrtle elope. Father Stern finds the chaperon bound and gagged. As he is trying

THE CHINATOWN MYSTERY (Two Parts—Feb. 10).—Frank Sloan, the best reporter on the "Daily Metropolitan," is detailed to work in Chinatown to solve the mystery of the disappearance of a Chinese slave girl, Woo. Sloan's nerves become unstrung from overwork and he forms the opium habit. He loses his position on the newspaper and is turned down by the girl to whom he is engaged. Sloan fast goes to the dogs. Sometime later there is a big murder mystery in Chinatown and Sloan, while in the opium den, overhears Yo Hung confessing to the murder to another chinaman. Sloan tells Captain Wells that he has located the murderer and will deliver him over to the authorities if the captain will promise to keep the arrest a secret for an hour, in order to allow Sloan to secure a "scoop" for his old paper. Wells promises this, and Sloan affects the capture of Yo Hong, and and also gets the big story for his paper. That night, as a last resort to save Sloan and cure him of his habit, his friends resolve to shanghai him aboard a schooner bound for a long voyage. This is done, and, after much suffering, Sloan is cured. On his return to the home port he is met by Grace (the girl to whom he has been engaged) and her brother, Jimmy, and they are happily reconciled.

DOMINO.

THE BRIDE OF GUADELOUPE (Two Parts—Feb. 11).—Living in the village of Guadeloupe, a mythical California Mission town, are Berta and her lover, Ricardo. Felipe, a rival, unable to win the girl, resorts to violence and has Ricardo abducted by bandits and held captive in a mountain hut. Felipe and the bandits, under threat of death, force Ricardo to write a letter to Berta, telling her that he has taken a ship to Spain to marry a boyhood sweetheart.

The heartbroken girl tries to commit suicide but is prevented by Padre Sebastian, who advises her to take refuge in a convent and take the veil and devote her life to the service of the Church. Berta enters the Convent of the Sacred Heart.

During the absence of the bandit gang on a cattle foray, Ricardo succeeds in killing his guard and escaping to the village. The Padre is surprised to see him, believing him in Spain. Ricardo tells the Padre of the plot, and the Padre tells him where to find Berta. Ricardo goes to the convent and steals an interview with Berta through the bars of the convent gate. He returns to the village and sends the sheriff's posse into the mountains after the bandits, then seeks out Felipe, whom he finds in the village wine garden. In the duel with pistols Felipe is killed. The bandits are captured. The ending scenes of the story show the pretty church ceremony that unites Ricardo and Berta in marriage.

KAY-BEE.

IN THE TENNESSEE HILLS (Two Parts—Feb. 12).—Jim Carson, a young Tennessee mountaineer, and Millie James, a mountain girl, are worried over the condition of Jim's mother. Millie nurses her tenderly. Jim's worry is increased by a note which he has received from John Calhoun, a miserly landowner, stating that, unless he pays the overdue rent on the shack which they occupy, that Jim will be evicted. Realizing that terrible shock would be dangerous to his mother, Jim goes out and attempts to borrow the money. He meets with no success.

Meanwhile, Calhoun, accompanied by two deputies and his overseer, Ned Simms, goes the rounds of the cabins to collect his rent. He arrives at Jim's cabin. Jim being absent upon his mission, Millie states that they have not the rent, whereupon Calhoun orders them evicted and the men at his command place the dying woman out on the roadside on a mattress, also throwing their scant furniture into the roadway. The shock of the eviction kills the mother. Calhoun goes on his way.

Jim arrives at the cabin and learns of the eviction and the death of his mother. Shortly afterwards he leaves to wreak his vengeance upon Calhoun. The mountaineers carry the dead woman into the cabin and restore the furniture to its original position. Jim Carson, by a short cut, waylays Calhoun, shoots at him and kills his horse. In a desperate struggle between the two men, Calhoun's revolver is accidently discharged and Calhoun is killed. The body is discovered and Ned Simms and a posse set out upon the trail of Carson. He is captured, placed on a horse under a tree with a rope about his neck and left there, Simms knowing that at sunset the horse will return to the stable, leaving Carson to hang. Simms returns to the cabin of Carson and finds Millie there and taunts her with Jim's fate. The mountaineer whose horse Jim borrowed his already arrived on the scene. He hears the argument in the shack, goes to the window and covers Simms with his own rifle. Millie leaves on horseback and rescues Jim. She liberates him and at her request Jim rides towards the North, where Millie promises to join him after burying his mother.

AFTER FIVE (Lasky).—Ted Ewing, a young New Yorker, is the guardian of Nora Hildreth, with whom he is in love. He invests her fortune of $50,000 and an equal amount of his own money (constituting almost his entire property) in a stock exchange speculation. When this speculation apparently fails he seeks to reimburse the girl by taking out a life insurance policy in her favor and then killing himself. But, as the policy has a clause invalidating it in case of suicide, he has to arrange an "accidental death" for himself, and, to this end, enters into an arrangement with the chief of the S. S. S., a blackmailing society which has already threatened his life.

The humorous complications really begin when it develops that the money has not been lost but doubled, so that Ted, instead of wishing to die, has every reason imaginable for wishing to live. It is, however, almost impossible to break his sworn pact with the S. S. S. and his own Japanese valet, to whom he gave the money to pay for his death, refuses to divert the money from the one use to which it has been pledged.

The manner in which Ted manages to escape from his own plots against his own life, and the details of his romance with Nora form the concluding episodes of this highly amusing photodrama.

THE GOOSE GIRL (Lasky).—Count Von Herbeck, the chancellor to the Grand Duke of Ehrenstein, is married but keeps the fact secret on account of his high ambitions. His wife, dying, writes him a letter urging him to make their little child a great lady. With this purpose in view, he arranges with Torpets, a gypsy, to abduct the daughter of the Grand Duke. He takes the coat, hat and locket belonging to the little Princess and sends his own child away. During the abduction of the little Princess she is wounded on the shoulder by a bullet.

Fifteen years later Von Herbeck tells the Grand Duke that he has found the Princess, and produces the locket and coat in proof of the identity of the child. Meanwhile the real

Princess, after being abandoned by the gypsies, has been adopted by peasants and has grown up as a "Goose Girl."

At the same period, the young King Frederick of Jugendheit is officially betrothed to the Princess of Ehrenstein but does not wish to marry a woman he has never seen, or to put diplomatic necessity above love. He disguises himself as a vintner, meets the Goose Girl, rescues her from the insulting attentions of a vicious Count and longs to marry her.

When it seems impossible for the story to come to a happy conclusion the real identity of the Goose Girl is revealed through the bullet mark received when the gypsy stole her, and she takes her rightful place on the throne. This makes the marriage to the Princess of Ehrenstein the one thing in the world most to be desired by the King of Jugendheit, and everything ends happily after all.

YOUNG ROMANCE (Four Parts—Lasky).—Nellie Nolan works at the notions counter of a big department store, and Tom Clancy is in the hardware department of the same establishment. But both of their souls are filled with ambitions and aspirations not to be governed by even the routine of such existence. Nellie has saved a whole hundred dollars and, in a fit of June madness, decides to spend it all for one week of glorious pretense at a Maine summer resort, assuming the role of a lady of fashion and tasting for once the joys of wealth. Tom is impressed with the same newspaper story which has caught Nellie's eye, and he goes to the same resort, posing as a rich young man from Newport.

The two young people meet each other, each believing the other belongs to an entirely different sphere of lige, and the succeeding events make it possible for Tom to become a hero in the eyes of the girl by rescuing her from a desolate island. They fall in love, but an understanding is impossible because they both are unwilling to confess that they are not what they seem. They both return to the store, and that very day Tom is transferred to the counter directly opposite where Nellie deals in notions. Thus they meet for the first time in their rightful surroundings and Cupid wins.

THE LADY OF LYONS; OR LOVE AND PRIDE (Four Parts).—Claude Melnotte, an artist of lowly birth, is spurned by the proud Pauline, daughter of the wealthy Lyons merchant, Deschappelles. Beauseant, a rich gentleman who has been refused with levity by Pauline, plans to be revenged for the insult. He sees Claude Melnotte place a bouquet on the window sill of Pauline's room. Pauline finds a note in the bouquet and when she discovers that her secret admirer is Claude Melnotte, the son of a gardener, she throws the flowers into the street. Beauseant follows Claude home, and persuades him to assume the fictitious title of "Prince of Como" for which purpose Beauseant furnishes money. Claude signs a contract, agreeing not to reveal his true identity until Beauseant gives him permission.

Beauseant equips him with the valuable dress and trinkets of his supposed princely rank, introduces him to the leading society, and obtains for him an invitation to the home of the merchant Deschappelles. Pauline is enchanted with the Prince, and his rank and apparent wealth prove too much for her when Claude proposes marriage. She accepts him and the wedding takes place with great pomp and splendor. Meanwhile Claude has told his mother of his deception and has asked her to help him to comfort Pauline when she is disillusioned. He has to take Pauline to his mother's home as he has no other home for her. Pauline is heartbroken when she finds that she is the guest of a poor cottager instead of the mistress of a wonderful castle.

Finding Pauline inconsolable Claude suggests that she divorce him, and having no hope in life left him, he enlists, goes to war, and Pauline returns to her father's home. He is promoted for bravery and returns two years later as Col. Melnotte. During Claude's absence Deschappelles has lost his money and Beauseant has come to the rescue, making the hand of Pauline his condition. Claude is just in time to prevent the marriage, and win Pauline for his own again. The scene closes with Pauline in the arms of Claude.

THE ADVENTURES OF A BOY SCOUT (Five Parts).—This picture has been authorized and endorsed by the National Headquarters of the Boy Scouts of America. Tom Slade, a young tough of sixteen, falls under the influence of the Boy Scout movement, and while he at first affects to treat the idea of scouting with contempt, he finally becomes a heroic character in the organization.

Tom, whose father is a worthless individual, finds himself not only without a home, but also without his parent, who has deserted him, and in his extremity encounters Mary Temple and her brother, Wilfred, who are children of John Temple, the landlord who evicted Tom and his father from their shanty. Through Mary's influence Tom is induced to make an effort first toward self-support, and then, as he becomes acquainted with the scout movement and begins to earn his own self respect, he learns that scouting is a bigger thing than he had any idea of, for he finds that it is engaged in building men of character out of the boys it enlists.

Tom joins the scouts and goes with them on a camping expedition, and there he learns that his father has joined a band of tramps and is engaged in the life of crime. John Temple and his children are living in a house not far from the Scout camp. Temple is violently opposed to the Scout movement, as is his son, Wilfred, but the Scouts manage to render Mrs. Temple a service, and thus enlist her sympathies and admiration. Bill Slade, Tom's father, and his pals try to rob Temple's home, but are frightened away by the arrival of a troop of Scouts. The tramps steal a motor car and get away, but not until Tom has recognized his father. Later that night the tramps return to the Temple home and make another attempt upon it. In the disturbances that ensues Tom's father is wounded, but escapes, and one of the Temple's servants is shot. The Scouts again come to the rescue and with their wireless equipment manage to procure medical assistance for the wounded servant. Temple refuses to recognize the value of the services the Scouts have rendered him.

He and his son go off on a fishing trip and get lost in the woods. The next day when they do not return Mrs. Temple asks the Scouts to search for them. In the wood Temple has found Slade, who is also lost, and the men fight until they both fall unconscious. They are discovered late at night by the Scout patrol and both are carried to the Temple home. Temple undergoes a complete change of heart concerning scouting, his son asks to be admitted to the movement on his own account, and Bill Slade goes to work and becomes a useful member of society.

OLD DUTCH (Five Parts—Shubert).—The story relates how Ludwig Streusand and his daughter, Violet, are living in New York. Ludwig is known as "Old Dutch," and after years of hard study and labor he completes his invention of what he calls the teloptophone, a device which, when attached to a telephone, enables the speaker to see the party at the other end of the wire. He goes to John Rockmorgan with his invention and after proving its worth, Rockmorgan agrees to finance his invention and gives him a check for $5,000 on account.

Old Dutch and his daughter have had rather a hard time of it. Now that his invention is a success, he feels that the best thing to do is to go away to Palm Beach with her for a vacation. To escape the publicity arising through the invention of the teloptophone, he also thinks it wise to assume another name so as to avoid being questioned and annoyed about his invention. He arrives at a Palm Beach hotel and registers under the name of John Mueller and daughter, and settles down to a period of east and comfort.

Harold, John Rockmorgan's son, has also gone to the hotel, and when he sees Violet, love awakens in his heart. They meet and she is happy in her first love affair. In the meantime, we see the vaudeville team of Bings and Bings discharged from the theater in which they are playing on account of their act being so bad. They are in desperate straits and the idea comes to the male member of the team to go to a fashionable hotel in Florida and by hook and crook get some of the money of the millionaires.

"Old Dutch" has become a great favorite with the children of the hotel, and on the day that Bings and Bings arrive there, while playing with the children, he loses his pocketbook. It is the good luck of Mr. Bings to be the first to see the pocketbook and before registering he goes through the contents and sees the check made out to Ludwig Streusand for $5,000. When he finds there is no such man stopping there, he boldly signs the name of Ludwig

A Modernized Version of L. Frank Baum's Fantastical Romance

The New Wizard of Oz

As Played for Over Eight Years by MONTGOMERY & STONE

The Public Demanded This Picture

"The New Wizard of Oz" was produced, not only because we thought it would be a "winner," but because thousands of people have written to us asking that we produce this famous fantastical romance for the screen.

For over eight years the "Wizard of Oz," with Montgomery and Stone as the "Scarecrow" and "Tin Woodman," delighted hundreds of thousands of people throughout the country.

No expense has been spared in the effort to make this picture the one real feature of the season. It abounds with examples of wonderful photography, mystifying sensations and humorous surprises.

The New Wizard of Oz will be the sensation of the year, owing to its unquestioned drawing power and appeal to all classes of people. It is a picture that will "repeat" in your houses several times, bringing in more money to your box office at every showing.

Bookings are being demanded so rapidly that to secure an early showing you must write or wire to your nearest Alliance Exchange immediately.

Streusand and daughter. When Joubert, the hotel proprietor, learns that such an illustrious person is stopping with him, he immediately begins to give receptions and balls in his honor. "Old Dutch" is so wrapped up in having a good time that he is unaware a man is masquerading under his name, so when his week's bill is presented he is unable to pay it, as his check for $5,000 and all means of identification have gone with the pocketbook.

Joubert is furious that "Old Dutch" cannot pay his bill and tells him that he and his daughter must either go to jail or work off their board bill. "Old Dutch" protests and says that his name is Streusand and John Rockmorgan is his partner. Joubert laughs at him and points at whom he thinks is the real Streusand. Harold tells the proprietor he feels sure that "Old Dutch" is speaking the truth. When Joubert asks him how long he has known him and in what way he can identify them, he is left without an answer. So they are put to work—"Old Dutch" in the stable and Violet in the kitchen.

Meanwhile the vaudeville team of Bings and Bings are having the time of their lives. The female end of the sketch is doing her best to win Harold Rockmorgan, who still believes and loves Violet. After having been forced to perform various duties around the hotel, on the night of a banquet given in honor of the false Streusand, Joubert forces "Old Dutch" to be head waiter. In the meantime "Old Dutch" has induced Harold to phone to his father to come down and identify his partner. At first he refuses, but Harold gets the teloptophone from "Old Dutch" and tells his father that he plainly sees the stenographer seated on his lap and unless he does come at once he will tell mother. That settles the old man.

During the banquet Bings is called upon for a speech, and as he is telling his eager listeners what a wonderful man he is, Rockmorgan arrives downstairs in the hotel. The clerk hastens to tell Joubert. "Old Dutch" overhears the good news, and knows that his time has come. He tears down to the office, followed by Bings and the surprised guests. He runs up to Rockmorgan who quickly explains that "Old Dutch" is the real Streusand and the other is a fakir. Bing and Bings' day is over. Harold and Violet are free to get married, and "Old Dutch" takes up his pleasure again.

THE VERDICT (Grandin Film—Feb. 14).—John Whitney, broker for Robert Courtleigh, is invited to dine at the Courtleigh home. By a subterfuge he manages to secure an audience with Ethel. Courtleigh, knowing Whitney's reputation and careful of Ethel's happiness, deliberately interrupts the tete-a-tete just as Whitney is about to propose to Ethel. Courtleigh tells Whitney that as a man of business he admires him, not as a prospective son-in-law. Whitney leaves and plans to "get even" with Courtleigh. He purposely double-crosses Courtleigh in a stock deal and practically ruins him. Courtleigh goes to Whitney's office and begs Whitney to make amends. Whitney is willing if Courtleigh will withdraw his sentiment of the night previous. Courtleigh refuses and denounces Whitney. Mrs. Courtleigh tries to induce her daughter to marry Whitney. Ethel shows her mother an engagement ring that Dick Carrol has given her that afternoon while riding in the park. She is horrified at her mother's willingness to sacrifice her and after a stormy scene leaves. She finds her father in the library. Seeing his great distress, Ethel thinks that it is she who is selfish and offers to marry Whitney. Courtleigh refuses. Ethel shows her ring that Carrol has given her and Courtleigh shows pleasure. Mrs. Courtleigh, desperate at the thought of living in poverty, is determined to break the match between Ethel and Carrol. She instructs the butler to refuse Carrol admittance when he calls that night. Carrol calls and the door is shut in his face. Dumbfounded, he returns to his club where he phones Courtleigh, who promises to join him and explain matters. Ethel, alone in her room, decides upon a plan to save her father—she herself will go to Whitney and plead with him. She calls him up on the phone and tells him she is coming to his apartments. Whitney, dressed in evening clothes and about to leave, is overjoyed at the prospect of seeing her, dismisses his valet for the evening and sits down with a bottle to await Ethel's coming. Courtleigh and Carrol meet at the club and Carrol is told of Whitney's treachery.

Ethel arrives and Whitney welcomes her. He shows signs of drink; she pleads with him. Carrol leaves Courtleigh, telling him that he (Carrol) will try and settle with him and save Courtleigh's home. He arrives just at the time Whitney is embracing Ethel. Ethel is terrified at the prospect of being found in Whitney's room. The bell continues ringing and Carrol is shown in the hallway. Whitney points to his bedroom door. Ethel in her terror enters it and Whitney locks the door. Carrol is admitted and pleads with Whitney. Ethel hears her lover's voice. Whitney laughs at Carrol when Carrol, taking his check-book from his pocket, offers to pay Courtleigh's debt. Enraged by Whitney's offensive manner, Carrol slaps Whitney in the face with his gloves. Whitney leaps to a table and seizes a gun. Carrol, anticipating Whitney's move, closes with him before he can shoot and the struggle starts. Ethel pounds upon the door in frenzy but cannot make herself heard. The gun is discharged and Whitney falls in a chair at the side of the table, dead. The gun drops from his hand to the floor. Carrol exits. Ethel listens too terrified to cry out, then throws herself against the door in a vain endeavor to break it down.

Courtleigh, at the club, is anxiously awaiting Carrol's return. Carrol is seen getting by the sleepy elevator boy. Back in Whitney's bedroom Ethel is at the window. She opens it, crawls out upon the ledge to the next window. She discovers Whitney dead. Courtleigh at the club is joined by Carrol, who tells him what has happened. Back in Whitney's apartment, Ethel is seen placing a pin in the table at Whitney's side. To the pin she attaches a string. She places the gun on the floor directly under Whitney's right hand. She again starts for the door with the string when she sees Carrol's cane on the table. She takes it with her. She takes the key from the door, throws the string over the transom, exits into the hall, locks the door from the outside, gets a settee, stands on it, takes the key, places it on the string and allows it to trail down to the table. It stops at the side of the dead man, the string is pulled and Ethel replaces the settee and exits. Both doors are locked, the gun is under the dead man's hand and the key on the table beside him. Ethel goes home. The valet returns, finds the door locked, looks through the transom and sees his master. The police come, discover the key and the gun and declare that it was a case of suicide. Carrol enters his apartment. His valet asks for his cane. Carrol realizes he has left it in Whitney's apartment and shows horror.

Carrol has passed a sleepless night. He is pacing up and down in his room when his valet enters with the morning papers. He eagerly reads: "The verdict is suicide. The key of Whitney's apartment lay upon the table beside him and the door was locked. The gun was lying on the floor directly under the dead man's hand——." Carrol is mystified. No mention of the cane. The valet enters and announces Ethel. Ethel enters, hiding the cane behind her. She slowly takes from behind her back and hands it to the utterly astounded Carrol. A short explanation and a clinch.

THE EXPLOITS OF ELAINE (Ninth Episode—"The Death Ray"—Two Parts).—The daughter of the slain Taylor Dodge, and her lawyer, Perry Bennett, receive an ultimatum from the Clutching Hand, in the form of a note advising that if the services of the scientific detective, Craig Kennedy, are not dispensed with, and the detective himself not out of the country within a few hours, a pedestrian will drop dead in front of his laboratory each hour. Next morning, after two men have been mysteriously stricken, Kennedy agrees that the master criminal is too deep for him, and consents to leave the country. With his assistant, Jameson, and accompanied to the dock by Elaine, Bennett, and Aunt Josephine, he boards a steamer for South America. Two porters convey some small baggage to the travelers' staterooms. When the two porters again appear, they are given in charge of that part of the fugitives' baggage that arrived too late for loading. The trunks are consigned to the Dodge home. Once there, and alone with Elaine, the erstwhile porters remove their disguise and prove to be Kennedy and Jameson; the real porters at that moment being on the high seas. Elaine loses no time in telling Bennett of the clever way in which the detectives have eluded the grip of the Clutching Hand. Later, advised by a message that Kennedy and Bennett await her, Elaine accompanies Bennet's valet in the lawyer's auto. In his laboratory, Kennedy informs Jameson that the peculiar black mark left on the forehead of the dead men is proof positive that they were slain by Ulivi's Infra-Red Ray, a scientific death-dealer that destroys any substance that cannot deflect its light. He is about to explain to Jameson the principles of a diverting shield, when from each corner and closet of their apartment they find themselves covered with guns pointed by the Clutching Hand and his aides. When Elaine arrives at her strange destination, she becomes the anguished spectator of the efforts of the Clutching Hand to turn the death-ray on the detectives, trapped in a cement room below ground. Kennedy' diverting shield deflects the ray to the wooden ceiling, which immediately ignites. The police, instructed earlier by Kennedy to raid the headquarters of the Clutching Hand, arrive just in time to save the three from a horrible death of fire. The crooks escape and leave no track behind them.

ton, his college chum, is the cashier of the bank whose president is Roy's father. He confides this to Ryan, and tells him that he has been invited to the banker's home. Wayburn makes an immediate hit with Florence, the banker's romantic daughter. Wayburn, learning that Barton's butler has left, 'phones to Ryan instructing him to apply for the position, which he does. Ryan is engaged. Calling at the bank, Wayburn sees Roy receive the combination of the safe, and determines to secure it. This he manages to do. He then succeeds in procuring the keys of the bank by a ruse.

That night, Roy loses heavily at his club. Meanwhile, Wayburn, taking advantage of romantic Florence, induces her to consent to elope. Accompanied by Ryan, Wayburn enters the bank at midnight and overcomes the watchman. Then they loot the bank. The next morning, Roy, unconscious of the robbery, leaves for the bank. On strong circumstantial evidence, Roy is accused of the robbery and in the custody of a detective starts for prison. Florence and Wayburn hastily depart on their wedding trip, not knowing of her brother's arrest. The banker is stunned when he learns of his daughter's marriage. Roy, taking advantage of the detective's negligence, makes his escape. Florence learns of the trouble at home, and, with Wayburn, returns. Wayburn and Ryan rob the home safe of the banker, who discovers them. He is attacked, but receives assistance from Roy, who has also returned. The police arrive in time to arrest Ryan, Wayburn escaping. He later returns to the house, and falls into a trap laid by Florence. He escapes in an automobile which is wrecked by a train. Bruised and bleeding, he is found by the police. Ryan, subjected to the "third degree," confesses and accuses Wayburn. The banker, convinced of his son's innocence, eagerly welcomes him back to his home.

FOR HER PEOPLE (Four Parts).—Joan, a Lancashire mill hand, is the sole support of her invalid mother. She takes a keen interest in her duties, and Tom, the foreman, is in love with her. At a meeting of the directors, Henry Calder, the manager, protests against the cutting down of the mill hands wages, but William Arnold, the principal shareholder, forces a 15 per cent. reduction. The notice is posted, and Calder, foreseeing trouble, wires his son, Leslie, that he is unable to join the house party at the Arnold's. Leslie, who is engaged to Dora Arnold, decides to go and assist his father. To avert a strike Henry Calder promises to restore the wages in six months. Leslie makes the acquaintance of Joan and is surprised to find in her a great student of labor troubles. He falls in love with her, which arouses the jealousy of Tom. A letter dispatched by Leslie to Dora is handed to Tom for post. Tom writes upon the envelope the words, "Ask the writer who Joan is." Dora now visits Leslie and seeks for an explanation and everything seems satisfactory. Leslie invites Joan to visit his home and meet Dora. But the unhappy Joan leaves early. The next morning Joan sends Leslie a note in which she explains that she should not have visited them, and that it is all her fault. A quarrel between Dora and Leslie ensues, Dora returning to Leslie the engagement ring and leaving for home. Tom meets Joan on the following Sunday, and some bitter words ensue.

On the following bank holiday, Joan goes off by herself to Cragwell Hill. Leslie follows and meeting her, asks Joan to marry him, and devote their lives to the workers' cause. Henry Calder is again forced by William Arnold to reduce the wages another 5 per cent. or close down. Tom influences a strike and inflames the workers. Joan appeals to the mill hands, but her voice is drowned. The pinch of poverty is felt everywhere. Tom visits the strikers and incites them to violence. They decide to burn down the mill. The storm gathers. Leslie meets with an accident. Dora is sent for. Joan tells her that Leslie must not marry out of his own class, that she loves him well enough to give him up but that "she loves her people better than all else." Joan finally pleads with William Arnold and succeeds in getting the mill restarted on the old wages. She is acclaimed, and in the end is discovered at peace amid the people she loves, and Tom is reinstated in her affections.

THE BOY SCOUTS' FARM.—The Boy Scouts, an organization now world-wide in its scope, is most excellent in its training, disciplinary and educational opportunities, especially in conjunction with farm life. The safe and careful handling of bees and the washing of sheep are two of the most interesting of the experiences that are successfully entered into by the embryo farmers. All phases of this work are shown. The cutting, curing and stacking of hay, and the milking of the gentle bovine, are also viewed by the interested spectator. A sincere desire to join these boys comes to one as the various scenes are unfolded to the view. Even the ugly hog is viewed with interest on the Scouts' farm.

ROMANTIC SAN DIEGO (California—On same reel as foregoing).—The most historic spot in the lovely state of California is Ramona's Marriage Place, a beautiful flowered courtyard. Scenes of a hundred years ago are shown in this romantic vicinity. A relic of the mission days is also shown—an old Mexican Coretta, or solid-wheeled cart. We see the old San Diego Mission, built by the Spanish Fathers in 1769, as well as the original bell which was brought from Spain. The famous Campanario Bells on the wall overlooking the Patio and Ivy Corridor still resist the ravages of time. Interesting views near Fishermans' Bridge and along the shore are here depicted, showing peculiar strata formations and many natural caves formed by erosion.

COLONEL HEEZA LIAR—GHOST BREAKER (On same reel as "The Great-Eared Bat—Madagascar"—A synopsis of which was published on page 902 of last week's issue).—Colonel Heeza Liar is undoubtedly the greatest rival of his contemporary, Baron Munchausen, enters into a new field of investigation—that of psychic research. He is the guest of honor of the Royal Society of Ghost-Chasers, who regale him with tales of hair-raising and harrowing experiences. They look for evidences of fear in his countenance, but only scorn radiates therefrom. Who ever heard of the doughty Colonel fearing a mortal, much less an immortal? To prove his utter disrespect of apparitions, he agrees to sleep at the ancient Castle Clare, owned by his friend, Lord Helpus. He enters his assigned chamber and prepares for a snooze. The magic hour of midnight at last rolls 'round, and in a moment the air is filled with weird and ghostly sounds. The banshees are at work. The Colonel from his bed gives vent to these thoughts, "If I could see who makes that din, I'd bust his bloomin' coco in." The next moment he DOES see, and his blood suddenly turns to water and freezes at the dread apparition. Seeking to evade the midnight prowler, the now quaking Colonel rises from his bed and flees for his life; but nothing seems proof against the advances of his awful foe. Should the Colonel lock the door, the ghost crawls through the key-hole; should he crawl beneath the bed-clothes, there also follows the shadow demon. Just as the Colonel is about to expire from fright, his life is saved by the ghost's mortal enemy, "One o'clock." With a final wail, the banshee hies itself to a neighboring graveyard. The Colonel breathes again.

A BUSYBODY'S BUSY DAY.—Jenkins, newly married, is greatly impressed by his own importance. As is the case with most people of that character, Jenkins is anything but an Apollo. With many sighs and repeated good-byes, he takes leave of his "Snookums" and starts for the city. The newlyweds are seen by the village gossip fondly kissing each other. She spreads the report, however, that Jenkins was seen by her to be brutally beating and choking his wife. She even goes so far as to accuse poor Jenkins of throwing his wife into the well. The result can better be imagined than described. Excitement reigns supreme among the hearers of the tragedy. To make matters worse, news is spread of the escape of dangerous lunatics. Jenkins, hearing this report, and seeing the approach of the village police force, takes them for the lunatics, and beats a hasty retreat to his home. Jenkins vanquishes his pursuers. He is later captured, however, and hailed to court, where he is accused of murder. He is rescued by his wife, however, who arrives in time to save him from an awful fate.

THE $20,000,000 MYSTERY (Episode Twelve —Reels Twenty-three and Twenty-four).—From the time when Zudora received her fright from the spectre bearing the dagger-pierced heart, as set forth in Episode Eleven, events began to move with a rapidity that was marvelous. A burned fragment of a letter from her father, in which he tells of bequeathing the rich Zudora mine in South Africa, to his daughter, has furnished a clue to John Storm, however, of which he, Jim Baird, the reporter, and Tom Hunt, the shrewd detective, are not slow to take advantage. They do not know that the original will is in the possession of Madame Duval and her band, nor that news has come to this clever adventuress of a rich "strike" in the Zudora diamond mine. By means of forged papers Bruce, Madame Duval's able confederate, has convinced the mine superintendent, Henry Howard, that the mine has been sold to his chieftainess, and it is to her that Howard reports. When he receives a letter from Madame Duval, however, directing him to bring the mine's output to New York, the superintendent grows suspicious. He obeys, but plans to locate Zudora, while in that city and learn the truth from her.

It happens that when Howard arrives, he is taken at once to Madame Duval's home, where he gives a graphic account of the "strike," which will mean millions to the owner of the Zudora mine, and turns the diamonds he has brought with him over to his fair hostess. Tom Hunt, the detective, who is shadowing the house, sees and hears all, and speedily communicates what he has learned to Jim Baird, when the reporter relieves him in keeping guard over the headquarters of the conspirators.

Meanwhile, Captain Radcliffe, becoming suspicious after Howard has left, decides to drive him back across the ocean. He sees to it that Howard receives the secret warning of the band —the sign of the "Heart and Dagger"—but Howard is made of sterner stuff and decides to stay.

Once his decision is made known to Madame Duval, that resourceful woman determines to avoid all chance of discovery by having the stones he has brought cut at once. In pursuance of this plan they are entrusted to Bill and Ike,, two rascally members of the band, to deliver the gems to a lapidary. The bag is then given to another of the gang, who, with these worthies as bodyguards, sets out for the diamond-cutter's. He has not gone far, when Jim Baird who has been on watch and suspects what is happening, holds him up and relieves him of the jewels. Then cleverly eluding the gunman's bodyguards, the reporter sets out for Mrs. Rumsey's, where he triumphantly delivers the stones to Zudora.

News of this daring coup is brought to Madame Duval. Acting under her directions a number of her most trusted agents seize Howard and overpower him. The mine superintendent is taken to a certain sanatorium, a resort conducted by one, Dr. Israel Munn, an unscrupulous quack, and there he is kept under close guard.

Madame Dval's next move is to get possession of the lost diamonds or Zudora. So it happens that after a happy evening with his sweetheart, John Storm is startled to learn the next morning that she has disappeared in the night. He takes counsel with Baird and Tom Hunt, and after a week's unflagging search, Zudora is located. She, also, is a prisoner in Dr. Munn's sanatorium.

The three devise a plan, which though desperate, seems feasible. Incidentally, to Jim Baird falls the lion's share of the dangerous work, which the plan entails. He it is that locates in just what part of the building Zudora is imprisoned and who leads the attack. Together they force their way into the sanatorium, and while Baird and Hunt hold off the doctor and his hirelings, Zudora is carried off in the strong arms of her lover.

As for the crooked medical man, he receives his just deserts, but as often happens, the real culprits, Madame Duval, and her band of conspirators, are enabled to escape and continue their preparations to accomplish the possession of Zudora's fortune. They still have the will, which is really Zudora's only title to the fabulously wealthy mine.

THE ETERNAL CITY (Famous Players—Eight Parts).—The story opens with the suggestion of sorrow involved in the sudden discovery by Leone, a young officer of the Papal Guards, of the tragic death of his wife, who, believing herself deserted by Leone, places her infant at the door of a convent and throws herself into the Tiber. This seeming desertion was made apparent by the young guardsman's abrupt and continued absence from Rome, who, unknown to his wife, was sent on a foreign mission by his father, in order that his daughter-in-law, whose marriage to his son he has never countenanced, may be convinced of his infidelity, with its fatal result. The despairing young guardsman, at last aware of his father's cruel ruse, abandoning all worldly honor and position, seeking only forgetfulness, enters the monastery to devote his life to a sacred peace, and years later becomes Pope Piux XI.

The abandoned infant, David Leone, is tenderly reared by the kind Sisters who find him, and when about nine years old falls into the hands of a cruel and heartless Padrone, who takes the boy to a den in London, where a number of other boys of his own age are imprisoned by the Padrone, and compelled to beg and steal in London streets. In this sullied atmosphere the delicate and refined boy is confronted with his first misfortunes, inhumanly starved, beaten and tortured, and taught vice and evil, which, however, he never truly embraces.

On a cold, stormy day, little David, weak and exhausted by exposure after begging for hours in the snow, falls in a faint on the stoop of the home of Doctor Roselli, an idealist and political exile from Italy, who maintains a school in London and devotes his life to the youths of his country. There the good doctor finds the boy, and takes him into the house, where he tells Roma, his little daughter, that he has brought a brother home for her. The two children become inseparable companions, and Doctor Roselli instills in David's heart the principles and republican ideals which he hopes some day will liberate his beloved country. These doctrines fill David's soul with a vast longing for the political regeneration of his native land.

As the picture proceeds David and Roma approach maturity. The benevolent doctor has departed from the world, and Roma is now the ward of Baron Bonelli, Prime Minister of Italy, who, through political intrigue, has confiscated and retained the estates of the exiled doctor. David, inspired by the teachings of his benefactor, has become a socialist leader and the idol of the people. For years David and Roma have not seen each other.

A number of distinguished guests have assembled in the loggia of Baron Bonelli's house to witness the gorgeous procession of the Pope's Jubilee. Roma is surrounded with state and luxury. The Baron has fallen madly in love with her, and it is commonly known that she is his mistress.

A short distance from the loggia David Leona, now a member of the House of Deputies, and known as David Rossi, is exhorting the multitude. A revolution is imminent unless some heed be taken of the necessities of the people, and David is resolved to interrupt the processional cortege by throwing himself before the Pope in an effort to gain an audience. As the procession approaches he is heard from the loggia addressing the people, denouncing Baron Bonelli, and also Donna Roma, to whom he alludes as a woman who holds illicit relations with the Prime Minister, and who enriches herself at the expense of the suffering people. The guests take their leave, and Roma and Bonelli are left alone. She is bitterly resentful of Rossi's insinuations. A plan of revenge comes to her, and she requests Bonelli not to molest him and leave his punishment to her. The Prime Minister acquiesces to Roma's request. Donna Roma visits Rossi in his apartment, whither he has been borne by his enthusiastic followers, and in the course of the conversation he is baffled by a strange resemblance between Roma and a girl he knew in the past.

As the story develops, Donna Roma's studio is disclosed, where she indulges her fondness for sculpture. Here Rossi comes daily to sit for a portrait bust of himself that Roma is at work on. A passionate love has sprung up between them, and Rossi has told Roma all the secrets of his past, through which is also disclosed her identity as the little Roma of his childhood. But Roma has no longer any intention of securing his downfall. All ideas of revenge have long faded from her mind, and she has learned to love Rossi.

David Rossi publishes a proclamation announcing a great meeting of the people at the Coliseum. Baron Bonelli, in the meantime, has ordered the police to charge the meeting, open fire upon the agitators, and in the confusion to kill Rossi, and thus rid Italy of him forever. Roma learns of this plot, and just as Bonelli's order is about to be executed, she arrives at the Coliseum, and throws herself before Rossi to shield him from the expected attack. In the resulting panic Roma and David flee to safety. They are hastily and secretly married and connive at David's immediate escape from Italy. Baron Bonelli hears of the marriage and scornfully asks Roma whether she confessed her true relations with him to David. He urges her to annul the marriage, but she tells him that her life now belongs to David.

One of the charming scenes that follows is that in which Roma visits His Holiness, Pius XI, in the Vatican Gardens. On the promise of immunity from punishment other than banishment from the country, Baron Bonelli has prevailed upon the Pope to induce Roma to cause the return and identification of Rossi. Assured of the ultimate security of her husband, Roma writes, urging his return and explaining his safety. When Rossi, acceding to Roma's wishes, touches Italian soil, he is arrested and brought before Bonelli. Roma also is present, and now realizes Bonelli's perfidy. In furious wrath, David denounces Roma for betraying him and, unable to bear the sneers of Bonelli, turns upon him and kills him. With a parting curse upon Roma, David escapes. To shield Rossi, Roma accepts the guilt of the crime, is arrested and imprisoned in the Castle of St. Angelo.

David, a shattered soul, with all hope gone, wanders aimlessly about, until Destiny directs him to the bronze doors of the Vatican, where a monk finds him weak and unconscious and brings him into the Pope's palace. The chain of circumstances which drew together the Pope and Rossi gradually reveal them to be father and son. Rossi tells his long, sad story to his father, who in turn tells him of the sacrifice Roma had made for him in accepting his guilt, and that even now she is waiting in the shadow of death for her sentence. Eventually the Pope secures Roma's pardon, and in the final scenes we find Rossi seeking Roma in the Castle of St. Angelo, announcing to her her freedom and his, and preparing to begin life anew together.

THE ACCOUNTING (Essanay—Three Parts—Feb. 18).—Gordon Bannock, a U. S. secret service operator, is commissioned by his chief to get certain papers bearing upon the alliance of two European principalities that are of vital importance. Bannock, in the disguise of an interpreter, gains admission to a council of officials of Retrograd and Galla, bent on forming an alliance. He hears the entire proceedings, interpreting for the officials. After the council is concluded he steals the treaty papers and flees. Olga Petroff, the cleverest spy of Retrograd, is called to recover the papers. She heads off Bannock, bribes an inn keeper to lame Bannock's horse, which forces him to appeal for shelter at a peasant's cottage whither Olga has preceded him. She pretends to be Velvia, daughter of the peasant couple. Bannock is charmed by the girl's simple beauty. Suddenly soldiers are heard approaching. Bannock reveals himself to Gondine, who denounces the government of Retrograd and promises to help him.

Bannock conceals himself in the wood. The soldiers try to force Gondine to reveal the hiding place of Bannock, and when he refuses slays him and his wife. Bannock hears the shots and returns to the cottage to find the soldiers gone and Velvia sobbing over the bodies of the peasants. He thinks she now is alone in the world and asks her to marry him. She consents. After the marriage they take refuge in an inn. Olga snatches the papers from Bannock's hands and two of her aids cover him with guns. She then tells him it was all a trick, all the occurrences had been planned by herself to trick him out of the papers. Though she has really fallen in love with Bannock, she fights down her feelings and rushes off with the papers to Sargall. When she turns them over to him it is found the papers are blank. Bannock had concealed the real papers under the carpet in his room.

Realizing that his wife will be the object of Sargall's wrath, when he finds the papers are blank, Bannock follows her and is on the balcony outside of Sargall's room when the blank papers are delivered. Sargall gives Olga the alternative of suffering the penalty of a spy or submitting to his love. Bannock leaps through the window and overpowers Sargall. Olga throws herself into her husband's arms and says she will flee with him. At the point of a revolver Bannock forces Sargall to accompany them in an automobile and pass them by the guards until they are out of the country. He then forces him out of the machine and to walk back, while Olga and he flee on to safety.

RUNAWAY JUNE (Episode 4—Two Parts—Feb. 3).—June's headquarters at Mrs. Beales' boarding-house became known to both Ned Warner and Gilbert Blye. Fortunately June realizes this. Leaving Marie to gather up their belongings, the runaway bride hurries to a nearby hotel, telling her maid to follow. She is pursued at a safe distance by Blye. As June enters the Hotel Daniel, "Shanks" McGee, the newsboy in the lobby, scents "detecatiff" stuff. Later, when both Blye and Ned in turn appear, the latter demanding to see her, the boy decides to use his wits in the game at the first opportunity. Meanwhile, the bell-boy also has been catching on to things. So he goes up to June's room and suggests his mother's home as a safe retreat. June gladly accepts the plan, and with the bell-boy's help she escapes through the servants' entrance. Below stairs Ned's and Mrs. Blye's detectives have insulted a Frenchman with a black vandyke, whom they mistake for Gilbert Blye. After they are gone "Shanks" McGee, seeing Blye himself enter the hotel with "Tommy" Thomas on his arm, puts two and two together, tears after the detectives and tells them that the man they are seeking is now in the lobby. But Blye, though taken by surprise, is more than a match for the detectives. With three well-directed piston-like blows he sends them sprawling—and then he and "Tommy" Thomas, having learned of June's escape, leave the place.

June, meanwhile, through an employment agency has found a position as governess to little Dolly Wiles. She is very happily occupied until Mr. Wiles, through the extravagance of Mrs. Wiles—who is a pretty, vapid, money-loving sort of wife—goes bankrupt. Then she returns to the employment agency. Entering, she does not see Gilbert Blye, who quickly steps behind a screen. The address given her by the manageress is one which the man with the black vandyke has handed to the woman with explicit instructions only five minutes previously.

ITALA.

THE TREASURER OF THE LOUZAT'S (Four Parts).—Lydia, daughter of the younger branch of the ancient family of Louzat, on her eighteenth birthday is in the garden. A man steps out of the bushes and hands her a message, telling mysteriously of a super-important secret hidden in an unnamed massive volume bearing her family's ancestral arms. Count Gerard, her uncle, feigns to pay no heed to the communication but secretly searches in the library. Failing, he decides that in the majestic castle of the senior branch of the family, with whom he is at enmity, he must seek.

Using as an excuse for Gerard's call the introduction of his beautiful niece, Count Jules receives them courteously. The latter finds that his interest in his sweet kinswoman melts the rancor of the years. Returning from the garden with her, they confront Count Gerard in futile and furious quest. Gerard slinks away under Jules' fiery denunciation. Lydia evinces sympathy for Jules. To get her out of his way, Gerard sends her to convent confinement. Here fate blindly leads to the solving of the secret. She is apprehended and her guardians, informing Gerard, lock her in her room, unknowing that in the struggle Lydia had torn from the page the few lines whose knowledge would have saved Gerard his life, when, with masked accomplices, he attacks Jules in his castle and finds in the subterranean shrine a treasure enormous.

How by deft trick and adroit scheming Lydia wins her way to liberty, arriving in time to revive her Jules from the unconsciousness of brutal blows; how they found Gerard and his man buried under the avalanche of jewels and gold; how love joined the rival families forms a motion picture of thrilling throbs and tender charm.

KRITERION SERVICE.

interferes. Randall, infuriated, demands that Marjorie's father pay the note at once. Cross asks for a few days in which to obtain the money. Randall refuses, and demands the money at once. Richard decides to do one more job and that evening breaks into Randall's bank and secures the note. Cross pays the note and Richard mails the now paid note back to Randall. Marjorie promises to marry Richard at his promise never to steal again. The father consents to their marriage.

THE UNLOADED '45 (C. K.).—A young man, overwhelmed in debt by the extravagance of his wife, to forget his worries joins a poker game with several of his friends. One of the men wins continuously. His way home leads through the woods. The young husband, aware of this fact, advises him to carry a revolver and thereby hands him one. It is unloaded. He decides to take a short cut through the woods and hold his friend up, as he knows he will not be injured, the revolver being unloaded.

Meanwhile the other man has met a party of friends who advise him to see whether the revolver is loaded. Finding that it is not, they load it up for him and send him on his way. When he is held up, not realizing who the highwayman is, he fires a shot and kills him. When the wife learns of her husband's death, she admits that it was her folly and extravagance that caused the tragedy.

A DISAPPOINTED SUITOR (Thistle).—Fred and Rena leave on their honeymoon, much to the disgust of the boob, who has been rejected by Rena and maltreated by Fred. The boob is the local constable and decides to keep an eye on Fred. Fred trades an old cow for an automobile. The boob sees him take the car from the garage, and starts out to catch and arrest Fred on a charge of theft. He is finally arrested himself for speeding. He gets a jail sentence and is much chagrined when he learns that Fred was owner of the car.

POOR LITTLE RICH MAN (Punchinello).—Mr. Bigbilt, who suffers from indigestion, resents Tom Gray's attentions to his daughter, Flora. The two young people conspire and see to it that Bigbilt is sent to a sanitarium run by Dr. Soakum.

Gray gets a position from Soakum as an attendant. After many hardships Bigbilt agrees to give Gray anything he desires if he will help him escape. The two men make a getaway and ultimately arrive at Bigbilt's home. Gray asks for Flora's hand in marriage and Bigbilt lives up to his promise.

THE BIGOT (Two Parts—Santa Barbara).—Deacon Witherspoon is stern and bigoted in his religious beliefs. He lives with his ward, Dora, and his son, John, in a small village. John, a lad of high spirit, frets under the constraint exercised by his father and longs to break away. Dick Harris, a young sportsman from the city, arrives in the village and acquaints John with the temptations of wine and cards. The next morning he is discovered by his father who orders him out of the house. He leaves, promising Dora he will send for her as soon as he finds work in the city. Months pass and no word is heard from John. Dora is afraid her condition will be discovered, and soon after it is. The deacon, not knowing it is his son who did the wrong, orders her out of the house.

Five years elapse and we see John in a saloon brawl. We then see Dora, ill and her little boy playing beside her. Going to his mother's bedside and getting no reply to his childish inquiries, he goes in search of aid. The child walks in front of an automobile and John saves him. They enter the machine and are driven back to the address given by the child. There a recognition follows and Dora and John are married. Dick, who is the owner of the automobile that ran down the child, goes back to the country and tells the deacon of his narrow-mindedness. He is more than sorry for his cruelty and is forgiven by Dora and John.

NONE SO BLIND (Two Parts—Trump).—Evelyn Blake, a nurse, is the niece of Acton Sears, a miser. Evelyn becomes interested in the widow Carew, a charity patient. Evelyn appeals to her uncle for money, but unable to soften his heart, she pawns her jewels in order to obtain the money. When she arrives at the widow's house she finds her dead from the shock of a foreclosure notice presented by her uncle.

Meanwhile Seth, the widow's only son, goes to Sear's house for revenge. Sears, fearing the young man, strikes him across the eyes with a poker, thereby blinding him. Arriving home, and at the bedside of his mother, he calls down a curse on Seth and all his kin. Evelyn takes Seth to to the hospital and in a short time they are infatuated with one another.

Later Sears dies and Evelyn, sole heiress, gives the head doctor of the hospital money in order that Seth may undergo an operation for the restoration of his eyesight. Evelyn leaves the hospital, leaving behind a note for Seth. Seth, his eyesight now recovered, is heartbroken over the desertion of his nurse. He determines, with the money left from the operation, to pay off the mortgage on his home. He goes to Sears' house to pay the money and, never having seen Evelyn, does not recognize her. They are finally brought together by a clasping of the hands and they pledge their love.

THE PAINTED ANARCHIST (Alhambra).—The town artist draws a picture of an anarchist with a bomb in his hand. So realistic is the picture that the anarchist comes to life and pursues the hapless artist. After a series of side-splitting adventures we see the bomb explode and the anarchist and the harassed artist hanging from a telegraph pole.

HIS PARTNER'S SACRIFICE (Two Parts—Navajo).—Bill Dwyer and Tom Eustace are partners of the North Star Mine. They both love Alice Dowling, and she, in turn, admires both, but finally marries Tom. Their son is named after Bill. Jim Sykes locates a cross "lode" on the North Star and Tom demands its removal. Sykes refuses. In the quarrel that follows, Tom accidentally kills Sykes. Bill, who has witnessed the accident, takes the blame and is arrested. At the trial Billy, seeing that Tom is determined to tell the truth and knowing it will destroy the happiness of Alice and the baby, pleads guilty. Tom's intention is abortive and Bill is convicted of manslaughter.

A short time later Tom assists Bill to escape and before parting they agree their signal will be The Sign of the Star. Bill continually hounded takes refuge in a mission and becomes a monk.

Twenty years pass and little Billie, now grown to manhood, has prospered and been accepted by Nell Martin. During this entire length of time Tom has faithfully put aside Bill's share of the money derived from the mine. Billie searches for Bill Dwyer, now Father Dwyer, and he gives Billy the money his father had put aside for him. Billy, now having no use for the money, gives it to little Billie as a wedding present.

WIRE FOR TERRITORY—FIRST TIME OFFERED

YOU CANNOT BE NEUTRAL

YOU MUST BE ON ONE SIDE OR THE OTHER

. ??? WHICH SIDE ARE YOU ON ???

Are you one of the great army of satisfied Mirroroide users, who are reaping the benefits resulting from an act of sound business judgment and common sense? OR—are you one of the class who never succeed, but keep the auctioneer and the bankruptcy courts busy?

The one means that your greatest ambitions to become a successful exhibitor will be realized. Remember you cannot place your expectations of the results obtained from using Mirroroide too highly.

The other means failure, and you must admit it is not your aim in life to be classed with those who might have—but didn't. Why not join the Mirroroide army now, and be a sucess? Send for large, free samples and prove our claims.

Mirroroide Is Manufactured Under Basic Patents. We Will Prosecute All Infringers.

Others are—why don't you get your full benefit of the many attending and passing your show? To do this you must have a magnet there, and the greatest magnet is that which attracts the eye, emitting a pleasing aroma, permeating the atmosphere, creating appetites that make the giving up of nickels and dimes a secondary consideration. Can you think of anything that will do this the equal of an attractive Peanut Roaster and Popcorn Popper? You know that most people emerge from a play-house with a desire to eat something, and it is worth your while to make further investigation. Send for catalogue P.W. and look it over. It shows over 40 styles, ranging in price from $10.00 to $1,000.00—steam, electric, spring and hand power. Terms liberal.

TEPCO SIGNS ARE S. R. O. SIGNS

They're the snappy kind—the kind that attract. In clear, bright colors, they will carry your message to the crowds.

Tepco Enameled Signs are made in all sizes—from the large display sort to the small kind that take the place of the expensive cardboard signs that get soiled so quickly.

Tepco Signs are durable. They stand up under all kinds of weather. Can be quickly cleaned with a damp cloth—always bright and attractive. They last practically a lifetime because they're made by fusing special vitreous enamel on 20-gauge steel at a temperature of from 1800 degrees to 2000 degrees.

DANDY SET FOR $5.00

Get this set of 12 Tepco Signs for $5.00. It consists of three signs reading "TODAY," one for each day of the week and two "COMING." All in strong white letters on a bright red background. These signs can be erected permanently or quickly thumb-tacked in position. Get them now and know Tepco Quality from experience.

Mr. Exhibitor—When buying a machine from your dealer, be sure you get a machine made of the best material, not of soft die cast parts used by some manufacturers today.

Your dealer may advise buying such a cheap made machine because there's a larger commission in it for him and such a machine will only give service about one year, then you are compelled to buy another (the dealer says a good customer). You should protect yourself by demanding a machine that is made of the best material and every part made in its own factory and fully guaranteed, such as the MOTIOGRAPH. Stockton's Scriptwriting Service

To aid those who wish to guard against the formation of bad writing habits, or who wish to estimate their progress, I offer the following service:

Script Criticism For a fee of two dollars for each reel, I will read your manuscript and write a personal letter, pointing out the faults of plotting, technical development, manuscript preparation, etc. Sometimes I can help you to make the script salable, but I do not guarantee a sale. I do not revise manuscript; I do not typewrite it, nor do I offer it for sale. I simply write you a letter that tells you what the trouble is.

Plot Estimates If your stories do not sell and you want to know why, send me five synopses and one full script. I will criticise the script and tell you whether it is your plot or your development that is wrong. The fee for this service is $5 for the five synopses and additional plot. Synopses must not run more than 300 words each. Send a synopsis of your undeveloped plot and fee of one dollar and you will be advised as to whether it will pay you to develop the same.

Please Note My fees do not include envelopes or return postage. Send prepaid and self addressed return envelope and remit in New York exchange; not local checks. I reserve the right to return unread (with fee) any story or plot that does not warrant treatment. All scripts must be typewritten.

The Lesson of Success

When a piece of machinery, made for service and not for show, becomes an immediate success and remains a success, does it not tell anything of the merit of the article?

Can any machine go into extensive use and enjoy continued popularity if it does not render service that is satisfactory?

If success from its first appearance, and constantly extending, means anything to you, you will consider the wonderful record for many years of POWER'S CAMERAGRAPH No. 6A before you purchase a motion picture projecting machine.

FLICKERINGS from FILM LAND

By KITTY KELLY

"HIS NEW JOB."

Essanay.

Charles Chaplin.....Himself
Ben Turpin.....Himself
Others .....Themselves

PRINT yields precedence to picture, for nobody can speak better for himself than Charles Chaplin, even the [illegible] of the silent variety. He has emerged from the chaotic seethings attendant upon his important comic divertisements for the first time under the Indian head banner, and he is just as funny a Charlie Chaplin as he has ever been. It is hard to conceive of his being any funnier.

In this display he is a little nicer than he has been in some Keystone confections, but not too nice to spoil his humorous appeal. It is absolutely impossible not to laugh at him during about ten-ninths of his antics in his disaster-attended search for a new job—the small point in which is evidenced the only irony in the picture. Chaplin, "the world's greatest comedian," in such sad search for a where to ply his antics!

The rest is slapstick, broad and quick—and I should say, hard for the performers. Over Ben Turpin's protestant physique Chaplin finally climbs to an audience with the powers within, from which he is plunged to the studio where his mission seems to be a stage rustling sort until he has knocked everybody over with a plank and generally disarranged all the feelings that are feelingable.

His next essay is as leading man, and, truth to tell, he leads the performance into uproarious laughter for all who will look. If one doesn't want to laugh at Mr. Chaplin in his Essanayized Keystoneism, one had best stay out of visual range. The two reels are a genuine rollic of fun which should send warm flutters of financial delight through the Essanay veins. Mr. Chaplin is a real card.

Madison Street Chuckles Over Chaplin.

"Tis given to a person to make a street smile as it was yesterday to Charles Chaplin to set Madison a-chuckle. In the stretch between Dearborn and Fifth avenue he occupied at least four centers of jocularity for the shifting crowds all day long who in the warmth of his sunshine forgot wet feet an drabbled tempers. Three of the centers were his Essanay [illegible] in "His New Job," and [illegible] showing of

LASKY PRODUCTIONS PERMANENTLY LEAD

In JANUARY, 1914, the JESSE L. LASKY FEATURE PLAY CO. INC., had just come into existence and its FIRST PRODUCTION had NOT yet been completed.

In JANUARY, 1915, the LASKY CO., after a year of extraordinary achievement, made an unparalleled record by releasing FOUR (4) of the most important subjects in American photodramatic history:—

1-"THE GIRL OF THE GOLDEN WEST" ALL STAR LASKY-BELASCO CAST
2-EDITH TALIAFERRO IN "YOUNG ROMANCE"
3-MARGUERITE CLARK (COURTESY OF FAMOUS PLAYERS) IN "THE GOOSE GIRL"
4-EDWARD ABELES IN "AFTER FIVE"

The next release (Monday, Feb. 15TH) is another LASKY-BELASCO offering,

BLANCHE SWEET IN "THE WARRENS OF VIRGINIA"

We believe that

THE SUCCESS OF THE LASKY ORGANIZATION HAS BEEN ACCOMPLISHED BY CONSISTENT STRIVING FOR HIGH ARTISTIC IDEALS.

The public and the critical authorities have discerned these Artistic Ambitions of the LASKY Company. Certain appreciative statements which we would have hesitated to make on our own behalf, have been made by Mr. W. STEPHEN BUSH in his recent reviews of "Young Romance" and "The Goose Girl," published in the Moving Picture World.

CONCERNING "THE GOOSE GIRL" HE WRITES:—

One would have to be blind not to see the outlines of a new school of art in motion pictures in this and many other LASKY productions. "The Goose Girl" is a splendid example of this new school of motion picture art. This new school specializes in beauty. In "The Goose Girl" this tendency triumphs all the way through. There are from first to last scenes pre-eminent for their artistic beauty finished in every detail, and possessed of an irresistable appeal. Some of the scenes remind one of great paintings that have suddenly sprung into life.

CONCERNING "YOUNG ROMANCE" HE SAYS:—

This production forever silences the claim that refined comedy cannot be conveyed via the screen. A more refined comedy has not been shown since the days of Moliere. Moreover it is American refined comedy. It is sparkling, exuberant, bubbling humor of our own country, condensed and trebly distilled, and an everlasting provocation to hearty laughter. Remarkable as has been the LASKY record in the film portrayal of noted dramatic subjects, this gem of honest, genuine human comedy deserves to rank with the best it has produced.

How to Make Money

by Lewis J. Selznick

No. 4

This series of articles is planned to make money for you—to show you why my ideas have succeeded—and why they will succeed for you if you will weigh each one carefully. Some of them will sound egotistical. I want them to—it's the only way I can drive home my arguments.

One of the things I have done has been to establish a department of education for our own sales force.

World Film has the livest crowd of managers and salesmen in the picture business, but I want them to be more than salesmen for film.

In charge of this special department I have put Mr. C. R. Seelye, a man who has worked up some of the most successful dealer co-operation campaigns in America.

His work is to teach our sales force how to apply advertising to help exhibitors get their business, so that when a man comes to talk World Film to you, he will talk not only features, but BUSINESS—how to make those pictures bring you the profit they should bring.

The Work of World Film does not end when you agree to take its service—it only starts.

ROBERT WARWICK in "ALIAS JIMMY VALENTINE," or LILLIAN RUSSELL in "WILDFIRE" will pack houses all over the country. So will WILTON LACKAYE in "THE PIT," or CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG in "THE DEEP PURPLE," or LEW FIELDS in "OLD DUTCH," or ANY of the great features on the World Film programme.

But the public cannot guess that you have them. YOU MUST TELL THEM SO, and that is the reason for C. R. Seelye—and the reason for my having the finest and most able advertising department in the picture business.

The greatest poster artists are used by the World Film Corporation. We have just issued a poster drawn by James Montgomery Flagg. One of the series for the "ADVENTURES OF A BOY SCOUT" is by J. C. Leyendecker. We employ under contract one of the finest poster artists in America, and our paper, heralds, books for newspaper ads, publicity and other advertising matter, are far in advance of anything ever offered before.

These things are all done with a selfish purpose—to build business for World Film. But the only way we can do it is to build business FOR YOU and TO MAKE MONEY FOR YOU.

PRESENTS

Edward S. Curtis' Great Epic Drama of the Primitive Indians

"IN THE LAND OF THE HEAD HUNTERS"

W. Stephen Bush, of the M. P. World, said of it:

"Mr. Curtis conceived this wonderful study in ethnology as an epic. It fully deserves the name, indeed it seemed to me that there was a most striking resemblance between the musical epics of Richard Wagner and the theme and treatment of this Indian epic. The fire dance, the vigil journey with its command of silence and chastity, the whole character of the Hero were most reminiscent of Parsifal and the Ring of the Nibelungs. I speak advisedly when I say that this production sets a new mark in artistic handling of films in which educational values mingle with dramatic interest."

A PAUL ARMSTRONG PLAY

"Alias Jimmy Valentine"

Presenting

ROBERT WARWICK

IN

"ALIAS JIMMY VALENTINE"

A Liebler Feature in 5 Acts

When "Alias Jimmy Valentine" played at Wallack's several years ago, it was one of the most talked of plays of the season.

It was successful mainly because of the strength and heart interest of the play and for its unique plot and story, which is ably reproduced in this great feature photo-play.

It will be a sensational feature—one of the biggest plays ever put into pictures.

Released February 22

What's A Kleptomaniac?

The Victim of an Excruciatingly Funny Disease
—funny, that is, if you're not the victim.

"A person of extraordinarily absent-minded tendencies and morbid impulses," says Noah Webster, but Noah Webster never had a sense of humor, anyhow.

"Stop Thief"

Five Parts

By CARLYLE MOORE

is the story of two self-confessed kleptomaniacs, two real crooks and a double wedding. It's founded on the Cohan & Harris farce and features an original cast including——

Mary Ryan

supported by such well known Broadway players as Harold Howard, Dan Moyles, Wm. Boyd, Auguste Burmester, Marguerite Boyd, Albert Tavernier and Della Connor —quite the best balanced, most thoroughly capable cast you have seen in motion pictures. Even the "bit" parts are done by actors—not "extras!"

"STOP THIEF" is a chuckle and a roar. It's the funniest story in film. And the events all transpire in an hour and a half, just about as rapidly as the film story itself passes by the aperture. Each scene is a new complication—a new laugh.
And the photography? That's an expected virtue in all features nowadays, but in "STOP THIEF" it's rarely beautiful—as clear and smooth-flowing as a mountain brook.

GEORGE KLEINE

An Edison 3-Act Feature Film
In Regular Service Every Week

The Great Renunciation Scene from

The 3-Part Feature "In Spite of All"

Mrs. Fiske's great stage success, released in REGULAR service Monday, March 1st, featuring

Gertrude McCoy, Robert Conness and Sally Crute

"In Spite of All," a stage play that made a great stage star greater—Mrs. Fiske—is the first of a notable line of fast-action feature plays to be released every week in the Edison regular service.

This play is a splendid example of the new cut-to-the-quick Edison policy of presenting only the big action moments of a play, no matter how rich is the opportunity to secure a "fat" padded film. This great stage play was in four acts. Most companies would have made it into a six or seven-reel feature as much had to be shown on the film that is only talked about on the stage.

But the Edison way of giving you hammered-down action, until the film fairly crackles with action, crammed this big, gripping story into three parts.

"In Spite of All" is a powerful story of a strong man battling between real love for his wife and the mysterious charm of a noted dancer who drags men on and down. Throughout the play, like a sinuous serpent, runs the subtle and hypnotic effect of a soul-dulling perfume used by the man-charmer who, however, provides a great surprise in the end.

Every week, a big three-reel feature. On alternate weeks a two-reel also, a feature in pull and appeal. And every week one-reel plays crisp with action.

EDISON SPECIAL SERVICE FEATURES

The droll funniness of Walter E. Perkins made "My Friend from India" a year-after-year stage success. He, himself, plays in the Edison 3-part ridiculously funny version. "Fantasma," a great blending of young romance, fantastic and funny adventure and fairyland beauty. The original Hanlon in his hole as Pico, the clown, and other noted actors in original roles. Both now ready—supplied through the special masterpiece service of the General Film Company.

Other Forthcoming Releases.

Augustus Phillips, Jean Dumar and Frank McGlynn in "From a Life of Crime," by Lee Arthur, the author of noted stage successes. 1000 feet, released February 23.

"The Life of Abraham Lincoln," by James Oppenheim, reviews dramatically a life full of great deeds, touching in pathos and tragic in the assassination. 2000 feet, released February 26.

Bessie Learn and Richard Tucker in "The Experiment," makes tense dramatic use of a hypnotized girl to avert a tragedy. 1000 feet, released February 27.

"Protecting Big Game," a beautiful picture and a story interestingly told of how the herds of elk in Idaho are protected by men on lonely vigils. 500 feet, released February 22.

"The Manufacture of Big Guns," like a story book in the way it tells how the United States makes mammoth man-eaters. Timely in interest because of the war. 500 feet, released February 24.

All Edison Films are passed upon by the National Board of Censorship and released through the General Film Co.'s Program.

The New Brand of Edison Comedy, Riotous and Rare

"Waddy and Arty"

(Alias Wadsworth and Housman)

A Comedy Team that hits the funnybone every time

The fun that this inimitable team of rib-ticklers make does not depend upon the thrashabout "humor" of gymnastic gyrations nor the crack of the slap stick. It's the fun that comes from cleverness.

"Waddy and Arty" are giving to the screen the class of genuine humor that made Weber and Fields of the stage a name to conjure laughs. It's the fun that comes bubbling up and over from a pair who enjoy the funniness like a boy at the circus.

This team just doubles the laughs. They pull out of every situation the snap of a dash of slap stick and pepper every foot of film with downright, infectuous laughs that spread from a giggle to a gurgle and end in a roar——music to the ears of the wise theatre manager who hears the clink of the dollars in that wiseacre saying of a successful magnate who said he always "sent 'em home laughing." "Waddy and Arty" bring 'em back laughing, too. Enuf sed.

Some "Waddy and Arty" (Wadsworth and Housman) Comedies.

Some Other Edison Comedies

"In the Plumber's Grip," 1000 feet. Released February 15. Bessie Learn cuts the pipes and floods the house in order that her plumber sweetheart will win out. It forces the marriage which takes place in a pool of water.

"The Pest of the Neighborhood," 500 feet. Released February 24. Billy, the goat, is the Pest and the star, and this pesky critter so stirs up the whole town with his appetite that he brings on a riot. A Laugh in every jump.

Facts and Comments

WE ARE glad to see the cartoon on the screen make such decided progress. The cartoon more than any other form of kinematographic work emphasizes the great similarity between the screen and the newspaper as mediums of expression. The moving picture cartoon is far more effective than any still cartoon can be. Now, has it occurred to the cartoonists to ask the police or any of the censors to obtain permission and approval for their cartoons before displaying them on the screen? We do not know how the censors in Pennsylvania and Ohio view the situation, but it is hard for us to believe that they would dare prosecute the man who publishes a cartoon on the screen without their permission. The last attempt to interfere with the liberty of the press occurred in Pennsylvania when Governor Pennypacker, stung to resentment by the daring of the cartoonists, tried to have an anti-cartoon law enacted. The measure was burned under an avalanche of ridicule and denunciation. At the same time the cartoonist is amenable to the law of the land. If he libels a man he may be punished, but under no conceivable circumstances may he be compelled to show his cartoons to censors before publishing them. The screen and the press work toward the same ends and with the same weapons, and they ought to enjoy the same franchises and share the same responsibilities.

A MEMBER of the Canadian Board of Censors claims to have been tempted by a bribe. In this country an attempt to bribe an official of the government is an indictable offence. Whatever the Canadian law on the subject may be, it is the duty of the censor to publish the name of the person who approached him with an offer of money for the violation of his official oath. In the absence of this information, the virtuous indignation of the official will be viewed with a degree of doubt.

THE example of the New York exhibitors in raising a substantial fund for the defeat of an absurd and unjust city ordinance may well be imitated everywhere. We hope that the long-expected amalgamation of the organizations within the State will now be no longer delayed. The politicians at Albany are busy and a censorship bill has been introduced in the assembly. Let the exhibitors of the State get together and kill the measure. If we do our full duty the bill ought never to be reported out of the committee. It is a curious circumstance and a significant one that the text of the New York bill is modeled exactly upon the Ohio measure. The sponsors of the Ohio law have done more injury to the industry than we are able to calculate.

THIS is the open season for the motion picture from the law-maker's point of view. In the old commonwealth of Massachusetts no less than fifteen bills have been introduced dealing with and more or less seriously affecting motion picture interests. Of course, no one suspects the pure patriotic and public-spirited motives behind all these bills. It's all for the general welfare. At the same time it is altogether probable that some of these bills will be retired very early in the legislative session.

WHY should teachers fight the motion pictures when the motion pictures are admittedly free from any moral objections? To forbid children to enter motion picture theaters is one thing, to make such a mandate effective is quite another thing. In a city on the Coast one enterprising exhibitor, having arranged a special children's program, went into the schools and distributed complimentary tickets inviting both pupils and teachers to attend. The Board of Education regarded this as an attempt to stampede the schools into the motion picture theaters. It was decided to check the enthusiasm of the children by withholding credits in all cases where the pupil went to the motion picture theaters too frequently to suit the teachers. The result is confusion and a serious danger to school discipline. The more rational way of dealing with the problem would be to compromise with the pupils and give them certain liberties, imposing at the same time certain responsibilities. The plan has worked well in many cities.

NEWS comes from Mexico and other Latin-American countries that the motion picture is seriously interfering with the popularity of bull fighting. If the motion picture has power to draw people away from this hideous sport so much more glory for the motion picture. Here in the North the motion picture is admittedly the greatest ally to sane temperance. There is no better justification for our love of and devotion to the motion picture than its clear ethical influence among individuals as well as among nations.

Danger Ahead

By W. Stephen Bush.

THE Smith-Hughes Federal Censorship Bill has been reported favorably by the House Committee on Education. This does not mean that the bill is likely to come up for final passage during the present session of Congress, but it does mean that the bill has secured a hold on the legislative calendar of Congress. It does mean that the friends of the measure have gained a running start. It does mean that at the next session of Congress the enemies of the bill are starting under a handicap. The fight against the measure will have to be made on the floor of the House. We think it improbable, but by no means impossible, that the bill will pass the House. It will then have to be dealt with in the Senate. There its chances of passage may be considered even less probable than in the House. It is doubtful whether it ever would receive the sanction of the President.

The chances, therefore, of the bill becoming a law seem remote. We are not stating this conclusion to encourage a false sense of security. On the contrary, we want to point out that the indifference and the neglect of the dominant factors in the industry are responsible for the advance of the Smith-Hughes Bill on the calendar of the House. A formidable lobby appeared before the House committee in favor of the bill. The advocates of the measure had conducted a vigorous campaign among the constituents of the Congressmen who compose the Committee on Education. We have no means of knowing how the committee stood in its vote on a favorable report to the House, but we are reasonably sure that the report was not unanimous and that some of the members stood by their arguments against the bill as voiced by them at the public hearing.

Now, it will help us a good deal to examine into the methods by which this victory for federal censorship was obtained. The head and front of the movement for a Federal Censorship is Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts, a man widely known in religious circles. We have no reason to cast any imputation upon his motives. Having come to the conclusion that the motion picture must be censored by Uncle Sam, Mr. Crafts, a clever strategist and manipulator, cast about for a suitable legislator to introduce his bill and to stand sponsor for it. He selected Congressman Hughes. Mr. Hughes is an amiable elderly gentleman of fine Southern type. He represents a Congressional district in the State of Georgia, where a Democratic nomination is equivalent to an election. Mr. Hughes is the chairman of the House Committee on Education. Now, the next step in the program was to "stimulate and accelerate public sentiment" in Mr. Hughes' Congressional district. Trust Rev. Mr. Crafts for that. As a stimulator and accelerator of public sentiment he is in a class with Hon. Lemuel E. Quigg, which is saying a good deal. At once the district of Mr. Hughes was flooded with literature pointing out that federal censorship of motion pictures was an imperative and immediate necessity. Voters were urged to write to their Congressman to demand such censorship forthwith.

Mr. Crafts, having cleared the road with this literary howitzer, followed up the attack by descending upon Georgia in his own proper person and holding forth on platforms, in churches and in schools on the absolute and urgent need of federal censorship. He is a plausible talker and enjoys the confidence of his audiences. Resolutions began to be passed everywhere in Georgia in favor of Mr. Crafts' plan of federal censorship. Copies of the resolutions were duly forwarded to the law-makers at Washington generally and to the men composing the House Committee on Education in particular. Rev. Mr. Crafts then extended the limits of his campaign and traveling through the South and the Southwest; he worked with great zeal and shrewd method to create "public sentiment" for federal censorship and to have proofs of such sentiment forwarded to the National Capitol, where it would do the most good. It is quite true that Mr. Crafts knows really nothing about motion pictures and that he is addicted to a recklessness of statement which, in a gentleman of a more secular calling, might be called by a harsher name. He is safe as long as he only speaks before lay audiences because they know just about as much as he does. To show how deeply versed Mr. Crafts is in moving picture lore, it is but necessary to state that he wanted exhibitors freed from the rule "compelling them to take so many reels per week," and that in this city, speaking in the rooms of a Y. M. C. A., he said he had been unable to get educational motion pictures, when every man with the least degree of knowledge is aware of the fact that the supply of educational pictures vastly exceeds the demand. If the Rev. Mr. Crafts had attempted to enlighten himself on conditions before lending the prestige of his reputation to such a statement he would have avoided doing the motion picture men a great injustice.

The question now before our motion picture industry is this: Are we going to allow the Federal Censorship Bill to become a law by default? The only protest made at the hearing in Washington against the Smith-Hughes measure was made by THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD. Not a single producer, not a single exchangeman, not a single exhibitor appeared before the committee at the first hearing. At the second hearing just one company was represented. Contrast this supine indifference with the ceaseless systematic agitation of Mr. Crafts. Do you wonder that this measure threatening to do infinite harm to every branch of the industry has advanced in the halls of legislation? Can you doubt that your continued indifference will result disastrously? Think for a moment what the Smith-Hughes measure means. It means that you, producers, and you, exchangemen, cannot enter the channels of interstate commerce until your film has the official O. K. of the federal officials, whose power in the premises is absolute. Do you realize that all contracts for the sale and the leasing of films will hereafter be subject not only to the approval of State and municipal censors, but to censors appointed by the U. S. Government? Can you imagine the vast machinery which must be created to enforce federal censorship? Are you under any delusions as to who will pay for the cost of running this machinery?

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD will do what it can to aid in an intelligent and dignified campaign against this measure. We are making arrangements for the making of slides with short, terse arguments against motion picture censorship. These slides will be sent postpaid to all exhibitors who ask for them, and they will be furnished at cost. These slides will contain such sentiments as this: "Censorship Strikes at Freedom of Expression and is Therefore un-American." When this campaign of slides has prepared the soil we will send petitions to all exhibitors who care to ask for them, and these petitions signed by voters who attend picture shows may then be forwarded to Washington. Look out for our next announcement in the campaign against federal censorship.

Impotent Appropriations

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

FROM the thin and colorless lips of those who have nothing of their own to offer, not the semblance of an idea, comes the cry "famous" when any old theatrical remnant from the bargain counter of a play agency is displayed on the screen. Famous! That means something or somebody very prominent in public knowledge and attention—"report or opinion widely diffused" is the definition of famous—but Broadway productions are forgotten the day after they die. Motion-picture producers who are widely known are actually famous. They are famed for the product they turn out and some of it is infamous.

Those producers who are establishing a quality of product, not only by adequate treatment of plays, but in visualizing stories of some intrinsic merit with scientific and artistic skill, are building great foundations for the fortunes they are bound to win. There is, however, a weak spot in their present methods, and it is not exactly what is known as plagiarism. It is justifiable to appropriate what is worth while in literary and dramatic compositions no longer before the public, but reconstruction for the screen is far from being mere rearrangement. It is regeneration.

Some of us are not inclined to fall back upon other authors for material. It has always seemed to me like dissipating much time and energy in fruitless reading, so little is there to be advantageously utilized. My own tendency is to draw from the exhaustless resources of observation and imagination. Thousands of incidents in the passing show of actual existence suggest little stories, and the questions we are trying to solve in our ceaseless struggle suggest themes for large dramas, which creative fancy may drape to suit the subject. But I cannot ignore the benefits of reading, especially such reading as puts one in touch with storehouses of accumulated knowledge. Nor can I lose sight of the mental training involved in study, pushing, as it does, observation into unexplored fields of thought.

The trouble is that men of creative imagination and keen powers of observation are rarely engaged in the work of regenerating the so-called "famous" plays and novels. That work is turned over to directors or to amateurs capable only of impotent appropriation. The author of any novel or stage play above mediocrity was capable of putting vitality into his structure, a vitality not to be preserved, rather to be disturbed, by rearrangement of his story for screen purposes. It is probably on that account that the characters in most adaptations move about as though impelled by hypnotic suggestion, not by the volition of a warm and throbbing individuality.

How is there to be anything vital in a story whose characters have no souls? Who is to put souls into them? Men of no inspiration? When you watch a screen story with only slight interest, a sort of mild curiosity, such as that aroused by the wax figures in the Eden Musee, simply extend your obseravtions into the depths of the thing and you will find that it lacks inspiration. What does the adaptation of a once-famous work of fiction amount to without inspiration, the breath of its life? It amounts to nothing more than a useless and impotent appropriation.

Plot, action, situation, all these are but useful externals. The essence of the whole play is that consciousness which makes experience possible for the characters. It is the workings and manifestations of mind that the audience wishes to see. A really powerful play gives rise to a state of individual coma in the audience. Its members no longer live in their own little worlds, but wholly in that of the leading characters of the story. Souls in the audience are a-dreaming. They leave their bodies and live in close fellowship with the souls of those whose experiences are being depicted.

We do not go to the picture show to see a lot of figures set in motion by a stage director. It is very largely due to the actors themselves that there is any life at all in the screen portrayals. Accustomed as they are to manifest feeling by an infinity of devices, they manage, at least, to infuse some personality into their roles, but they would be enabled to stamp each character with suitable individuality if capable authorship was back of their work.

Men and women turn from the daily grind of "eat, sleep, button and unbutton" that they may be invigorated anew by mental or physical diversion. They turn to the sports or they turn to the story. They really recuperate, the processes of nature going on as during sleep, when their attention is completely drawn away from themselves by what is presented to their minds. The successful screen portrayal is the absorbing one. It may offer the noblest of tragedies or the lightest of farces—the main purpose is to prevent too much self-contemplation among those who attend the show. It must carry their thoughts away from themselves, incidentally ennobling, purifying, encouraging or enlivening those thoughts.

We get up in the morning and button our clothes. We feed the stomach, glance at the news and go to work. We drudge through the day and exchange a few remarks about business, socialism and the weather with acquaintances. All this commonplace rests like a fog on the mind and heart. We become dully aware of mental and moral stupidity and long for a stimulus of some kind, physical or spiritual. We seek a healthful escape from monotony and go to the picture show with a hope that something will be exhibited on the screen to take us away from our tiresome selves. In such mood do we seek an impotent appropriation of the once-was? Our minds, like our bodies, cannot be nourished and sustained by stale food that, having lost flavor value, is not made over with any new relish.

There is such a thing as justifiable appropriation for the screen, what has served in other mediums, but the material used must be infused with new life when it is given new form. Shakespeare drew from all the published resources of his day quite as well as from his wondrous imagination. If a Shakespeare of to-day were to take any one of the Broadway shinplasters off the boards about the time it was ready to drop from sheer inability to hang on, he could infuse it with a spirit so great that it would endure the ages, all by the magical touch of true genius. He would TRANSFORM it.

It is that skill which makes the playwright. His to seize some signal and imperative message and treat it as becomes an artist and a craftsman. It appears at times as though the technique of a veritable genius is the supreme glory of his art, but it is only a bright thread in an intricate fabric, interwoven in the beautiful pattern of his mind. His to crystallize the atmosphere of his age and give form to ideals that are in close accord with the spirit of his times. His to illumine human experience. His to provide its inspiration.

Claude Patin Back From France

Secretary of the Eclair Company Tells Harrowing Story of the War—Reports Good Outlook for Eclair.

M. CLAUDE PATIN, secretary of the Eclair Company, whose recent return to America was noted in the Moving Picture World, gives a very hopeful view of motion picture conditions abroad and promises some interesting developments affecting the Eclair Company in America. It will be remembered that Mr. Patin, with Mr. Jourjon and other French motion picture men in New York, returned to France at the beginning of the war to offer their services to their country. Mr. Patin was engaged for several months as an interpreter with the British contingent and later was assigned to the transport department having charge of the disposition of hospital trains returning from the front. He spoke feelingly of the soul-stirring sights while in this latter detail. At the junction where he was stationed there passed daily a constant line of trains bearing the wounded to hospitals in the rear from the field hospitals on the firing line—an experience that one does not care to repeat in a lifetime, he concluded.

M. Claude Patin.

After some weeks of this service Mr. Patin decided to apply for more active service, but upon presenting himself to the recruiting officers he was ordered to take a medical examination and was rejected for services at the front on account of defective vision. "After this announcement," said Mr. Patin, "I assured the officer in charge that I was still a good marksman and could shoot straight even though I did have to wear glasses, but they told me there was no necessity. Then I requested to be assigned to some other duty, but I was told that more men were available to run errands than were needed and that I would be excused from further service. As there was nothing for me to do in France I came back to New York."

Regarding Mr. Jourgon, president of the Eclair Company, Mr. Patin said that he was undoubtedly on the firing line. "I saw him the day before I sailed at the headquarters of his regiment; he had been promoted to the office of first lieutenant and his regiment was about to proceed to the firing line. I also learned that Paul Herneau, of the Lux Company, was in Paris connected with the Secret Service department. He wished me to convey his regards to the Moving Picture World and all his friends in New York."

On the subject of the motion picture business Mr. Patin said that it was rather quiet in France, but that in England business was extremely good, especially for American pictures, which were selling in quantities more than double that of before the war. "Our business in France is very quiet on account of the war, although we now have three producing companies working in our studios. The factory, though, is busy making shells for the French army as are all the other motion picture factories in France.

"When the war began all picture theaters were closed, but recently the Government decided to permit them to open, half of the receipts going to the Red Cross. The pictures shown are mostly war scenes. This concession was brought about by the picture men, who succeeded in proving to the Government that it would be better for the people to have some form of amusement.

"Though all agencies of German companies in France are being held in trust by the Government until the war is over, all our branches in Germany and Austria have been confiscated by the Germans. All our representatives and those of the other French companies got out of Germany in time, the man in Vienna was arrested. Our interests in Turkey are safe. The Eclair business here is quiet now, but we hope to have something to say soon. We have companies working in Tucson and Los Angeles with the factory at Fort Lee.

"Within a few weeks we hope to have something interesting to announce, but I am not ready to make those plans public yet."

Universal Earthquake Views

BY SHOWING views of the earthquake at Avezzano and other points in Central Italy at the Strand Theater on the night of Monday, February 1, the Universal Animated Weekly scored one of the cleanest cut "beats" of the year. The "Big U" cameraman got to Avezzano early on the morning after the 'quake, filmed the scenes of destruction and the rescue of the injured and immediately put back to Rome, where the films were put aboard train to Paris. From Paris the films were transhipped to London just in time to catch the boat leaving Liverpool for New York.

By catching this boat the Universal cameraman on the job in Italy enabled Jack Cohn, manager of the Animated Weekly, to show the views of the great earthquake to Broadway a full week before the arrival of the next boat from Italy. The Universal's views came in on January 31 and the "Big U" kept a man on the docks all day waiting for the arrival of the ship so that there was no delay. The film was rushed in a taxicab to the Imp studios where it was developed and printed and from the studios it was shipped into the regular Animated Weekly and hurried over to the Strand Theater. The patrons who saw the film on Monday night little realized the quick work which made it possible for them to see moving pictures of the disaster even before the New York newspapers received the first still photographs of the earthquake.

John Tippett, manager of the Trans-Atlantic Film Co., the European branch of the Universal Film Mfg. Co., assured the Universal that the views of the 'quake were the first to arrive in London and that the next shipment of 'quake film came along two days later, too late to make connections with the boat on which the "Big U" shipment was made. The manager of the Universal branch of the Animated Weekly in Rome personally came to Paris and London with the film and did not permit the film to get out of his sight until he handed it to a well-tipped purser aboard the New York bound steamship.

"ON THE NIGHT STAGE" A MUTUAL RELEASE.

In answer to many inquiries coming from exhibitors, the New York Motion Picture Corporation wishes to announce that its four-reel feature "On the Night Stage," featuring Robert Edeson, Wm. S. Hart and Rhea Mitchell, will be released through the Mutual Film Corporation in pursuance with their new policy of releasing features on the regular program.

UNIVERSAL CHARTERS SPECIAL TRAIN.

Joe Brandt, manager of the home office of the Universal Film Mfg. Co., has completed arrangements with the Santa Fe Railroad for a special train which will leave Chicago on March 8 for Universal City. The journey from Chicago to the coast will occupy seven days, including stopovers at Kansas City, Denver and Albuquerque, permitting the party to arrive in Universal City early in the morning of the opening day. On March 15, at high noon, President Carl Laemmle will formally throw open the gates of the only moving picture municipality in the world.

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

Many Massachusetts Laws

Fifteen Bills Offered in State Legislature to Regulate Motion Pictures.

THERE is every indication that the legislative committee of the Massachusetts Motion Picture Exhibitors' League will be kept very busy this year. At the present writing, fifteen bills which are adverse to the moving picture industry in the state have been filed at the State House for the consideration of the legislature.

The most important of these bills is one submitted to the Senate by James R. Hamm, who petitions that an intermission be required in the operation of moving picture machines. This bill provides that no picture shall be projected upon a screen for a period exceeding thirty minutes and that every theater must furnish some other form of amusement or entertainment for at least ten minutes between films. This act, if passed, will repeal all other and violations are subject to a fine of not less than $50 or imprisonment for not less than six months.

Henry J. Mahoney has filed a petition with the House of Representatives relative to the employment of minors in theatrical performances. It permits such employment if the children can furnish evidence of their ability to read, write or spell in the English language.

Lewis R. Sullivan has sent a petition to the House of Representatives asking that theaters be compelled to remain closed until five o'clock in the afternoon on Sundays instead of being permitted to open at one o'clock.

The bill of C. C. Carstens, who asks that the State Board of Labor and Industries have jurisdiction over moving picture films, was reviewed in last week's issue of the World.

Two bills have been sent to the House relative to the sale of tickets in places of public amusement and another bill has been filed to regulate the sale. Arthur W. Clark asks that no theater be allowed to sell tickets for a sum greater than the advertised price of the show. William F. Doyle, in his petition, demands that the following words be printed on all tickets, "This ticket cannot be resold for more than the price printed hereon." James F. Farrell's bill for the regulation of the sales of tickets provides that the original price of the ticket be printed in type of not less than ten point.

Eugene P. Cornell has filed a bill for legislation relative to permits for special exhibitions of moving pictures in the city of Boston. This bill provides that a permit shall not be required where only cellulose acetate films not more than one inch and a quarter in width in machines using only an inclosed incandescent lamp are used.

Deputy Chief George C. Neal of the Massachusetts District Police has filed a petition asking that the owners of certain buildings be required to equip their property with automatic sprinklers.

Legislation, relative to the use of cinematographs, is sought in a petition filed by Eugene P. Cornell. A bill relative to the granting of licenses for the keeping of explosives and inflammable fluids in cities has been filed by Joseph F. Delahanty. A bill which prohibits theater patrons from standing after all seats are taken has been submitted by James F. Farrell.

John F. McCarty seeks a censorship of moving pictures by the district police. This bill provides that the police inspect every film and that the police chief may appoint 3 inspectors for such work.

The A. O. Hall bill relative to the operation of moving picture machines in certain public places provides that it shall be unlawful to operate moving picture machines in any public building or hall or other place devoted to any religious, charitable, scientific, literary or other purposes.

The petition of David M. Claghorn provides for the establishment of a board of public amusement in Boston. This board is to consist of three unpaid members, two shall be selected by the mayor from a list of names submitted by the Chamber of Commerce, Public Library trustees and the school committee. Each is allowed to submit three names. The mayor may grant licenses upon the approval of this board, but there shall not be charged a fee exceeding $100 for such license when the exhibition is given in a building licensed as a theater.

PENNSYLVANIA ORGANIZERS ACTIVE.

The new Pennsylvania State League of Exhibitors has issued the following appeal to the exhibitors of the Keystone State:

"The motion picture exhibitors' convention, at Harrisburg, Pa., has passed and gone down in history as the greatest event that the exhibitors of the Keystone State have ever pulled off, not in the number of exhibitors attending, but in the results obtained, and the recognition gained, and it is now up to us to take advantage of it. Let us show to the powers that be that we mean business, by joining the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of Pennsylvania, and I want to say that there is no body of lawmakers in this nation that would not treat us with respect and due consideration if we were organized as we should be.

Therefore, we appeal to you to get busy and organize a local in your town or district, as in "union there is strength," so do your part and we will do ours.

Below you will find a number of the things that we could do if we were rightly organized:

1st. We could defeat all legislation that would be detrimental to our best interests.

2d. We could advance and have put into effect laws that would benefit our business.

3rd. We could aid in the election of men to any of the law making bodies of the nation who would give us the consideration that we as legitimate businessmen are entitled to.

4th. We could defeat those who would stand opposed to just and due consideration of the motion picture interest.

5th. There would not be a politician, an office-holder or office-seeker that would not respect the power of our screen if we were organized.

6th. We would then be in a position to prosecute those who would deprecate the value of our business by showing a production that would be immoral or indecent.

7th. Then we would be in a position to regulate the irregularities existing among the local exhibitors.

8th. With one big league in the state and nation, we would be in a position to say what would be a reasonable and just form of license or taxation for the exhibitors.

9th. We could then command the respect that we are justly entitled to from the men we do business with.

10th. Through our league we could form our own fire insurance company and make rates that would be just and reasonable.

11th. With an executive board elected, by your organization you would be in a position to let those you are doing business with know what you want, and when you want it.

Now if you are interested in our league, write to our headquarters, James Delves, secretary, Apollo Building, Fourth avenue, Pittsburgh, Pa.

TO KANSAS EXHIBITORS.

Gentlemen: The next convention of the Kansas branch of the M. P. E. L. of A. will be held in Emporia, Kan., on Monday and Tuesday, March 15 and 16.

A cordial invitation is extended to all exhibitors, exchange men and others who are interested in the moving picture business.

We hope to make this the biggest and best meeting yet held by the exhibitors of the state of Kansas. The town is centrally located, with first-class railroad and hotel facilities. Arrangements can be made for all at very reasonable cost for rooms and board by dropping the undersigned a card at any time between now and the date of the convention. Brothers, make arrangements and attend. The glad hand will be extended to all.

Fraternally yours,
P. J. CONCANNON,
Secretary.

Ohio Exhibitors At Columbus

State League Holds Harmonious Convention and Indorses the Ohio Censorship Law—Intense Interest in the Question is Manifested by all Present—Motion to Approve Carried by a Vote of 39 to 21—Max Stearn of Columbus Elected President.

By James S. McQuade.

THE fifth annual convention of the Ohio State branch of the M. P. E. L. of America was called to order at 2:30 o'clock Tuesday afternoon, February 9, in the assembly hall in the Southern Hotel by State President M. A. Neff. National President M. S. Pearce arrived in time to occupy the platform with the chairman. It was the open session at which exchange men and manufacturers were invited to engage in the discussion of any questions brought up.

Mr. Neff in his opening remarks promised a square deal to every man who had paid his dues. He emphasized that after five years' service he stood for the same principles espoused by him at the outset and announced that he would step aside for another man to bring about harmony among Ohio exhibitors. Among other questions to be discussed he included the State censor bill which he advised should be treated from a business standpoint, the speeches being limited to five minutes each.

Censorship Discussed.

Mr. Downs, of Cleveland, pronounced legalized censorship un-American.

Mr. Broomhall, of Hamilton, admonished members to stick to the Ohio board of censors. Mr. Bullock, of Cleveland, read letters from exhibitors in Cincinnati and other points in Ohio and from Kansas which favored the repeal of the Ohio law. Mr. Awbley, of the same city, complained that releases were held up in some cases from two to four days on account of the Ohio censor board and that the police of that city were censoring posters to the great detriment of exhibitors.

Max Stearn, of Columbus, made a pithy speech in which he asked why manufacturers and exchange men did not meet and co-operate with exhibitors. He held that manufacturers of films should meet and consult with their customers just as the manufacturers in other lines get together with their customers. His personal opinion of censorship was preferably for a national board of censors, legalized, if necessary, but lacking that for a state board rather than municipal boards throughout the state. On the question of censorship he urged that the co-operation of manufacturers and exhibitors was most essential and requested National President Pearce to try and get manufacturers to meet with exhibitors, and not to leave the latter who were on the firing line all the time, to bear the burden alone. He charged manufacturers and exchange men as being responsible for the present censorship law for had they come forward and stated their objections if they had any, the Ohio censor bill would never have been passed.

Lew S. Miller, of Cincinnati, in his remarks stated that there were two main issues in the censorship question, the moral issue and that springing from the selfish business interest of exhibitors. In the moral issue the children of the state must be remembered and this more than the making of dollars and cents must be the guiding interest. He warned members that if the Ohio bill were repealed every municipality of consequence in the state will have local censorship.

W. C. Bettis, of Toledo, held that if Ohio exhibitors have not a state or national legalized censorship municipal censorship will surely come. None of us want censorship he asserted, but censorship gives protection to both the exchange man and the exhibitor. In the dilemma he stood for the Ohio board of censors with certain amendments to the present law.

Mr. Sawyer and Sam Morris, of Cleveland, made strong speeches against censorship of any kind, while Mr. Spragg, of Bellaire, declared that the Ohio censor board was not censoring pictures but censuring manufacturers. State President Neff closed the discussion by referring to the results of a visit by John Collier to Milwaukee to promote the interests of the National Board of Censors, after which adjournment for ten minutes was made until the members met in executive session.

After announcement was made by the chair that the discussion and vote on the Ohio censor bill, as a special order, should proceed, J. A. Maddox, of Columbus, moved that the convention endorse the state censorship bill without further discussion. The motion was seconded by J. A. Ackerman, of Cincinnati.

Ohio Law Endorsed.

Messrs. Bullock and Sawyer, of Cleveland, opposed the motion urging that the vote be deferred. Mr. Miller, of Cincinnati, reminded members that the judiciary committee of the state Senate which was then in session on the Ohio censor bill was looking for an expression of opinion from the convention. The moment was the tensest of the convention and the atmosphere fairly radiated the pent-up feelings of the members on both sides of the question.

Mr. Sawyer demanded a roll call. Cards were distributed among the members on which each wrote his name and address and were then collected and placed in the hands of National President Pearce. When this was done the motion made by Mr. Maddox was carried by a rising vote, after which he made the further motion that the Ohio censor law be endorsed by the convention. This was duly seconded and President Pearce called the roll from the cards placed in his care. The result showed that the votes in favor of sustaining the present Ohio censor bill numbered thirty-nine and that the votes against it were twenty-one, three of the members present being excused from voting.

The following members voted no: A. L. Thomas, Newark; B. J. Sawyer, Cleveland; L. Smith, Alliance; Frank Beverstock, Mansfield; Thomas Beverstock, Mansfield; A. R. McCandlish, Cleveland; E. Schwartz, Cleveland; E. Sindeler, Cleveland; G. W. Heimbuck, Cleveland; S. Awbley, Cleveland; L. P. Stinchcomb, Cleveland; W. C. Adams, Cleveland; J. H. Simpson, Cleveland; W. H. Horsey, Cleveland; F. M. Kenney, Cleveland; Sam Bullock, Cleveland; Aug. Kansek, Cleveland; W. J. Slimm, Cleveland; S. E. Morris, Cleveland; E. N. Downs, Cleveland; L. Israel, Cleveland—21.

The following voted yes: O. J. Sibert, Marietta; D. P. Larkins, Ashtabula Harbor; H. A. Hill, Athens; T. C. Weber, Marietta; Max Stearn, Columbus; Chas. Weigel, Cincinnati; H. Q. Alexander, Dayton; J. H. Binower, Canton; J. M. Kaufman, Gallipolis; Paul Stuffer, Columbus; J. H. Broomhall, Hamilton; M. A. Neff, Cincinnati; D. T. Richards, Columbus; R. S. Stueve, Canton; G. D. Spragg, Bellaire; W. H. Shull, Martin's Ferry; R. E. Jacobs, Findlay; A. B. Hatch, Columbus; W. W. Miller, Mt. Vernon; S. Lawrence, Findlay; J. W. Nichols, Somerset; Ed Kohl, Cleveland; B. S. Leeds, Middletown; S. B. Dempsey, Columbus; W. D. Belknap, Columbus; J. W. Dusenberry, Columbus; W. C. Bettis, Toledo; Miss M. Van Vleerah, Ada; Mrs. Minnie Eley, Urbana; H. E. Vestal, Ada; Otto Ludeking, Cincinnati; J. A. Maddox, Columbus; J. A. Ackerman, Cincinnati; H. L. Flory, Eaton; L. S. Miller, Cincinnati; W. I. Dusenberry, Columbus; Jno. Hubner, Cincinnati; H. D. Kruse, Cincinnati; Lula M. Riefsnider, Urbana—39.

W. Rayner, Dayton; F. L. Emmert, Cincinnati; and W. R. Wilson, Columbus, did not vote.

After the vote was announced, Lew S. Miller moved that a certified copy of the motion just passed and of the votes for and against should be transmitted to the judiciary committee of the Senate. It was seconded and carried.

Olive Branch From Cleveland.

And now followed a most pleasant and also a most unlooked for turn in the tide of intense feeling that had prevailed in the ranks of the members who opposed the present censor law. It really made one glad to be present on this occasion. Sam Morris, of Cleveland, got up and pledged that no malice existed in the hearts of the members from that city against the other members of the Ohio organization. He expressed the hope that from that time on everything would be harmonious: and invited all Ohio members to get together and live as brothers. Other Cleveland men followed and the majority on the other side showed equal good will and mutual understanding.

At this happy juncture the chair called on President Pearce to address the convention. He assured members that since his election he had attended many meetings of exhibitors, but none had been as deeply welcomed as this one. He said that he had just come from Harrisburg where the members of the organization had gotten together and now Ohio had gladdened and strengthened him by the happy closing of existing breaches. In both the great states all had gotten together and would work together for the good of the organization. Nothing, he reiterated, could have pleased him so much as to see the uniting of the Ohio members in harmony.

National Treasurer Peter J. Jeup, of Detroit, also expressed his pleasure over the splendid meeting and at the burying of the hatchet.

President Neff closed the session by thanking all the members for the fine control shown during a trying struggle and thanked them for the courtesy shown the chair. It was now six o'clock and adjournment was made until eight o'clock when an evening session was held at the request of Sam Bullock, who insisted that members should devote as much time as possible to the business of the league while the convention lasts.

At the election of officers on Wednesday, February 10, Max Stearn, of Columbus, was elected President.

Death of Harry Wheeler De Long.

HARRY WHEELER DE LONG, for the past year a member of the staff of the Moving Picture World, died on Monday, February 8, in the New York Medical College and Hospital for Women. He is survived by a widow, two sons and a daughter. Mr. De Long had undergone an operation ten days before. He had made favorable progress and had been told he might leave the hospital on the Thursday following. When stricken Mr. De Long was walking in the corridor just outside his room. Death was caused by cerebral hemorrhage. The funeral services were held on Thursday morning in the University Place Presbyterian Church, New York City. The interment was in Kensico Cemetery.

Mr. De Long was born in Roundhead, Ohio, fifty-eight years ago. In his early manhood he worked as a printer on some of the larger Ohio papers. Later he took up stage work, both as author and player. He wrote "Trixie" and "Wildcat," two successful plays that long remained on the boards in the Middle West. Mr. De Long perhaps will be remembered best for his character work in the name part of "Old Homespun," which was also from his pen. His last appearance on the stage was in George M. Cohan's "Little Johnny Jones." For four years Mr. De Long was at the head of the printing office of the Biograph Company.

Harry De Long was a genial and a likable companion. He had at command a wealth of reminiscence of his experiences in print shops and on the stage. He will be missed by his associates in the office of the Moving Picture World and by a host of other friends throughout the country.

REGULATING HAND TRANSPORTATION OF PICTURES.

On account of the serious accident that occurred on a passenger train near Chicago, Ill., through the carrying of exposed motion picture films in a smoking car, Fire Commissioner Robert Adamson, of New York, has issued the following regulations regarding the transportation of films by hand in the Greater City:

"No person shall transport inflammable motion picture films in any street car, subway or elevated line, omnibus, ferryboat, or other public conveyance or carry the same into any railway, subway station or ferry house, unless each of such film shall be enclosed in a suitable metal box with a tight-fitting cover, and not more than ten (10) films so enclosed shall be carried at any one time by any person."

NEW PHILADELPHIA EXCHANGE ORGANIZED.

The Big 4 Feature Film Exchange has been organized in Philadelphia by William J. Gane, who is widely known in the vaudeville and moving picture world as one of the pioneer exhibitors.

The officers of the new company are F. G. Nixon-Nirdlinger, president; M. W. Taylor, who represents the Zimmerman interests, vice-president; James H. Simpson, former manager of the Manhattan Theater, treasurer; and T. M. Dougherty, general manager of the Nixon-Nirdlinger interests, secretary.

The Big 4 Feature Film Exchange, Inc., has opened offices at 1337 Vine street, Philadelphia, and will open branches in New York, Baltimore and Pittsburgh. The Big 4 will also act as Philadelphia agents for Straus & Company, Inc., the well-known New York electric sign manufacturers.

SCREENERS' BEEFSTEAK ON FEBRUARY 20.

The third monthly beefsteak dinner of the Screen Club will be held on the evening of Saturday, February 20. Acting President Ben Wilson has named George Blaisdell as the Rewinder for the occasion.

Naomi Weston Childers

NAOMI WESTON CHILDERS, a popular member of the Vitagraph Company, was born in Pottstown, Pa., November 15, 1893. Her father, John Douglas Childers, originally came from England, where his uncles were ministers to the King of England. Elizabeth McCarthy was the maiden name of Miss Childers' mother and she was born in County Clare, Ireland.

Naomi Weston Childers.

Miss Childers received her education in the public schools of St. Louis, Mo., attending the grammar school and Central High, and Maryville Convent. As a child she was always imitating people or speaking pieces, and at the age of ten made her first professional appearance in "Alice in Wonderland" at the Odeon in St. Louis. Even in her childhood days, Miss Childers was noted for her Grecian cast of features and accepted many offers to pose in the Grecian costume for artists in oil and, as she became older, added concert readings to fill in the time between her posings. Miss Childers' uncle on her mother's side was a noted lecturer in Ireland, and it is quite probable that she inherited her taste for the lecture platform from him, as she won merited recognition as a reader, having appeared at the Chart Club drawing room, Morning Choral Symphonies and before The Daughters of the Revolution, but the lure of stage life was strong and she joined a stock company playing in St. Louis. It was but a step from stock to a Broadway engagement, and it was not long before Miss Childers became identified with such well-known stars and attractions as Henry Kolker in "The Great Name," Laura Nelson Hall in "Everywoman," in which Miss Childers appeared as Beauty; "Ready Money," "Madame X," etc.

Miss Childers joined the Vitagraph Company about a year and a half ago, and has been busily engaged ever since, as she has not only posed for numerous pictures, but has written a number of scenarios which have been produced. A few of the many Vitagraph pictures in which she has appeared include "Their Mutual Friend," "Officer and a Gentleman," "Price of Vanity," "Crucible of Fate," "The Spirit and the Clay," "The Tangle," "Woes of a Waitress," "The Wrong Flat."

EDISON FILMS AT EXPOSITION.

The films made by the Edison Company for the New York State Commission, to be shown at the Panama-Pacific Exposition, were shown at the office of the manufacturers, 10 Fifth avenue, New York, Friday of last week, the commission viewing them.

The spectator was first taken to Ellis Island, then on a trip around New York City and up the Hudson. Points of beauty in the scenery around the state were shown, as well as trips to educational institutions of the state, the important industrial enterprises, chief places of interest in the larger cities.

Scenic and industrial pictures of similar nature have also been made by Edison for the Massachusetts' Board of Panama-Pacific Managers, which will be shown at the Exposition. Also for that state were made "The Boston Tea Party," a heart story being woven around that historical incident, and "The Landing of the Pilgrims." There will also be shown the Edison pictures, "Paul Revere's Ride," "The Battle of Bunker Hill," "The Deerfield Massacre" and "The Battle of Lexington." It is quite probable that "The Boston Tea Party" and "The Landing of the Pilgrims" will be placed on the regular release after the exposition. Exposition films were also made at the factories of the Corticelli Silk Mills at Florence, Mass., and the William Skinner & Sons, at Holyoke, Mass., both dealing with the silk industry.

There will be used at the Panama Exposition three Edison Model D Projection Kinetoscopes, two in the New York State building and one in the Social Economy building.

DETROIT, MICH., EXHIBITORS.

The Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, of Detroit, Mich., at its regular weekly meeting February 2, appointed a committee to see what could be done in the way of securing larger and more commodious quarters. The league is growing so fast that the present quarters are really not large enough to take care of members when there is an important meeting. In the proposed new quarters there will likely be a private office for some of the officers, at least the president and the secretary, committee meeting rooms and a large general meeting room.

It was announced that the premium evils in Bay City and Saginaw had been eliminated owing to an understanding having been brought about between the managers of the various theaters in those cities. Everything is now smooth sailing, and the association is again enjoying absolute harmony. There are no troubles brewing of any kind, and, in the words of President Fowser, "We never were in better shape."

The association has been informed that several local women's clubs were discussing the advisability of asking the mayor to appoint a censorship committee relative to motion pictures, but nothing will be done until there is some tangible action in that respect. Some one mentioned the fact that Lester Potter, former censor, was to be put back on the job, but several members said that, while Mr. Potter had done good work in the past, they did not see any justification for any local censorship; that, if anything, exhibitors were showing a better grade of film than they ever have been. "Occasionally some bad film will be shown by unscrupulous managers or owners of houses, but, on the whole, the exhibitors are exercising greater care than they ever have to improve the class of film productions and are paying more money for them."

ILLINOIS ASSOCIATION ELECTS OFFICERS.

At a meeting of the International Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of Chicago, Ill., held in Room 23 of the Masonic Building, Chicago, Ill., the following officers were elected: President, John H. Frundt, Ariston theater; vice-president, Harry Rose, Star theater; treasurer, W. J. Sweeney, 338 South State street; recording and financial secretary, Sidney Smith, 1422 Masonic Temple; sergeant-at-arms, Max Schwartz, Halfield theater. Executive committee—H. L. Lieberthal, J. Victor, T. M. May, H. M. Immenhausen, D. W. Martin, David Toplin, Harry Ascher. A luncheon was served after the election. Officers will be installed at the next regular meeting.

Commissioner Bell Closes Theater

Permanent Revocation of License Issued Against Max Jurist for Admitting Minors—Prison Sentence Also Imposed.

COMMISSIONER of Licenses George H. Bell, of New York City, imposed the extreme penalty upon Max Jurist, manager of a motion picture theater at 268-270 West 145th street, New York, on Monday, February 8, in permanently revoking the license of the theater. Jurist was also convicted in the Court of Special Sessions and sentenced to thirty days imprisonment. Further details of the case against Jurist is given in an official statement issued by Commissioner Bell, in which is included a description of the conditions found by the Department's investigators and an announcement of the course the Commissioner intends to pursue in dealing with violations of the law respecting the admission of minors to picture theaters. The statement follows:

The extreme penalty—revocation of license—was imposed yesterday by License Commissioner Bell, following the conviction in the Court of General Sessions of Max Jurist, licensee of a motion picture theater at 268-270 West 145th street, for admitting minors, without parents or guardians, in violation of Section 484 of the Penal Law. It is the first instance since the present ordinance governing motion picture theaters went into effect that the Department of Licenses has directed the permanent closing down of a motion picture theater. The action of the department followed the conviction of Jurist, who was sentenced to thirty days' imprisonment—in itself an unusually severe penalty.

The court case against Jurist was presented by agents of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children. Jurist was an old offender, and the License Department early last year warned him against admitting minors. On another occasion a one hundred dollar fine was imposed on him in the court for violation of the law against admission of children under legal age.

Charges of even a more serious kind than the admission of minors were brought against one of the ushers in Jurist's theater; that of impairing the morals of twelve and thirteen year-old girls who frequented this house. In the particular case brought, in which the usher was involved, the judges of the Court of Special Sessions acquitted the employee by a dissenting vote. In another case, however, two boys were found guilty of corrupting girls they met in this theater.

Commisioner Bell laid squarely on the parents of these girls and others the responsibility for the going wrong of children through being permitted, without restraint, to frequent motion picture houses.

"In the cases of the girls who frequented the Jurist theater," Commissioner Bell stated, "most of the mothers of these girls appealed to ministers of churches in the neighborhood to protect their girls from corruption. The children should never have been permitted to enter this place. Irrespective of the fact that they are able to gain admission through the connivance of the licensee, the fact remains that the responsibility must be laid at the door of the parents. The parents of almost every other boy or girl permitted to patronize motion picture theaters equally are responsible.

"A most extraordinary case came to our attention during the past week. The licensee of a motion picture theatre in Manhattan, where inspectors of the License Department found minors being admitted, as a defense submitted notes from the parents of forty or fifty children, addressed to the theater, requesting that their children be admitted. Legally, of course, the fact that these notes were presented did not arouse the theater proprietor; but the amazing feature of this case was the fact that the mothers of thirteen and fourteen year-old girls would be so dull to the dangers which beset children of this age in places of public assembly, such as motion picture theaters, at least, to pave the way for their children gaining admission to these places. If what happened to the girls who frequented the theater in West 145th street was to befall the children of the parents who gave the notes, the responsibility and blame would rest on nobody but themselves.

"What the License Department can do is to enforce the law. That it is doing and purposes continually to do; but of what avail will its activity be if in the effort to protect children of tender age from the dangers that beset them, the parents of the children contrive to checkmate the work by openly permitting their children to attend motion picture theaters.

"The Department of Licenses has set itself to the task of rigidly enforcing the law against the admission of minors to theaters. Its policy in the cases where licenses of motion picture theaters are convicted of this illegality is to suspend licenses for certain definite periods of time, based on the gravity of the offense in each individual case. In the last six weeks it has visited this penalty upon several theaters, principally in Brooklyn. The motion picture houses in Manhattan Borough are now receiving its attention and already suspension of licenses has been imposed. But, if this regulation is to have any permanent value, it must, first of all, have the co-operation of parents. Failing that, its best efforts may be of no avail, and mothers and fathers who, through good nature or weakness, may be persuaded into giving their children notes by means of which they gain admission to motion picture houses, may find themselves in the same state of anguish as are the mothers and fathers of the girls corrupted through having frequented the Jurist motion picture house.

"Besides all this, in every place of public assembly there is always the danger of panic caused by fire or many other things. What chance has an unattended child in a panic? We have found not less than 100 children without proper guardians in the gallery of an old-fashioned theater. Panic in such a place has invariably meant that the weaker among those present have been hurt, or worse. It seems incredible, but it is, nevertheless true, parents disregard all of these dangers and actually send their children into motion picture and other theaters."

Dubray in the Trenches

French-American Camera Man Writes of His Experience at the Front.

WHARTON, INC., directors of motion pictures, released by Pathe, have received a letter from J. A. Dubray, who was formerly employed by them as camera man, and who is now at the front in France. Dubray, when war broke out, was excused from service owing to the fact that upon him devolved the support of not only his own family but that of his brother in France who was summoned to the colors at the very start. But a relative in Paris wrote him that she had heard that his brother had lost both of his legs in the battle of the Marne, and Dubray thirsted for revenge, leaving New York on the next steamer after receiving the letter. This is the first letter that has been received from him since his departure and shows plainly his struggles with the English language. It is given here as written:

"I am at the front since a month, and have worked hard days and nights in the entrenchments. I have had some dangerous tasks to do, but everything went on well for me in spite of my company having lost 48 of the 200 in three days. We are now fighting since the 16th, always without rest, and we are gaining ground every day. It is a hard proposition, but we feel sure we will succeed well at the end. I am feeling fine and stronger every day, and all kinds of bullets the Germans send us seem to pass by scared to touch my poor body.

"I had this morning the fourth man killed at my side and I did not had a single scratch yet. I hope this luck will follow me constantly. I wish you all could see me right now. I did not had a single chance to undress since a month, and just before writing I washed my face for the first time in twelve days. I am absolutely covered with mud. My beard and mustache are growing. Well, imagine a dirty sloppy soldier of fortune and you will have a pale idea of my present condition. I am now at rest for a few hours about one mile and a half from the front, and the roar of the great guns reaches the little house where I am, in a town of 80,000, all the houses destroyed by the shells and fire, only about 100 still in condition good enough to protect us, and daily the Germans send about 15 shells from their guns of ten inches to visit us. We are so used to all this we can sleep even in the first line, lying on the ground under the rain or snow in the terrific noise of the bursting shells.

"Well I am collecting great ideas for war stories, and if you think it would be good to have a war installment in the serial, keep it for the end. I hope to be in New York by that time and be of great help to you if the Germans will be kind enough to spare my life."

The Whartons have promised Dubray to keep his old job open for him. He has made his home in this country now for about eight years.

Additions to Selig Forces

H. C. Hoagland Joins the Chicago Office, Giles Warren the Los Angeles Studio, Lawrence Marston the Chicago Studio, and Miss Wallace and Mr. Howard Will Play Comedy Leads in Los Angeles.

H. C. HOAGLAND, who was connected with the Pathe Company in New York City for six years, arrived in Chicago Thursday, Feb. 4, to join the Selig Polyscope Company's forces in the Chicago office. The duties of Mr. Hoagland have not, at the time of writing, been definitely fixed, but it is understood that he will occupy a position of high capacity under Vice-President and General Manager J. A. Berst.

Lawrence Marston, for a time directing producer of the Biograph Company, in New York, and who recently had charge of the direction of K. & E. features, arrived in Chicago Tuesday, Feb. 2, to take charge of the direction of Selig subjects in the big Chicago studio.

Giles Warren, who has been director in the Chicago studio for some time past, will join the Selig western forces at Edendale, Los Angeles, in the same capacity, in about a week.

During the week of Monday, Feb. 1, several new people, engaged for Selig Comedy productions in Los Angeles, stopped over in Chicago on their way to the Coast. Among them were Miss Irene Wallace, Harold Howard and Mr. Inokuchi, who left for Los Angeles on Saturday, Feb. 6.

Miss Wallace was with the Universal Film Manufacturing Company for over three years. She was widely known in high class vaudeville circles several years before she engaged in photodramatic work, and scored a big success as the original "Automatic Doll." She also played important ingenue roles with the Shubert companies.

Harold Howard has had dramatic experience of a high order for many years. He is an accomplished English artist. He has played with Mrs. Patrick Campbell in her English and American repertoires; also under David Belasco in several well-known dramas, including "Zaza," "Du Barry" and "Andrea"; he played with David Warfield in "The Music Master" in the character of Ditson, and with Willie Collier in "The Patriot." Mr. Howard took the place of the lamented Jamison Lee Finney in the role of Picard, in the all-star revival of "The Two Orphans," and also sustained the part of Sadu in "Sari," a musical comedy under the management of Henry Savage. His more recent appearances in dramatic work have been in Cohan & Harris' comedies, "Officer 666" and "Stop Thief," and he has taken the same roles in the photodramatic productions of these big successes by George Kleine.

Mr. Howard, like Miss Wallace, prefers to appear in comedy roles and he will also be able to indulge, to his liking, in character parts. Miss Wallace and Mr. Howard will play leads in Selig's Western comedy company. Mr. Inokuchi came into prominence in moving picture making by his fine work as the valet in George Kleine's "Officer 666."

More War Pictures

Picture Playhouse Film Company Announces a Series of Interesting Views of the Strife.

Fulfilling their promise to the trade at the outbreak of hostilities in Europe, the Picture Playhouse Film Company, Inc., with offices at 110 West 40th street, New York City, is about to release a series of war films. Quietly and without undue ostentation, preparations to this end have been under way for months, and the release is scheduled for the very near future.

The Picture Playhouse Film Company, Inc., it will be recalled, are the sole American agents for the Pasquali Company, of Turin, Italy, and have other important foreign connections. The opening guns of the great war had scarcely ceased resounding when cable advices to the other side advised the Pasquali Company and others to send on at once any real pictures of the war which could be secured—but the stipulation was made that the pictures must be real and authentic, no matter what the cost. As the result of these instructions the Picture Playhouse people's foreign representatives have since been combing the European field over and have assembled the collection of pictures which are now being prepared for release in America.

As the pictures are at present assembled, they represent two big series which will be available for exhibitors of all classes. In their entirety they will provide a feature which, those who have been fortunate enough to witness an advance showing declare, will hold any audience in the highest class and the most pretentious theater in the country. For the smaller theaters, each of the two sets, combining to convey an unusually good idea of just what is being done in the greatest war in history, will provide a feature of merit.

King Peter of Servia, Emperor William of Germany, the German crown prince, President Poincare of France, King Albert of Belgium, and Emperor Nicholas, Czar of the Russias, are only a few of the notables who are shown in the pictures and all of them in uniforms which indicates to even the lay observer that the pictures were taken during the present war period.

In doing the necessary work of retitling the pictures for release in the United States, the Picture Playhouse Company has had the assistance of a number of well-informed men who have had intimate dealings with the European war conditions, among them Mr. Edward Emerson, war correspondent just returned from the German frontiers, both east and west, where he enjoyed exceptional privileges of observation. After seeing the pictures for the first time, Mr. Emerson expressed the opinion that they were not only authentic but were possessed of exceptional interest in that the light they threw upon present war conditions and methods of fighting was so full.

Griffith Engages Theater

Will Show "The Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty, New York at Two Dollar Prices.

BY an arrangement completed with Klaw and Erlanger late last Saturday D. W. Griffith will take over the Liberty Theater in West Forty-second street Wednesday, March 3, for the purpose of presenting there his great spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation." The engagement will commence immediately following the run of Otis Skinner in this house.

"The Birth of a Nation" is the complete working out of all the contributory themes in American history upon which Thomas Dixon founded his famous novel and play, "The Clansman." Where the play proper touched only upon phases of the reconstruction period in the South, the Griffith treatment by means of the marvelously enlarged new art of motion pictures embraces the entire historical relationship of the slavery question to the development of American history. After arrangements had been made with Thomas Dixon to utilize his well-known story, the author suggested the change in name so that the scope and tremendous appeal of the enlarged story could be more comprehensively covered in the title.

The taking of the Liberty by Mr. Griffith and his associates realizes another advance in the art of motion pictures and brings theatergoers up to the $2 moving picture. This is the first time that plans have actually been laid to bring this about.

"The Birth of a Nation" will be given in New York upon a scale which means the dawn of greater accomplishments in the theater than would have been deemed possible a year ago. It is the most stupendous undertaking of the kind the world has been shown. Over 18,000 people were employed in the making of the great spectacle, and a specially written score that elaborates the various themes of the story will be played as an accompaniment to the production by a symphony orchestra of forty pieces.

D. W. Griffith has so long been recognized as the master mind in the production of great pictures that it is most fitting he should be the man to bring out in America the first $2 motion picture.

REGENT EMPLOYEES CELEBRATE.

Observing the second anniversary of the opening of the Regent theater, 116th street and Seventh avenue, New York, there was a little supper at the Campus, 104th street and Columbus avenue, which began at the wee sma' hours of Tuesday, February 9. Present were R. Muller, manager of the Regent; Francis Mangan, manager of the Crescent; H. B. Meyer, leader of the Regent orchestra; Grant Croft, stage manager; Arthur Depue, organist; John Buthorn, assistant manager of the Regent; Edward Montray, Vincent Sulanchek, and Howard Martin, members of the Regent orchestra. Among the guests were President Johnson, of the Musical Union of New York; John R. Gait, Superintendent of New York Public Library; James Gordon of the Strand orchestra; Joseph Littau, musical director of "Hypocrites"; Edward Fitzgerald, chief operator of the Empire, and William Monohan. The party did not break up until almost daylight, but it was a happy and thoroughly enjoyable occasion.

Manager Muller reported that the anniversary day business was so big that he had to call upon the police to help manage the crowds. According to reports the Regent is doing a record business.

"Her Triumph"

Gaby Deslys in a Four-Part Famous Players Subject Shows That She Can Act as Well as Dance.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

GABY DESLYS in "Her Triumph," the four-part release of the Famous Players for February 8, shows that she can portray emotion as well as motion. The story is an original one of the theater, and was written especially for the charming dancer who in it has the lead. The production was made in France with French players in the supporting cast. The atmosphere of the playhouse is finely maintained throughout.

"Her Triumph" primarily exploits the wonderful dancing of Deslys. There are other elements of interest, however—among them that of melodrama. The story is of a humble understudy in love with the leading comedian. Jealousy on the part of the leading woman impels her to demand the dismissal of the girl she conceives to be her rival. The manager refuses, the understudy goes on. Later the former leading woman conspires with her lover to abduct her successor. Gaby is rescued by the leading man.

Scene from "Her Triumph" (Famous Players).

The dancing of the star and her partner, Harry Pilcer, makes rare entertainment. Mr. Pilcer has the role opposite Gaby—which is the name given to the character—but his work is more that of the dancer than the actor. His movements at times lack repose; he seems to step to music, but this is minor. He does unusually well for a dancing partner. Deslys, whether dancing or portraying a dramatic role, is charming.

We have not been given the names of the excellent players supporting the two. There is the young woman who plays the blind sister of Gaby; and there are the leading woman and her gambling lover. "Her Triumph" will make good entertainment.

HOLBROOK BLINN TO APPEAR IN "THE BOSS."

When Holbrook Blinn makes his debut before the camera in a William A. Brady photoplay based on the Edward Sheldon play, "The Boss," he will have the most expert assistance possible. Alice Brady will appear opposite him, playing the part created by Emily Stevens; the director will be Frederick Thomson, whose experience in making features for the Vitagraph Co., the Lasky and the Famous Players has made his name famous. Mr. Thomson had won a high place on the stage before turning his attention to the screen world. When "Trilby" was sent on tour, it was he who produced and rehearsed the various organizations. For years he was associated with Sol Smith Russell, and understudied that star's part with David Belasco. He worked several seasons, and those who saw his performance of "Zakkuri," the war minister, in "The Darling of the Gods" have not forgotten the impression that his characterization made.

Ulric Collins, the original David in the production of "Way Down East," has been secured by Mr. Thomson as his assistant. Mr. Collins has been associated for years with the various Brady enterprises, and has appeared in several screen productions as well.

The Holbrook Blinn photoplay will be released through the World Film Corporation in April, and it will be one of the most elaborate ever turned out by the William A. Brady Photoplays, Inc.

Edythe Sterling

PROBABLY no other actress in motion pictures has undertaken as many real risks as Edythe Sterling, leading woman of the Premier Company, at Santa Paula, California. Only recently, in "The Hello Girl of Angel Camp" she was placed on a railroad track with a speeding passenger train bearing down on her, and was pulled from her perilous position only a second before the engine whizzed past. The engineer of the train, who had not been notified of the occasion, was completely unnerved, and was obliged to stop and recuperate before going on. In reviewing this picture one critic writes that "the effect of anxiety that the train sweeping on toward the wounded girl lying across the track creates is almost terrifying." Quoting from The World: "A Premier offering dealing with Western life and one that holds us in suspense with terror and horror."

Edythe Sterling.

Edythe Sterling was born in Kansas City, Mo., in 1894. The footlights beckoned to her at an early age, and after three successful seasons with Weber and Rush, and a season with "A Knight for a Day," with Mabel Hite, Miss Sterling joined the St. Louis Motion Picture Company, and has been with that concern ever since, now appearing in their "Premier" brand of Warners Features. As a leading woman of Western dramas Miss Sterling has no peer. She is a daring rider, and is widely known throughout the Pacific States, where in numerous rodeos she has captured many championships in riding and racing, and is one of the few women who have ever dared to indulge in that dangerous pastime known as "bulldogging" a steer.

PICTURE ACTRESS MARRIES BANKER.

Hope Latimer, a former picture actress, who in recent months has been in charge of the bookkeeping department with the Buffalo office of the United Film Service, has been married to Arthur Jenkins Gordon, receiving teller of the Syracuse Trust Company of Syracuse. Miss Latimer is a New York girl and has many friends who are connected with the motion picture industry. She made the acquaintance of Mr. Gordon in Syracuse while depositing cash at the Gordon bank for the Syracuse office of the United Film Service, and while the awkward altitude of a teller's window is hardly conducive to intimate conversation, a feeling of friendship was cemented nevertheless.

RARE SETTINGS IN CHINESE PLAY.

Edison Director John H. Collins, with his customary insistence on detail, has put some of his best work on "The Mission of Mr. Foo," a story of the struggle between the old China and the new Republic, with an underground setting. In order to secure real Chinese curios and antiques, Mr. Collins has been holding back the production for six months. Chinese curio shops were searched and the Edison Japanese actor, T. Tamamato, was enlisted in the campaign for real "atmosphere."

RECEPTION TO CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG.

Clara Kimball Young was tendered a reception at the Lee Avenue theater, Brooklyn, recently.

At 8:45 o'clock, Miss Young was introduced to the audience by William H. Kemble, president and general manager of the Lee Avenue theater. The audience, of 2,800 patrons of Brooklyn, welcomed Miss Young with applause. When Miss Young had concluded her remarks, the ushers were kept busy presenting her with flowers, until it was necessary for Manager Kemble to assist in receiving them in her behalf.

IT is a positive delight to view and a pleasing task to write about George Kleine's photodramatic production of "Stop Thief," Cohan & Harris' merry comedy that made a record-breaking run in many cities in this country.

Scene from "Stop Thief" (Kleine).

I can frankly say that I have never before seen moving pictures that told a story so clearly as is done in this instance, and I have been forced to wonder at it because the story is very complicated and the action moves with great rapidity. There is not a single moment that the eye is not treated to some act, gesture or incident that adds to the brimming cup of mirthful delight, and one has to be very watchful, indeed, in order not to miss any of the clever things that combine to make this photocomedy the perfect laugh-maker and perfect photocomedy that it is. Indeed it is the finest I have yet seen.

George Fitzmaurice, the director, may well be proud of the laurels he has won in this case, and we hope that he will add to them in other subjects bearing the George Kleine brand.

The settings show artistic care and good taste. For an interior setting, wholly built up and furnished in the studio, I think the library in the Carr home will bear all the criticism that can be given it, without losing a single charm. It is so thoroughly homelike and natural. The other interiors also show artistic effort. The exterior view of the Carr home is in excellent keeping with the interiors, and it once gives the impression of the affluence which the owner enjoys.

It is strange, yet true, that the persistent retail and wholesale thieving, which prevails throughout the entire five parts of this photocomedy, never once struck me from the immoral standpoint, and I can explain it only by the very obvious fact that the atmosphere throughout is so charged with mirth that the mind refuses to pause for analysis. There is never once a sight of the heavy-browed, scowling villain around, nor of his hard-faced, feminine accomplice—only a young fellow who steals things seemingly as unconscious of evil as does the kleptomaniac, Mr. Carr, and a prepossessing young woman, whose "lifting" of articles of value is done in order to hasten the marriage that her heart dotes on. These two are such smiling adepts of the light-fingered class that we are impressed they actually steal for fun, as, when Doogan, the dip, takes the handkerchief from the tail pocket of Dr. Willoughby's coat with as great satisfaction as he would the $10,000 from the overcoat pocket of the stock broker. Even the police sergeant at his desk helps himself to the cigar in his detective's pocket, with much the same smile that clothes Doogan's face when he "takes care" of the two $500 bills handed him by the confiding Mr. Carr.

Throughout the entire five reels a riot of fun and mirth prevails, and woe to him who takes time to question the why or wherefore. "Stop Thief" in films is a bracer for the nerves in the hearty laughter that it evokes; a promoter of good digestion by its exhilaration of the entire system.

The casting of the characters has been most happily made. Jack Doogan, Mary Ryan, Mr. Cluney, Dr. Willoughby and Mr. Carr are represented by the same people who appeared in the original cast of the dramatic production by Cohan & Harris. Harry Mestayer's Jack Doogan in pictures, once seen, can never be forgotten. Watch closely the little things he does as well as the big, or you will miss many a laugh. He sorely hates to give up anything, whether it be the nickel that he drops in the slot of a 'phone or the accumulated swag that he has purloined in the Carr home, he kisses each a heartfelt goodby. His lightning manipulations at times tax the eyes to follow them. The "souvenirs" which he gives the detective, who attempts to disturb the marriage ceremony in the Carr mansion, are the only articles which he bestows with a look of good will. As we watch the detective later, when he examines them, we are seized with a fit of the heartiest laughter indulged in during the presentation; for the articles consist of his star, his watch and chain and a pair of handcuffs! What makes the situation still more pungent, the detective dare not squeal.

Miss Mary Ryan is equally clever in the part of Nell Jones, the light-fingered, pretty maid. She invests herself fully with the spirit of her phototype. In the many trying situations, where Nell must think and act in the twinkling of an eye, Miss Ryan is a perfect double. Her acting in the ring incident is beyond praise. So, too, when she is rounding up the listed articles in the room of Joan and Madge Carr. The bouquet incident is another where Miss Ryan positively doubles one up, the restoration of the flowers coupled with her evident regret that she cannot have them for her own wedding being so naturally done that we fairly tie ourselves in a knot with suppressed laughter.

Another excellent impersonation is that of Mrs. Carr by Miss Auguste Burmester. Much of the mirth excited springs from this lady's fervid acting in scenes where Mr. Carr suffers through absent-mindedness. Misses Della Connor and Marguerite Boyd, as Joan and Madge Carr, contribute due measure to the fine work of the well-assigned cast. Albert Tavernier, Harold Howard, William Boyd and Dan Moyles will command general commendation for their excellent impersonations of the respective characters of Mr. Carr, Mr. Cluney, Dr. Willoughby and the detective.

To crown the delight of viewing this well acted and well directed comedy, the photography brings joy to the eye. Its clear softness, and the stereoscopic and definitive values will be appreciated by all.

Charles Chaplin, after completing his first comedy for Essanay at the Chicago studio entitled "His New Job," went to Niles, Cal., where he is producing one comedy each week.

Doings at Los Angeles

AS if it were a picture within a picture, did a little drama enact itself within a comedy, at Santa Monica where Vitagraph was putting on a funny picture by D. S. Smith, when an old woman of the town, a sort of landmark, who wears a grouch a mile long, trembling with rage and vehemently cursing mankind, doused the company with dirty water as they made a scene in front of her house. Simmie Sues, grinding the film, saw the impending deluge, and yelled a warning, as he took his camera out of range. He set up immediately and got the whole action. The impromptu shower ruined the finery of two women, spoiling a leading woman's gown, and stained the filmy one worn by a dainty ingenue. The film showing the old lady throwing the water and her gestures will be used as evidence if the woman is sued for damages.

With the opening of Universal city but a few weeks away, the firm is quickening its moving from a gradual shipping of equipment to a more hurried transportation. Already the wondrous big stage has been opened and for two nights and days a company worked until four A. M. to catch up with its releases. The new lighting system worked to perfection.

One of the most delightful functions of the season was the merry dinner dance given by Mr. James Kirkwood, prominent director of the Famous Players company, and who is now producing "Rags," featuring Mary Pickford and Marshal Neilan. The affair took place at the Los Angeles Athletic club, and at the dinner covers were laid for the following: Misses Mary Pickford, Lottie Pickford, Lillian and Dorothy Gish, and Mrs. Gish, Gertrude Robinson, Irene Hunt, Lois Meredith, Pauline Bush, Messrs. Owen Moore, Al Kaufman, Marshal Neilan, Alan Dwan, Jack Pickford, Robert Harron, Eddie Morrisey, Mr. and Mrs. Alan Hale, Mr. and Mrs. Carlyle Blackwell, and the host.

Courtenay Foote is to be seen leading a miniature bull dog at the end of a strong leash. The pup is a youngster which was bought for $10 at an auction recently. J. Farrel Macdonald presented Manager Kaufman of the F. P. with a beautiful Angora—not a goat, a cat, which was used in the picture. Al is going to keep the valuable feline and take it back to New York with him when he leaves for "home." While in the office the other day an insurance agent entered and asked to see the manager. Mr. Kaufman, who is a youth of but twenty-six, although he looks but twenty-one, said "I'll talk for him." The agent tried to insure the studio, but Al told him there was nothing doing. The agent then insisted upon seeing the manager, and it took some time for the poor fellow to see that he was talking to the Pooh-bah right there. He made a hasty exit.

Having to catch a fish in a river scene, and really catching an-honest-to-goodness trout was the queer experience of Frederick Church at the Premier studio. They said it sounded fishy, but that it it true. I ha' me doots!

The script for "What Might Have Been," the two reel Mutual drama being put on by Jack O'Brien, was written by Mrs. F. E. Woods, wife of Mutual's scenario editor. In this production Mary Alden, who was the mother in "The Battle of the Sexes," appears as an old woman who compels her nephew to lead the life of a criminal, despite his attempts to be "on the square."

Enjoyed a tour of the new Lasky grounds with the man whose name has made these pictures so well known, and he told of plans for the coming spring and summer. As to production, that will be maintained at the present pace. Progress is to be noted here indeed. Near the main office building and laboratory has been built a big concrete film vault which has a capacity for holding over half a million feet of film. A small garden has been laid out and finished. It is for the pictures only. A long string of new dressing rooms has been completed and the warehouse is under construction. A new property room and furniture store room are also fast nearing completion. As soon as the fire limit can be extended a large garage will be erected to house the cars of the firm. Valesca Suratt will soon be here and working in a scenario which is now being prepared. A feature of the picture will be the elegant lady's wardrobe. Oscar Apfel has started Victor Moore in "Snobs." Great mystery is being maintained as to the next picture for Blanche Sweet, which shortly will be started. Ina Claire, star of "The Quaker Girl," is expected soon.

The big Bosworth studio with its maze of stages, scene docks and other things, is a busy place these days. The story of the oil wells, "Sunshine Molly," written and produced by Lois Weber and Phillips Smalley, is a sure enough winner. It is a five reeler featuring besides the producers, Frank Elliott, Adele Farrington and Herbert Standing. The story has it that the "heavy" fires the oil field. A miniature reproduction of the fields at La Brea was used for the background. Everything was there, even to a clothesline and the string of oil cars. The derricks looked too real. The big scene came with an explosion and subsequent fire, the whole field being destroyed. The scenic effects were wonderful. The oil company allowed the filmers to light a real well for their close-up scenes, and a real big fire was filmed.

R. S. Sturgeon and his Vitagraphers have gone again to Bear Valley to get some retakes. The players were obliged to go into the fastness of the hills with a pack train on account of the ice and snow. The hotel at which they stayed, when there early in the winter, was burned some weeks ago and they had to camp out. These folks will be regular mountaineers when they get through with this picture. They took a real grizzly bear with them to work in the film.

The latest at the Mutual plant is a new stage where indoor pictures can be made all the time. The space will accomodate four full companies. The stage is to be 60 by 80 feet. The whole structure is to be fully lighted by electricity. A mammoth open air stage 50 by 100 feet is also under construction, as are buildings for prop rooms and scene docks. A power house is also nearing completion. This will house a big dynamo to supply the whole studio with electrical power. The big machines are already installed and soon the place will present quite a changed appearance.

A wire was received here from the Selig company now en voyage to Panama. It said that the players were enjoying the trip, but that it was as hot as, well, it was hotter than it ever was in Los Angeles, and they stay on deck all the time wearing white clothes.

The Photoplayers' club has been put through a whirlwind and shaken up and cleaned up. A force of artificers are busily engaged in remodeling the second floor. The bar is being taken out and a library put in with a card room just off it. The bar goes to the main floor, where the grill and stein room will be kept open all the time. This move was made only after being agitated for by Douglas Gerrard, a member of the board of control. Manager Frank Cavender succeeds William Reid. Business has increased so much that a bookkeeper has been added to the employee list.

The Majestic and Morosco theatres have been sold, that is, the leases have been bought by E. J. Quinn, S. H. Friedlander and H. D. Hertz. Both houses will run musical comedy. Moving pictures will also be run at the Majestic from time to time. Mr. Morosco stated that he would soon build a big new theatre himself. He has gone east again, having left last week.

There are now an even dozen directors turning out stories at the big Mutual plant, the latest producers being George Nicholl, Paul Powell, R. A. Walsh and G. A. Beranger.

Just a year ago this week Los Angeles suffered a five inch downpour of rain which paralyzed traffic, hung up trains, and washed out much property. The picture people were knocked out of two weeks' work, and yet some good scenes of the flood in the city were taken. This week we have had about two inches of rain, only one day this week being good for cameramen.

Just a last word. Douglas Gerrard in charge of the boxes for the coming Photoplayers' ball said that the whole fifty-six compartments had been sold; thus the outlook for the big affair shows that it will be a real world beater.

Lois Weber and Phillips Smalley, who have been producing for Bosworth, have closed with that concern and will depart for San Diego to indulge in a short vacation after which they will go to work again for another firm. Fritzi Scheff is finishing "The Pretty Mrs. Smith" and will leave here as soon as the last scenes are tested. Then will follow "Help Wanted" with Lois Meredith in the title part.

Dave Kirkland, comedy director formerly with the Sterling, has joined with Mack Sennett at the Keystone and will be busy shortly on some new pictures.

Over at the Biograph the players are all busy. Charles T. Hoskins, engaging director, tells of how many people in search of extra work use the ruse of the salesman to get to talk to him. He says they try to sell the company, through him, everything from soap to real estate, and automobile salesmen are numerous. Then enter with their talk about selling, but wind up with "Is there any chance to get on here extra?"

How would you feel if you were the leading man of a company and the heavy holds you up by placing the muzzle of a forty-five against your abdomen, and the weapon accidentally goes off? Your breath would kind of all come at once and a little 30,000 volt current would tickle up your spine wouldn't it? Well, that's just what Herbert Rawlinson experienced in "The Black Box" picture which is just being completed for this week. He said his coat was burned, and his flesh might have been burned but for the lucky presence of a revolver in his belt. He put it there to be ready for a following scene, and it saved him from injury.

Another publication has been launched here. This time it is more of a technical magazine, to be known as "Static Flashes," and is brought out by members of the cameramen's club here. It will be printed twice a month and will be primarily for the grinders of film, but the players will also have considerable mention. We do not know the editor, but expect to hear more about him when the first copy is received.

Again the Kalem studio is to be opened. Harry Revier, who produced a special picture for Lubin, has taken over the beach studio and will put on a newspaper serial of twenty-two reels. He says that it is to be a novelty comedy picture, with some new effects and ideas. He has Gladys Brockwell, formerly of Inceville, and Charles Widey, who worked at Kalem studio in Glendale, as his leads, supported by a company of ten other players.

We happened to see a program used at the recent Static Club ball and here are some of the new dances listed: Fade-in waltz, Negative one-step, Buckle waltz, Slow motion waltz, Side line side step, Magazine two-step, Pan waltz, Tilting two-step, Tripod tripper, and the last dance was the Fade-out waltz. The dancing started with the Camera crawl.

Thank you! Premier has been heard from again and the Santa Paula studio news is here. They had a fire up there which destroyed the dressing rooms of the women, but fortunately the flames were confined to one section of the building, and no further loss resulted. Henry Woodruff is now at the Mutual working in a big picture. It is quite difficult to keep track of the new buildings that are being erected at this busy place. The entrance is always being changed, and if it were not for the back door being permanent, one could not find one's way through the maze of stages and office buildings. The new inside studio is completed and already one company has done a picture in there while it rained outside.

Anita King and Victor Moore have been started by Oscar Apfel in "Snobs" at the Lasky studio. Two companies worked through all the recent rains at this plant in the glass studio. Mr. Lasky says that the company certainly has profited by the new stage under glass and other workers will use it from time to time.

SELIG MAKES CONTRACT WITH GOTCH.

The Selig Polyscope Company has contracted with Frank Gotch, the world's champion wrestler, for his appearance before a motion picture camera, in three wrestling bouts, the honorarium for which will approximate $100,000. Arrangements have been made for the trying out of the big wrestlers preparatory to their appearance with Gotch in the genuine contests before the camera.

The contract between Gotch and the Selig concern, provides that the champion shall meet three men to be selected by the Selig Polyscope Company. Gotch is to receive $25,000 in cash for the first match. For the second match in which he is to meet the second wrestler selected by the Selig Company, Gotch will receive $25,000 in cash and a bonus of $10,000 if he wins the match. For the third match in cash, and an honorarium of $15,000 if he wins the contest. Selig Company, the champion wrestler will receive $25,000 in cash, and an honorarium of $15,000 if he wins the contest. This brings the total to $100,000.

Homer Croy Marries

Humorist and His Bride Pose for Animated Weekly Cameraman While the Service Is Performed.

HOMER CROY, whose humorous contributions have appeared at various times in "Puck," "Life," "Judge," "Leslie's Weekly," "Colliers" and a host of other serious and would-be comic publications, was married before an Animated Weekly motion-picture camera in the New Thought (Swedenborgian) church in East Thirty-fifth street, near Park avenue, New York, Sunday, Feb. 7.

Mr. Croy's first serious venture in life was attended by the entire Universal publicity staff. The Animated man filmed Mr. Croy and his bride, who was Miss Mae Savelle of Bagdad, Fla., first as they stood on the steps of the church in bridal costume and later as Miss Savelle, in traveling dress, was helped into the Croy limousine.

Mr. and Mrs. Croy will spend their honeymoon in Washington and upon their return will travel to the opening of Homer Croy in Egypt.

Universal City on March 15 as the guests of President Carl Laemmle of the Universal Film Corporation. Mr. Croy recently completed a trip around the world with a motion picture camera ever at his right hand. The pictures which he took will be exhibited by the Universal Film Co. They are to be called "Seeing the Funny Side of the World with Homer Croy."

Upon his return from Universal City Mr. and Mrs. Croy will live at Forest Hills, L. I., where Mr. Croy has built a home of original design. On the second floor Mr. Croy has installed a projection room and in this room scenes from his wedding will be exhibited upon his return.

Among those present were: J. A. Waldron, editor of Judge; Herb Roth of the World; John Sleicher, editor of Leslie's Weekly; Paul Gulick of the Universal Weekly; Henry Albert Phillips, Mr. and Mrs. Monty Cruze, Scott Robinson, Marc Edmund Jones, Ray Rohm, Jerome Beatty, Rathbun Kip, Mrs. T. A. Wise, John F. Beffel, Rodney Hickok, Mr. E. B. Wiley, Mrs. Martha Crane, Miss Eleanor Crane, Mrs. C. B. Judson, Walter Hurtwig, E. V. Gent, Miss Elinor Brinkerhoff, Miss Greta Wallin, Jerome Cudlipp and Miss Thelma Cudlipp, Owen Johnson, Charles Phelps Cushing, Miss Gladys Pope, Burr Price, Mr. and Mrs. Cherrington, and Mr. and Mrs. Louis Baury. R. M. McElravy of the Moving Picture World acted as best man to Mr. Croy and Dion Kennedy, organist of the Aeolian Hall and St. George's Church, Brooklyn, played selections from Lohengrin. The Rev. Dr. Julian K. Smythe officiated.

"BIG U" CAPTURES ARCHER McMACKIN.

Archer McMackin, former producer with the Essanay company at their Chicago studios, and more recently with the Albuquerque Film Co. in Los Angeles, has joined the "Big U." Mr. McMackin is a quick worker and both writes and produces his own plays. In the few days since he joined the Hollywood studios of the Universal Mr. McMackin has written and produced "The Refugees," a one-reel story of two tramps who in an effort to live without soiling their hands with manual labor, pose in the hick towns as Belgian refugees.

Bertha Burnham has been secured to play the leading female roles while Ernie Shields and Eddie Boland, formerly with the Joker company, under the direction of Jack Blystone, before the latter's transfer to the L-Ko company, will appear in the leading male roles.

Markets for American Films

By Joseph Lamy.

ITALY.

LA BELLA ITALIA is perhaps the one country in Europe which, to a certain extent, handles the film business in the American fashion. Italy is principally and exclusively open for feature films, i. e., two, three or four-reel subjects. Indeed, single reels can scarcely find a market there, except they are unusually good subjects. While in France and most of the northern markets of Europe the film program runs a full week in each picture house, or at best is changed twice a week. In Italy (as in Spain) the program is usually changed every day or two, and runs only three days or more when it happens to be very important. On the other hand, the program is rather short, about 4,000, 4,500 or 5,000 feet, combining a big feature of three to four reels, a comedy or comic and a scenic. Eventually we may also see two two-reelers and one or two split reels. But little attention is given to the singles; they serve only to fill out the program, and the need for them is more than covered by the Italian producers.

But Italy is a good market for two, three or four-reel features, provided the subjects are carefully selected. Italians like good advertising, and American features would soon find demand, due to the fact of always having a splendid line of paper.

It would be quite difficult to sell or rent films of greater length than three or four reels, owing to the length of program already explained, in which the audiences are accustomed to always see a small film. The public likes fine and strong society dramas, detective stories, stories after famous authors or adaptations of famous plays—so far they have never been interested in the Western dramas and comedies, except when they were extremely strong. Good features with Indian fights or with wild animals find also acceptation, but the plot must be good, and the fighting and battle scenes well staged. I saw many American five or six-reel features, which would have readily sold in Italy, provided they were cut down to three or four reels, say three thousand to four thousand feet. Those films in their original length, while splendid for the American market, with a few exceptions, show many details particularly American, which the foreign public would find tiresome. This is a detriment to their sale in foreign countries, especially on the European continent—and the proof lies in the fact that many of the big American features of five reels and more, handled in Euorpe via London, are considerably reduced in length to make them more fit for European markets.

Of good features suitable to their taste, Italians can easily buy two, three or even four prints, with about one hundred to two hundred and fifty posters. Films of this nature are shown all over the country in the important cities for two or three days "in first run" at rather good prices, but afterwards the renting price diminishes rapidly. The cities in which they are first shown are Milan, Genoa, Rome and Naples, but there are many other important places which like to show the films as soon as possible after release. The current sale price for features is about seven or eight cents a foot—(L. 1, 15—1, 35 a metre). Higher prices can sometimes be obtained for exceptionally good films. The films are sold to one buyer with exclusive rights for all the country, or to several buyers with exclusive rights for several provinces.

Italy has a Government censor board, which is located in Rome, and all films which are to be projected must previously be approved by the censors. The charge is 10 centesimi per metre, i. e., about 2/3 of a cent per foot, payable on the first print only, and the films must be presented with Italian titles when passing censorship. The Italian buyers are opposed to purchasing films without inspection, which makes the transaction somewhat difficult, unless the producer has his own branch office or at least an Italian representative. This particularly applies to American films, as many made in the United States which are not suited to Italian tastes, also on account of the censor board being rather strict. Indeed, the censors order the cutting of many scenes which pass in America without any objection, such as murders, vaults being opened by crooks, certain crook stories, or plots of white slavery, etc. As some films might be entirely prohibited or cut down so that the real value suffers, it can be understood that Italian buyers cannot take this risk. They, therefore, prefer buying films already passed through the censor board, or on condition of being returned if they are refused by the censors or so cut down that the value is materially reduced.

In the actual state of the market the best prospects would be for the manufacturer to operate his own exchange. Otherwise, if sale only is considered, there are many good agents there, but as there are also many less reliable men in the line, extreme prudence in arranging for representation is advised.

The exchange men, agents, etc., in the trade travel extensively over the country and take a great interest in every new and good feature which is released. The big productions of Cines, Ambrosio & Pasquali, especially appeal to the Italian public, attained a great success and high prices for the rights for the different provinces. The first shows are given in the big theaters, and I remember having seen myself in Rome, at the Teatro Constantino, one of the best theaters there, the first representation of "Espartacus" before a crowded house which took much interest in the film.

There are many fine moving picture houses everywhere, especially in the larger cities. In some places films are projected in the open air in summer time, or on the flat roofs of the houses.

All in all, Italy is a good country for good films, and as American films have been little exploited there, a campaign with a well selected supply might prove successful.

Nearly Ten Thousand Scenarios Received

Winner of American Film Mfg. Company's $10,000 Contest to Be Announced May 2d.

Out of the 9,846 scenarios submitted in the "$10,000.00 Prize Photoplay" contest, the judges have selected the winner. The identity of the successful competitor will be revealed in the newspapers in their Sunday issue of May 2d.

The picture of the fortunate author will be shown in conjunction with the first release of the film, which will be in theaters throughout the country Monday, May 3d.

Instead of the first episode of the new serial consisting of two reels, an additional reel of 1,000 feet will be devoted to the winner of the contest, displaying his or her picture, environment and an interesting human angle connected with the award of $10,000.00.

The judges who selected the $10,000.00 prize winner are Miss Mae Tinee, editor of the "Right Off the Reel" page of the Chicago Sunday Tribune; J. R. Freuler, first vice-president of the Mutual Film Corporation, and R. R. Nehls, Chicago manager of the American Film Mfg. Company.

The scenarios came from every State in the Union. Some of the best known authors in Filmdom, as well as thousands of unknown moving picture fans, entered the contest. Assistant judges were kept busy for weeks reviewing the scenarios submitted and classifying them for final inspection.

The new serial will be produced by the American Film Mfg. Company in its studios at Santa Barbara, Cal., and Chicago, Ill. Mr. S. S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Mfg. Company, is now in California personally directing the selection of the cast and all the plans for the production of the serial. In addition to the stars of the American Film Mfg. Company, Mr. Hutchinson will procure some of the best known people in Filmdom to appear in this continued picture.

The distribution of the serial will be under the personal direction of J. R. Freuler, with headquarters in Chicago and New York, and branch offices in every city of importance.

The American Company will have the assistance of the Mutual Film Corporation's offices everywhere.

Exhibitors independent of their program affiliations will be able to book up this new serial. Preliminary applications for bookings are now being received by the American Film Mfg. Company at its Chicago office, 6225 Broadway.

MILDRED HARRIS WITH GRIFFITH-MUTUAL.

Little Mildred Harris, formerly the pet of the Broncho outfit, has come to the Griffith-Mutual studios at Los Angeles to work under the direction of D. W. Griffith. The little actress's many friends will now watch for her appearance in the productions of the great master director.

Playing the Picture

World Correspondent Cites Examples of the Right and Wrong Way—How Good Talent Is Wasted.

"WHAT are they clapping for?" is a question frequently asked in a certain moving picture theater which might be named.

"The music," is the answer.

"Oh. I always forget to listen."

And this is in a theater which features its orchestra, some six real Hungarians, who can play and who do play, getting a lot of sentiment and feeling into their music, an undoubtedly superior orchestra. In a first-class restaurant it would be the most popular orchestra in the town, but in the picture house at the end of a haunting, excellently played melody there may be three or four pure people in a house of a thousand or more who remember to applaud. Everybody else asks:

"What are they clapping for?"

Maybe the applause is limited because it is not the customary thing to applaud at a motion picture show. But when a soloist appears in connection with this same orchestra during an intermission, the house bursts into salvos of applause—that is, when it likes the soloist. But week in and week out, the orchestra plays, with intermissions, getting hardly the slightest recognition. Why? There must be some reason: the people in the town in question are fond of good, light music. The reason cannot be far to seek. It is because the orchestra, good as it is, does not play the picture.

When the Hearst-Selig feature showing views of German soldiers in drilling camps, was put on, the orchestra struck up "Un Peu D'Armour." For the love of Mike, what has "A Little Love, a Little Kiss," got to do with a battalion of raw recruits learning the "goose-step" or limbering up their muscles in running broad jumps? "Jump Me Up and Down, Bob," would have been a hundred times better.

Now, this orchestra costs the management of the theater a lot of money. The members are experts and get considerably more than the union scale. The management likes to think it draws crowds on account of the appeal of the orchestra, but it is almost safe to say that those people who are drawn by the orchestra go to hear the music, not to see the pictures. The writer has done this very thing and then has got interested in the pictures and has "forgotten to listen to the music." He remembers one scenic program that was the cause of more pure enjoyment than any other picture show on his records.

Here was a series of views along the Danube and the music was Straus' waltz, "The Beautiful Blue Danube." A news picture showed the French army passing in review and "The Marseillaise" was the music. When a British dreadnought was steaming out from the harbor, the orchestra played "The Girl I Left Behind Me." The funeral of a celebrity brought the "Dead March" from "Saul." This was playing the picture. Both pictures and music contributed to the enjoyment. They were in harmony. The auditory nerves and the optic nerves vibrated harmoniously, and the brain received a unified impression. As a matter of fact, the pictures were not remarkable, but they were made to seem wonderful by the skilful aid of the musicians.

No exhibitor would let his orchestra play "Deutchland Uber Alles" when he was showing a Scottish Highland regiment in kilts and busbys on dress parade, nor would a series of evolutions by a Uhlan battalion or a German infantry regiment entraining for the front be accompanied by "Its a Long Way to Tipperary." Neither would Schubert's Serenade nor "Hearts and Flowers" add to the effectiveness of either series. Yet much these same things are done every day in the picture houses which maintain expensive orchestras. Good pictures and good music are both excellent things, and will both pull, but they will not pull well unless they pull together.

A vaudeville manager does not split his stage in two and offer a dual act on each side of the central partition. A big circus does keep three rings going at once, but that is a matter of expediency, a plan to get all the money possible into the big tent and give those at the far ends an opportunity to see something. It is only by concentrating on the ring nearest you that you can enjoy a circus, at that. But when the picture exhibitor offers a musical program and a picture program which are not planned to combine in increasing the general effect of the show, he is trying to mix oil and water.

People are not simultaneously ambidextrous with their minds. The human brain cannot do two things at once. As an intellectual exercise it might be possible to make the brain work double, but people do not go to motion picture shows for mental gymnastics. The picture show appeals to the emotional side, not to the intellectual. There are pictures which appeal to the mind, and not the heart, just as the most highly developed music is probably a matter of intellect rather than of feeling, but music like this and pictures like these do not fill the motion picture houses. People go to picture shows to be entertained. They want to be thrilled, rather than to be instructed.

The answer is—Play the picture. Much of the effectiveness of the closing scene is one of Miss Clara Kimball Young's latest successes, "The Deep Purple," as presented in a certain Middle Western theater, was due to the fact that the man at the Wurlitzer orchestra, as it happened to be, sounded some bars of real church music when Doris was at the new organ and "The Rosary" was played as Doris fingered the keys during the last few feet of the film. Whether people noticed it or not, the music and the picture were in keeping. The picture produced an impression on the mind which was heightened by the impression produced by the music. If an orchestra had been doing Dvorak's "Humoresque," just because it could, the resulting impression would have been extremely conflicting. The brainstorm caused by the efforts of the senses to classify and harmonize the different impressions would have sent people home in a state of mind not particularly favorable to either the film or the theater.

There are very few people given to any sort of introspection. They hear and see and receive impressions, and are governed accordingly, without thinking or without knowing why. But the point is they are affected in this way, and the exhibitor who appreciates this fact and turns it to his own account can extract profit therefrom. It does not mean that the musical program must be worked out expensively, either, though it is probable the more artistic attention, up to a degree limited by popular appreciation, that can be given to this principle, the better will the results be.

People who go to picture shows or other places of amusement go with their minds made up to be entertained; their whole mental attitude is favorable, and intelligent efforts to meet their wants will be appreciated and will pay. The girl at the piano or the ten-piece orchestra, as well as the electric piano or the elaborate pipe organ, can all play the picture, and when they do business is bound to respond.

"When the Mountains Call"

A Thrilling Story of Hardy Mountaineers on a Summer Vacation Amid the Eternal Snows of Mount Adams, Washington.

ROBERT C. BRUCE, with his cameraman and four other experienced mountaineers, left Portland, Oregon, early in July on the steamer Bailey-Gatzert for the Columbia River Gorge, taking views of the towering basalt columns, Multnomah and Horsetail Falls, the Cascades and Rapids, and other beautiful scenes of this region where nature is so lavish with her charms.

An exciting seven-mile trip in a frail craft down a lumber flume in 35 minutes shows views of lively interest and unusual photography. Thirty miles from the river the party was equipped with a pack train of horses, burros and dogs, and hit the trail for Mount Adams. The main camp was pitched at snow line and many side trips were made to film the glaciers and canyons of this majestic peak.

On July 16th they left camp at one o'clock in the morning and after thirteen hours of awful struggle and hardships over the lava rock and windswept snowfields the summit of the mountain was reached in a terrific blizzard. At times it looked as if the climbers would be hurled into eternity, but their daring and nerve carried them through to safety.

This picture has been selected to complete the program of the elaborate film spectacle "The Hypocrites," now playing at the Longacre Theater. The beauty, poetry and simplicity of nature in the grandeur of the snow-capped peaks of the Cascade Range intensifies the artist's intepretation of "Truth." It is controlled by Mrs. Katherine F. Carter, of 171 Madison avenue, New York.

STAR CAST IN NEW GRIFFITH-MUTUAL PLAY.

In D. W. Griffith's latest feature, "The Mother and the Law," is found a well balanced cast. The principals include Mae Marsh, Robert Marron, Miriam Cooper, Walter Long, F. A. Turner and Thomas Wilson. The theme deals with the career of an impoverished married couple of the slums. The average ward politician's power is utilized splendidly.

Moving Picture Educator

Conducted by the REV. W. H. JACKSON

THE WONDERS OF MAGNETISM.

A NEW Edison educational release is one of those interesting, helpful and complete scientific studies which in the course of a few minutes gives a complete course in magnetism. The twofold nature of magnetism is graphically explained and its value to science and industry practically applied.

"The Wonders of Magnetism" (Edison).

The average school boy is familiar with the steel magnet as a toy, and at the same time an instrument of a something beyond he longs to know more about; here is his opportunity, led upwards from that which pleases him, he learns of those secret powers which puzzled ancient philosophers, who, however, developed the magnetic needle known in China centuries ago. The growth of the power of magnetism is shown in the Edison separator performing the singular task of separating magnetic and non-magnetic ores. The film is a valuable and complete lesson.

HARD TIMES? NO! IT'S MOVING PICTURES.

In certain Western States an industry patronized by thirsty people showed considerable signs of falling off. In one large city which may for its own sake remain nameless one in "the business" declared the times as "rotten." In answer to the inquisitorial reporter as to the cause, he said: "I used to wonder where all the boys must go who used to be in here. For a while I laid it to hard times. At last I woke up to the fact that it was the moving pictures which had captured my trade." A further cause of attraction in the moving picture house is the better music which has proved superior to that given in the cheap music halls attached to so-called "cafes" or "hotels."

A social worker in this same city declares: "The man who used to loaf away his evenings around a saloon has found that by spending a great deal less on liquor he can pass an evening more pleasantly and economically looking at good pictures."

It was added that these changes were not the result of any organized effort, but came in a most natural manner. Going into details a Gospel Mission worker in this city says that thirty per cent of former loafers are no longer so. The pictures first attracted, then pleased and afterward edified so that the ultimate effect was an elevating one.

Here again is a testimony to the educational effect and influence, even of the so-called non-educational pictures.

THE WAR AND MOVING PICTURES.

The Kaiser, always a lover of the moving picture, is having films taken of the best of the German troops in action, so that they may be exhibited to encourage patriotism. In Turkey especially these pictures are being shown to inspire confidence and arouse the Teutonic sentiment there. An enterprising American automobile maker among the first to use the moving picture at home to illustrate all that could be of commercial value thereby, is now showing pictures of his automobiles of every description as they are being used on the battle field. Thus does the moving picture aid the ambitious and enterprising; as a result it would seem that to arouse Patriotism, Enthusiasm, Ambition, Enterprise, Energy and Commercial Success, use the moving picture.

FOR THE MODERN FARMER.

A good picture for country districts at once interesting as a story and instructive in its teachings is a recent Edison Edison release entitled "In His Father's Footsteps." The gist of the story being that of a farmer who farmed as his father and grandfather had done before him. No advance, no changes, no improvements, consequently ever-increasing sanitary dangers.

The value of the work to be done by a State Board of Health is the hidden truth, while a daughter is impressed by the literature which comes to the house the father ignores it.

At last the old vile conditions breed typhoid fever and the daughter is stricken; aroused by her danger, convinced of the cause, the father after securing her recovery, follows the advice of the Sanitary Inspector and a cleansed and purified farm is the result, modern conditions prevail and health and prosperity result. This picture should have a wide value in rural districts and should appear at all State Fairs, Farmers' Conventions and Granges.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

You and Your Printer.

SOMEWHAT worse than usual are two samples sent in by friends of this department. One is a bill with most of the lines set in Old English. As shown here, some of it is 48 point, but even at that, to set any part of a throwaway in puzzle type is very nearly criminal. Another bill reads:

A Big Feature
Columbus Discovering America in three reels

An Uproaring Comedy

This, at first glance, suggests that the Selig picture is one of those "comical" things. You have to look to the bank above to realize that they are advertising a four reel show and that the "uproaring" comedy is the fourth reel. No title is used, and, being ruled off into a box by itself, probably nine-tenths of the readers are still wondering what there was "uproaring" in an historical subject.

We were showing these two horible examples to a man in the printing business, a highly specialized business dealing with a class of trade largely unfamiliar with printing.

"What was the printer about?" he asked, decidedly shocked.

We pointed out that the printer probably followed copy, but he shook his head. "No printer should send out a bill with "uproaring" for 'uproarious,'" he insisted, "even if he was darned fool enough to suppose that the Columbus picture was a comedy, and no printer has any business using old English on a throwaway, even if the patron wants it."

And that's the way we look at it. The printer has no business turning out a bad job. If he knows no better, all the more reason for changing to a man who does. The printer owes it to his patron to turn out good work. If he himself cannot spell, he should have a proofreader, and if he has none, it is better to go where there is one.

There should be a good understanding between you and your printer. He should be willing to give you what you want, but you should be willing not to want what is against all the rules of the art. Get together, you two, get a man who will work with you, and even if his prices are ten per cent. higher than the little shop, you'll get more than ten per cent. in return. In a photoplay theater the pennies must be counted carefully, but economy is one thing and getting something for money is another.

Take that old English matter, for instance. It may have been printed in a shop so small that having a couple of circulars in the chases ties up the available type and the proprietor, to save time, must use what he has left. Perhaps he charged a dollar less than the man with plenty of good type. But where is the dollar saved if, say $5 are spent for a job that is useless because it will not be read? Look into this matter of printing carefully, and look at it from more than the angle of price. A job where you save three dollars and lose ten means a loss of seven dollars above the three you save.

Still Young.

Carl Whittaker, who says he is manager, operator and janitor of the Hiawatha theater, Willoughby, Ohio, sends in a very neat pocket program for comment.

There is not much to the program proper to call for comment. The list of attractions runs three days to the page, the days dated and the type uniform, each day cut off with double rule in the approved fashion. A vest pocket can do little more than give the attractions, and this does a little better than that. But the back page announces that, owing to a prior engagement, the orchestra is not available for the "feature night" and that night will be "discontinued" to be resumed the following week and indefinitely thereafter. It is an important matter, perhaps, but the word is wrongly used and sounds badly. If the nights are discontinued they are done. It would be better to say that the night will be "omitted" for that week only. Discontinued suggests finality, where omission typifies a temporary interruption. It is splitting hairs, perhaps, but hair-splitting that helps.

But the front page can be made over to good effect. Look at these two cuts:

One is overcrowded, and badly proportioned. The other is well laid out with plenty of space. It looks twice as important. We like the idea of dating the week (which the Cameraphone does not do), but this should be an eight point line at the very top of the page. There should be some space, then the name of the house, with the name of the town and state just below, not larger than ten point. The cut should be removed or replaced by a Wayside or some similar ornament and the "Issued for the convenience of our patrons" left as it is. That is a better line than the Cameraphone's "Quality pictures," though the latter is not objectionable.

But where Mr. Whittaker is called upon to walk the plank is when he says that this department and Mr. Richardson's is nine-tenths of the paper. We feel complimented that he feels that way, but we are sorry, too, for every page, text and advertising alike, should interest the exhibitor. The only way to do is to read the paper from cover to cover and soak in all the facts. The live manager keeps posted and he needs to know all that is to be found out. We are willing to admit that this is the best department in the paper. Surely we'll concede that, but every page should interest the live wire.

S. S. Stevenson, of the Princess theater, Henderson, N. C., set apart a day recently as a benefit to the Belgian Relief Fund, contributing as his own donation the expenses, and sending the entire receipts to the Curtis Publishing Company. He writes that the day's receipts were in excess of the average business, but not what they would have been had there been better weather. Most benefits carry the suspicion that the manager is one of the beneficiaries, but Mr. Stevenson anticipated this by announcing that he would make no deductions from the receipts, but would send the entire sum to the fund, donating the expenses. It would have been even better had some important business man been induced to sit in the box office, or count the tickets, giving a certificate to that effect to later be posted in the lobby. Mr. Henderson has done his share. How about you?

Fights Trading Stamps.

The Roseville theater, Newark, N. J., offers a new aspect of the farmer's matinee. It can be worked advantageously in any locality. The announcement explains itself:

THE MOVIES—THE MERCHANT AND THE MOVING PICTURE STAMP.

Exploiting the universal popularity of the Moving Picture various outside concerns in no way connected with the industry and with the sole view of benefiting themselves attempt to induce merchants to handle so-called Moving Picture Stamps, in return for which these outside parties promise to advertise and popularize their establishments. Up to the present time none of these various schemes seemed to have worked out quite satisfactorily. However, profiting from the different attempts "Scenario" has evolved a plan which will work out to the benefit of all local interests—the Public—the Merchant—and last but not least "SCENARIO." All Trading Stamps become of value only when pasted on sheets or in books, and then only when in large quantities, in consequence large numbers of stamps are lost and never presented for redemption. By reason of such losses these foreign stamp companies make huge profits at the cost of the local consumer. "Scenario's" plan overcomes these objections. Such of our Merchants whose card will appear in the columns of this programme will issue free to their customers "Scenario" Coupons at the rate of one coupon with each 20-cent purchase. These coupons will be accepted as cash by "Scenario" at the rate of 5 coupons for 5 cents at Matinees, and 15 coupons for 10 cents at Evening performances. It is with the view of boosting our Matinees that the relative value of these coupons is greater at Matinee than at Evening performances.

By trading with the merchants whose card appears in our programme you will be well served, buy goods at the very lowest cash price possible, beside supporting local enterprise.

"Scenario" Coupons are the size and shape of our regular tickets, they require no pasting in books nor hoarding until large quantities are accumulated, every time you have five of them they become of cash value at "Scenario." If any coupons are lost no FOREIGN concern will profit by it.

ASK FOR SCENARIO COUPONS AND SUPPORT LOCAL INSTITUTIONS.

The recurrence of the word Scenario has reference to the fact that the house program is called by that name, or perhaps the house is the Scenario, located in the Roseville section.

In such a scheme tickets or stamps are sold in blocks to the merchants, generally at a reduction that makes them represent two or three per cent. of the purchase. To obviate the delay of counting fifteen stamps for each admission in the evenings, it might be a good plan to use adhesive stamps and issue cards to which they can be affixed by fives.

Scrapping.

Recently someone asked just what first run pictures were and we told them. Evidently there was a reason for the inquiry, as this card from John Bollinger, of the Pastime theater, Cainesville, Mo.:

(Apologies to the Universal)
WHO'S DOING IT?

Evidently the Gem theater got considerably "peeved" over the fact that they could not "slip one over" on the public.

The so-called Journal referred to by the Gem happens to be "The Moving Picture World," recognized the world over as authority on the subject. We will gladly loan the Gem copies of said "Journal" so they may "post up" and learn the difference between new print and first run pictures. Most certainly first run pictures are new prints. But are new prints all first run? The Kerrigan series are shown day and night at other places 37 days before they are seen here, and shown every day. A man can see the Kerrigan series in Kansas City. Coming to Cainsville he can see the same identical picture over a month later. Which is FIRST RUN? There's the difference! Does the Gem know better, or has it learned something? We want something more than a school boy's definition, "When the Terence O'Rourke" series passes through our Motiograph 1-A, it's the first time through a machine and that makes them First-Run."

Don't BE DECEIVED! Who's doing it?

Life is too short to get mixed up in local scraps, but it does seem to us that it is poor business policy to advertise as first run "aged" film. It is better to advertise "first time in this city," and stick to facts. Too many of the general public are informed about the pictures these days, even without the help of the opposition, and innocent misrepresentation hurts a house.

And Carl Laemmle surely did start something with his slogan.

Changing Style.

The Lehigh Orpheum, South Bethlehem, Pa., has cut from eight pages to four, using a better tinted stock, a front page cut and giving the program for two days on each page. This is a better make-up than their recent eight-pager, in which the advertising of tradespeople fairly smothered the house work. The companion house, the Third Street theater, Easton, is still using the old form, but has cut from twelve to eight, with an insert page.

Perhaps when they realize what a good business puller the new form of the Lehigh is, they will adopt that. It is a mistake to use too much foreign advertising.

Calendars.

The Reel theater, Cleveland, gave out calendars for Christmas, a small, but legible, calendar, a half tone and about a third of space for type, the cut being in a photo brown and the rest in an olive green ink. We would like to see some more of their advertising because we think it must be carefully done, and we get that impression from the way the calendars came in. There was a dozen sent to show that the half tones varied to that number of subjects, and in packing someone carefully turned each alternate calendar upside down so that the combined calendars did not bunch up at one end of the package. That's a little thing to take notice of, but people who give that care to the small things are generally those who are equally careful of the larger and more important matters.

Next year it should pay some calendar concern to get out the photoplayers in series.

If Mr. Upstill Will Please—

We are still watching the program of the Star theater, Long Pine, Neb., hoping that Mr. Upstill will get busy with his spare page and a half of program space. In a recent issue he apologizes for the brevity of his announcement, explaining that the program list did not come in from the exchange until too late to have much composition done. He adds that he has arranged to have the program sent by wire in future to obviate delay. This is characteristic of his sincere straightforwardness. A man like that could get out some splendid program chat if only he would sit down and write what is in his mind. He's a natural born advertiser, but he doesn't know it or will not admit the fact. He will find it much easier than he probably thinks it is, if only he'll get rid of the idea that writing is something to be left to authors. We wish he would try it for a couple of issues, anyway; just some heart-to-heart talks about his house and his programs,

Lost Friend Note.

What has become of Mr. Stanton, of Gardner, Mass.?

All Ways.

The Thanhousers players are going to make their money coming and going. John William Kellette has formed a company to run the former North Avenue theater, New Rochelle, as a Thanhouser Players theater, the stock all being held by the players. Some of them will appear on the stage and most of them will be in the audience, and Kell writes that they are all going to pay their way in. He sends in his first bill for criticism. We hate to get into an argument with an old printer, but we would point out that in the advertising he sends, and there are several submissions, he does not give the Thanhouser Players large enough type. The whole pull of the idea is that this is the personal venture of the Thanhouser Players, and he should have smeared that all over the page instead of which on a throwaway he gives them one 36 point condensed line and puts the date in 48 point. Then, too, he runs a large cut of Harry Benham, who opened the house as soloist, but the name appears just once, and then in ten point. How would you like to be able to get any Thanhouser player you wanted as an attraction? And how strong would you play them up? Of course New Rochelle is not New York, and the printers are not onto their jobs, but Kell knows the ropes and should stand over the job or set it himself after this. They must have some 60 point type somewhere in that burg. That's none too big for the star attraction.

A Matter of Stock.

Ralph Ruffner sends in two programs he got out for the American theater, Butte, Mont. He wants to know which stock we like the better. One is a very fine grain imitation of a basket weave. The others looks as though a bit of hand-made lace has been pasted on the card, standing out in relief, yet taking ink better than might be expected, though here and there the embossing is too high for the ink to reach, this being most noticeable in the trade mark, which looks like a dirty cut. We like the stock with the least embossing the better of the two. We would be even more appreciative if there was no embossing. Embossed effects are all right in their place, but a straight surfaced stock would be better still for this class of work where dignity of effect would be more forceful than fussiness. A plain stock of the greyish tint, printed in the dark blue, would make a handsome issue.

Mr. Ruffner does something that has not been done before that we recall. He prints a monthly program and in one corner he runs the calendar for the month. This is not only useful as a pocket calendar, but another use could be suggested by a line reading "Mark right now the dates you particularly want to remember." Then the recipient can ring the dates of the pictures he feels most interested in and it will serve as a reminder. Funny no one thought of the calendar idea before, but it is a little wrinkle well worth while on any monthly program. Where there are only certain days given to features, it would be well to ring or box these dates. The American Type Founders' Miniature Calendar Figures will work well in this connection or for the full calendar.

We like Mr. Ruffner's make up, which runs across the five inch type page in eight point. The first column gives day and date, the second the title, the third the star and the last column the number of parts and name of the brand. Leader carries the eye across the broken spaces. At the bottom he announces "Subject to change without notice, though we never have." The back page tells you

You can't resist
That little twist
Of Quality.

Sometimes a little catchline like that, hammered home, will become worth more than 28 sheet stands.

The Right Idea.

In a letter that was not intended for publication, Herschel Stuart, of the E. H. Hulsey houses in Dallas, Texas, writes of his employer:

> Hulsey is not one of the "up stage" kind. He is honest about every little thing as well as the bigger ones. Money is not better than the third consideration. He believes in quality and doesn't care about the price. He buys much more service than he needs in order to keep straight with his public, yet he never takes that service from the little fellow if the little un needs it. He promoted me from a small job to a better one not because I am a great boy, but because I don't lie about the pictures in the press stuff.

Mr. Hulsey has the Queen and the Old Mill in Dallas, as well as houses through the state. Some idea of the service can be gained from this:

> Paramount Pictures run five days per week. World Films, General and Kleine divide their time between the Old Mill and the Queen. All of the above are contracted for exclusively except the General, which we share with a competitor. The five-reel features (six sometimes) make their part of the two hour performance. The Mutual Program is an extra exclusive feature, but few are used except the Keystones. The program was rented expressly to have a Keystone every day in the year, which may be done by repeating the best ones. The other one or two reels, gauged by the length of the feature picture, are taken from the Mutual or else borrowed from the Queen, which buys extra reels to be able to pick the best ones. Thursday and Friday is feature day at the Queen, which gives us more to choose from to get on seven reels.

All this service for only two houses seems excessive, but it is a regrettable fact that it is necessary if a manager wants to get a fairly good daily program, for this extract from a letter from a Denver physician is characteristic of the state of mind of many who used to like the photoplays:

> And since these two plays (?) constituted the entire evening's entertainment, most of the audience had reason to feel that somewhere along the line between the writing of the script and the time they regained the sidewalk, some person or persons should be rewarded with six months—twice a year, for perpetrating it.

Not all managements can afford to take all services just to get a good show, but if they do not (and not always if they do) they are bound to get into trouble with their patrons.

The Frankster.

A. L. Bliven, of the Frank theater, Council Bluffs, sends in number seven of the Frankster, which he modestly says is "a classy little affair," that is self supporting "and eliminates the expense of newspaper advertising and printing." Now a program does not eliminate the newspaper advertisement in places where all the houses advertise in the local issue. It can keep down the cost of that advertising, but some representation is necessary. And, comparing this to other issues, we think that a little less complacency and a little more thought will add materially to the "class."

Starting at the top, the heading is not attractive. It is quite the reverse. Mr. Bliven should pick out a less severe, and yet not too ornamental a face. The American Type Founders will send him a booklet of newspaper headings if he asks for it of the Kansas City office, or perhaps his own printer can show him a type book. The first page carries a cut of a Thanhouser player, a column of local brag that is decidedly good for the house, and three items, one turning the page. When this runs out there is a ten point heavy gothic "Program" and then a dash and "Sunday" in twelve point. As there is no cut-off dash following the preceding type, it looks as though "program" were the tail piece to that story. And only the boobest kind of a boob printer will ever use a side head bigger than the caption type. There is about a half column of straight body type program covering two sections and then a jump to the third page where it is finished off in the same style. Without any dash there is a short run of local stuff and more advertising.

Now this issue is being gotten out to tell the patrons what is coming. There should be the complete program for the week with days and dates on the front page. Then on the inside pages the comment program should be run with the titles set in full face upper and lower case and then the description in the body type. After the program is properly cared for the rest of the stuff can be thrown in, but since this is a program, the first care should be to get the program in, and with the very best possible display. This is not a classy program by any manner of means. It is one of the poorest specimens that ever came out of a back room job office. It may not be politic to change printers, but if he is patronized for the sake of local appeal, he should be made to get out something at least halfway decent.

Help! Help!

H. P. Wareham, of the Wareham theater, Manhattan, Kans., writes: "I note your comment on a house program that someone sent you." If he has only noticed comment on "a" program, he must have been losing a lot of issues. Anyhow he wants comment on his issue. We do not see much to suggest in the way of changing his one page program except in a minor matter. He wants to emphasize the fact that he gives a daily matinee and under each date he says only "Matinee 3.00" instead of adding "Evenings at 8.00. It may seem foolish, but we believe that many people will think that this means that matinees only are given. It would be better to run the matinee and night hours instead of "3:00" use "Matinee at 3." It is not necessary to add noughts for the minutes unless a flat hour is used in one case and the quarter or half in another. Then the noughts balance the "8:15," or whatever it is.

Mr. Wareham uses a cut head built up with some highly elaborate decorative material. In one the border is broken to let in a line cut, but the general effect is that of an ornate frame. He follows good rules of make up, an eight point body type, names in caps and titles in full face, and the stuff is properly and intelligently set and displayed. Beyond adding the evening performances and suggesting that the darker of the two inks is vastly the better, we can only say, "good." It might be possible to sell the back page for a profit, but somehow we think that Mr. Wareham would rather not. He seems to be the type of man who would rather hold it for the house alone and his business stationery as well as this program suggests that he has a mighty good sort of house.

Too Much Type.

The Lyceum theater, Clovis, N. M., uses too much type on its throw-aways. The result is that the bills, a number of which are sent, are so crowded that nothing stands out to catch the eye. They have some good ideas, but they want to use too many of them on one bill. Better one fact so set that it slaps you in the face than a whole bunch of twenty-four to forty-eight point type too close together to be read. It would be better to play up the strongest feature and then use smaller type for the rest. One catchline, "Properly projected photoplays," with a double underline of rule, might profitably be used on every piece of printing.

In launching the Trey o' Hearts series they gave a free ticket for the first installment with every 15-cent ticket sold the previous week; which is better than a broadcast distribution. The house gets ten and fifteen cents, but only the fifteen-cent tickets carried the free admission

Has It Right.

Steve Farrar writes that the local merchants want to advertise in his Casino News, but are not willing to pay more than ten cents an inch, and he thinks it is worth more than that to him. We think so, too. He has a snappy column of personal chat that makes it looked for, and so it is read, and he can afford ten cents an inch better than the outsiders.

A Musical Program.

The Lorenz theater, South Bethlehem, Pa., one of the houses in the string with the Lehigh Orpheum and the Easton Third Street, issues a musical as well as a photoplay program each week. It is a 900 house, all ground floor seats, and with a house that size they can afford to get an orchestra competent to play music worth being programed. Each day lists four good selections and underlines the star attraction for the day. The scheme is a good one, particularly when backed up by the photoplay issue, which also carried advertising. Now of the Heiberger string, only the Third Street hides its program in the advertisements, and we have hopes of that yet.

And speaking of the Third Street, they announce that they received only fourteen scripts for their next local production. And they still need actors. We thought that even in the back woods there were crowds of authors and actors for photoplay, but it seems that the Third Street was lucky.

Good.

The Strand theater, St. Paul, issued an invitation for a private view of Du Barry. Did they use Old English. No, gentle reader, they did not. They do things right out there, as a cut of their stage setting shows. They used Typo Slope. Did it look better than Old English? Believe us, aforesaid G. R. IT DID! Suppose you try one of those Typo faces when you want something.

Only.

J. N. Cason, of the Sylacauga, Alabama, Opera House, sends in what he opines is a pretty nifty little program. It would be, only for one thing. You cannot tell which is program and which is advertising until you stop to figure it out. This is fine for the local advertiser, but not so good for the house.

If we had a house and a program, we'd make the program work hardest for us. Then if there was anything left over we would let the bank and the drug store have it. It would help a little to date the day. If the day and date were boxed in, inside the program box, it would help to distinguish the program from the Hammett Hardware Co. and others. Something should be done.

They work one good idea in tying the program with ribbon instead of wire stitching, explaining that they find that people are less willing to throw the issue away because the ribbon is attractive. There is good reasoning behind the argument.

And one funny thing in their letter is that they write that "folks are so prone to overlook dates," and yet the front page is the only one of the eight giving any hint of the week the program is issued for.

Timed.

The grand theater, Williamsport, Pa., uses an odd, but effective daily advertisement. The four features are lettered and each is enclosed in a one point box within the larger six point border. And below the description is the line "Will be shown at" and the hour of each showing, fifteen minutes being allowed each reel. Feature A is shown at 2-3-4-7-8-9-10 and Feature B at 2.15-3.15 and so on. This is an excellent scheme and one worth passing on.

THE PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopsis be criticized, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is enclosed.

Get It All.

TODAY a correspondent wrote that he had noticed in the news columns of this paper that Mr. Ince had sent a company to Italy. He wanted to know if there was a possible market for a Venetian story he had written. He had read that item, but he had not read two other items, only a few weeks apart, in which it was anounced that the N. Y. M. P. was not buying. Get all the news and you'll be saved a lot of trouble.

For the benefit of others, if a company is sent to Italy or Ireland, they are sent fully provided with stuff to be made. They are taking no chances that after they get there authors, seeing the announcement will send them stuff. They carry it with them. That sort of an item should be a stop order in itself.

Mr. Carton's Ideas.

As was told lately in these columns, Bannister Merwin, now editor for the London Film Co., has been seeking to interest authors of the highest standing in the writing of photoplay; not merely to lend their names to some studio adaptation, but to write directly for the photoplay stage. One of these recruits is R. C. Carton, one of the leading dramatists of the British stage, whose work is well known over here, and in a recent issue of the Bioscope he says, among other things:

"I have got rather strong views on the question of films," commenced Mr. Carton, anticipating the interviewer's opening interrogatory, "and, personally, I have felt for a long time past that cinematography has been a little underestimated by some of my most distinguished colleagues. I do not think they have realized the inevitable value of film work as a new and most interesting medium for the expression of their imagination. Certain novels and plays lend themselves admirably to pictorial treatment, but there are many which, for technical reasons, do not make good films. Besides this, we have to realize that the available supply of literary and dramatic masterpieces is not inexhaustible. It is a mine which can to a certain extent be worked out. The demand for new films, and the number of picture theaters showing them, is already enormous, and is steadily growing, whilst the store of classical masterpieces does not increase at all proportionately.

"Taking a very keen interest, as I do, in cinematography, I had the good fortune to meet Mr. Bannister Merwin, the editor and literary advertiser of the London Film Company, and he, being an expert writer of film stories himself, was kind enough to bring home to me the fact that the writing of film plays has a very specialized technique of its own—not, perhaps, one that could not be learned with a little effort and diligence by an author or authoress with some experience of play writing, but a technique which needs to be studied.

"What are my views as to the future of the picture play? Most emphatically I believe it has great possibilities as a form of dramatic expression. In certain respects it enjoys advantages which no stage play ever can expect to command. It has strength just where other arts have weakness. For the actuality of his atmosphere the novelist must depend upon the imagination of his reader, whilst the dramatist for his mise en scene is obliged to rely upon the electrician and scene painter. Though I should be ungrateful if I underestimated the services of the latter, I cannot be unaware that canvas trees, sky borders, and the other devices of the ordinary theater are an unsatisfactory substitute for the real country lanes, the real sunsets, and the real evening breezes blowing through real trees which the cinematograph can offer. Obviously, you must gain on the film in that direction. Then, again, comparing the ordinary play with the film play, the latter gives the dramatist extraordinary elbow-room. One of the great aims in writing an ordinary play is to arrive at compression and concentration. In a film play, on the other hand, amplification is not only possible, but very often it is exceedingly effective. As to the loss of dialogue, in all moments of great dramatic tension really the less said the better. A really great situation, of really strong psychological interest, will nearly always do its own work.

"I believe that there is in the cinematograph an enormous and extraordinary varied field of activity open to those who will prepare themselves to enter it. In fact, I do not think we know at present where film work will ultimately land us. I don't like to talk of educating the public, but there is no doubt that, as more representative novelists and dramatists turn their attention to cinematography, public taste will amply keep pace with them. I am very much of an enthusiast, and I spend a great deal of time watching films, many of which I find both delightful and ingenious. Personally, I believe that the future of the picture play lies in the writing of original stories by authors of distinction and experience. Until we realize that film work has a technique of its own we shall never get the finest possible results."

One thing to which we would call particular attention is the emphasis Mr. Carton twice gives to the fact that the photoplay has a technique of its own. By technique, of course, he does not mean the mere technical preparation of the script but the inner technique by which the true artist can gain the fullest effect for a given scene or situation. Mr. Merwin, himself a most admirable technician, has started his illustrious pupils properly. Instead of "fixing up" bare ideas, he teaches them to work in the medium directly, and it is only through this means that we ever hope to obtain the true flavor of an author's originality and creative genius, be that author great or small.

Again and Some More.

We are rather surprised to receive from a newspaper man a letter in which he says:

> In a recent issue of THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD you give a brief review of Robert Wilson Neal's book "Short Stories in the Making." Your comments are interesting inasmuch as you agree with the author that Short-Story writing cannot be taught any more than photoplay writing can be taught. It would be more interesting, I am sure, if you had devoted more space to reasons why an intelligent man or woman, with ordinary application to the study of the Short-Story, cannot learn the art of story-form, of plot, of unity, and all that is necessary in the proper construction, as well as the architect learns his profession or the bricklayer gains knowledge of his trade. I am sure that I for one would be glad to read your reasons for discouraging the beginner who, as yet, is uncertain if he has ability or not. If he cannot hope to study the technique of Short-Story writing with any reasonable assurance of winning toward sucess in that vocation, pray you what outlook has he that is in the least encouraging?

There are several excellent reasons why not all "intelligent men and women" cannot learn to write stories or photoplays, and any man who knows and is honest will line up on this proposition. It is simply that the matter rests with the Almighty and no man can alter the fact that He gave to this man or that a brain lacking the qualities that go to make for success in writing. The man who knows, and who knows how to tell others what he knows in such a manner that they fully understand, can help those who have the right sort of imagination, but the man who has no imagination of the right sort, cannot be taught to write stories, for writing stories is merely the mechanical setting forth of a mental quality that must be inherent. The man who can think plots can be helped to develop his imagination, but he cannot be taught to think and he cannot turn his brain over to another for reconstruction.

Andrew Carnegie, with all his millions, cannot buy the ability to write great stories. He has a wonderful mind, a mind that largely conceived one of the greatest of modern industrial organizations, but his mind cannot think stories and he cannot purchase that ability.

A man can, as this writer hopes, learn "the art of story-form, of plot, of unity and all that is necessary in proper construction," but of what avail is that without the God-given genius for creative imagining? He might labor along with stuff painfully correct in form but unvitalized by genius. He might even sell some of the stuff, but he would never be a writer.

Almost any man can be taught to lay bricks. This is almost wholly a mechanical process, yet, even at that, some men are better bricklayers than others because of a natural aptitude developed by practice and observation. The architect may learn the technique of his profession, but that does not make him more than a mechanical architect. He can calculate stress and strains, he can lay out the plans for a house or apartment, but even here the man who is the born architect is the man who takes the head of his profession; the man who conceives and creates great cathedrals, massive palaces, important public buildings. All architects can get the same technical training as Urban, for example, but they cannot repeat his accomplishments because while they have the same technical training they have not and cannot gain the creative skill.

The correspondent quoted above wants a suggestion on study methods. The suggestion has been printed here time and again. It is WORK. WORK. WORK. Master the rules of technique. Then practice until perfection is reached or until, through years of failure it becomes apparent that perfection cannot be approximated. The development of the creative ability is gained solely through practice. It can be gained through nothing else. Learn the rules. Learn to apply the rules. Then work and keep on working until success is gained or failure must be admitted. The faker may have a brilliant success for a little time, but he won't last. It is only the worker who lasts and keeps on getting better.

Sliding.

Just across the desk an observation pupil is reading over the old releases of a certain firm. He's just looked up to remark that in about a hundred stories there are ten or twelve in which the hero turns monk or the heroine enters a convent. The central figure became troublesome and got shot into obscurity as a better plan than suicide or death. That sort of story writing is cheating. You want to get rid of a bothersome figure so you slip out from under and dodge your responsibilities. And the stories are used, lacking something better, but that does not make them good stories.

Look here. Perhaps you never were a mother. Perhaps you never can be, being a man, but you've given birth to not one but a whole bunch of people and you should feel a parent's responsibility for those people. Don't shove them onto some doorstep and run as fast as you can with your fingers in your ears to shut out the sound of crying. Meet your responsibilities. If you create Jim Jones and you have Jim slaughter Bess' parent in a thoughtless moment and by all rights Bess should marry him, but can't seeing what happened, don't have Jim shoot himself and send Bess into a convent so she cannot change her mind about not marrying anyone else. Do your full duty by the children of your brain. Don't dodge and slip and stammer with your feet. If you start something, finish it off and do a good job. Let Jim work out his soul's salvation in a fit and proper manner, don't make him a slider, too, with a gun and a coroner's inquest. Take him by the hand and face the situation with him, bravely and properly.

Changing.

Don't be afraid to change your plot if the change seems to be for the better. If you think of a story that fits a pair of young lovers and the outworking shows you that using an older couple might be more effective, increase their ages and get the most out of the idea. Just because you thought the idea for a girl of eighteen and a man of twenty-two, it does not follow that you must stick to those characters when his father and her aunt would do much better. Switch until you come to write your story and even then if you can improve throw the script down and do it all over again. Fame never came to a man or woman with a brain so narrow that they could not think all over the place and upstairs. If you start in to plant your story in Central Africa and finally get it snuggled up against the North Pole, it is all right if the story of the pole is better than that of the equator.

Knowing Facts.

How do you make radium?

You don't know, do you? You don't know, but will that stop you from writing a story about a chemist who makes radium? And if it doesn't, will you show the chemist in the laboratory with a flask and test tube, or in a big factory? Or will you find out the process and know which is correct?

Too many writers would dash off the laboratory instead of going down to the library and asking for an encyclopedia. The story might be passed by some editor and get on the screen, and perhaps only one man in a million would know you to be wrong, but he might write a tart letter to the maker of the subject and the boss might be in a peevish mood and jack up the editor and he would blame you and be mighty careful what he took from you next time. Your failure to get into close proximity to the proper volume of the Britannica would cost a market.

Just the other night some people laughed because a mayor got into office without having appointed a private secretary. Then some women came down to ask for the job and he gave it to one of them. It was so wholly at variance with the facts that it made the story look foolish. Once we worked in a newspaper office that supplied a secretary to an incoming mayor. He was our city hall reporter and he knew before the election that the job was his if the election went the right way. Most men know that this most important appointment is early made if not announced. Apparently the author and the editor and the director were all ignorant of this simple fact. It seemed all right to them, just as something else might seem equally all right to you, but if you'll keep away from things you do not know about, or else find out, you'll stand a better show in the long run.

Don't think that because you've read a few books on photoplay writing, you know all you need to know. That is just the A B C of writing. It is not even a decent start. You are an able writer only in proportion to your general knowledge. The wider your knowledge, the wider your legitimate field of writing. The way to find out things is to read, to observe, to ask. Keep your eyes open and when the eyes won't do the job, open your mouth. Someway, somehow, master facts and make them your own. Then make them work for you.

Characterization.

These extracts from a letter from a man who won't have his name mentioned are helpful. Note that he has been working for three months, seemingly without profitable result, and yet is making more lasting progress than a man who might have shipped his entire output with a fair percentage of sales:

> During the last three months I have sent out almost nothing. I have been working all the time, but my stuff has not been of the quality that I want to get the reputation or habit of doing. I have found that I could do my regular day's work for Uncle Sam and put out a two-reeler every two weeks. But if I were to do so, my stuff would certainly be mediocre and I should surely get the mediocre habit. On the other hand, if I keep on digging and studying, ditching all my inferior stuff and accepting only the superior, why don't I stand a fighting chance of getting the superior habit? That would far outweigh the few checks I might pull down with ordinary stuff and in the long run would bring me quite as much money as to whirl in and shoot them out every week.
> Do you know, I am coming to the conclusion more and more every day that it is characterization that makes a story big. Of course, you must have good plot, but you can take a good plot without character touches and it will be flat and without appeal. Add the characterizations and you get a delightful story. I don't know whether I use that word "characterization" in its accepted meaning or not, but I can show you what I mean by an example from a famous play by a famous author, played by a famous player. When the "little queen" flees from the wrath of her subjects she takes a great risk to save her little pet bird. So far as the plot is concerned, this touch is trivial. The bird does not bring the queen and her royal lover together in America—it is perfectly useless in the plot. But as a character touch, it is a work of art. Out of a hundred people who would repeat this story, not one would fail to tell that she saved her pet bird and clung to it through thick and thin.
> That is what I mean by writing in characterization. This kind of thing, trivial and often frivolous in itself, is one of the trifles that make perfection. Of course, one must be careful not to overwork the idea. It takes common sense to use just enough and not too much, but it seems to me from observation of many strong plays that it is these little touches which make the strongest appeal.

It was just such touches as these that first moved the Biograph above other productions: little humanizing touches, in themselves unimportant and of no narrative value, but which served to bring out character and make the screen people seem real flesh and blood. Do not overload the script with by-play, but if you can, now and then, introuuce a real touch do so, even if the director cuts it out. The time will come when he'll have sense enough not to. Be ready for that time.

Not That.

"Can it be that moral plays are old fashioned? Must they be risque to sell?" That's the plaint of a correspondent. In substance it is the plaint of many correspondents. It is no more than human, perhaps, to blame others rather than to take the blame, but it is more profitable to face facts. It is more likely that the moral play does not sell, not because it is moral, but because it is worthless. It is like the man with the katzenjammer who knows it was not the stuff he drank that gave him the headache, but why did he eat those sandwiches?

In the case in point the story offered is not bad, but it is not so strikingly novel or gripping that it stands a chance of more than an even break in the studio. If the story fits in with the scheme of production, it may be taken, but it is not the sort of story that an editor would take and make, even at an additional expense, because it was so good. The question of morality or the lack of it does not count. It is merely a question of the value of the plot.

Get used to looking facts in the face. Be willing to take the blame if you are to blame. Don't yawp that morality is at a discount and immorality is at a premium. The bad is not wanted, the average must take its chance, the really good always will be at a premium. White Slave stories were not made because of their immorality, but because they were vivid and strong. Clean stories may be made equally vivid and equally strong, but it is easier to write pseudo-punch than the real punch that comes in the cleaner and more lasting story. You can write a thousand stories—clean stories, on the never failing theme of love. Then you can write a thousand more and yet other thousands, but a thousand white slave stories would put every motion picture theater in the United States out of business within six months. There's one answer.

Mrs. Parson's Paper.

Mrs. Louella O. Parsons is writing a series of articles on photoplay work for the Chicago Herald. In a recent installment she recommended that 8 by 13 inch paper be used. So many readers have written in to question this statement that we wrote Mrs. Parsons for her views. In reply she writes that she has always used 8½ by 13 inch paper (there is no 8 inch width in the 13 inch length) because she likes it and thinks that it looks better.

As an editor, Mrs. Parsons can follow her own preference. The outside writer will be wise to follow the general style and use 11 inch length. Most directors and practically all editors prefer the standard size. Mrs. Parsons argues that it takes less postage, is less bulky and the paper does not have to be changed as often. Against this is the departure from standard and ease in handling, which should outweigh the minor matters of bulk and postage.

Says Not Guilty.

Frank M. Wiltermood, former Balboa editor, who seems to have a mania for writing letters, rises to declare that he is in no part guilty for the dollar-a-reel price Balboa offered. He states that he had nothing whatever to do with setting prices and conducted no correspondence with the writers. That seems to let him out, since it appears he was merely a script clerk and not an editor.

A Washington Inquest.

There has been another Inquest started in Washington, and this time it looks as though it might stick. If you are interested, send a stamped and addressed envelope for the address of the Coroner.

Philadelphia Inquests.

David Morrison, the Philadelphia Coroner, writes that the Inquest is now sitting regularly after many delays, meeting at the Family theater the first and third Fridays of each month.

Technique of the Photoplay

(Second Edition)

By EPES W. SARGENT

Not a line reprinted from the first edition, but an entirely new and exhaustive treatise of the Photoplay in its every aspect, together with a dictionary of technical terms and several sample scripts.

One hundred and seventy-six pages of actual text.

Special chapters on Developing the "Punch," Condensing the Script, Writing the Synopsis, Multiple Reel Stories, Talking Pictures, Copyrights, etc.

In cloth, two dollars. Full leather, three dollars.

By mail postpaid. Add ten cents if registration is desired.

Projection Department

Conducted by F. H. RICHARDSON

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles have been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

The first seventy-four questions are now ready, and printed in neat booklet form. They may be obtained by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy. You may be surprised at the number of questions you cannot answer without a lot of study. Canadians should send P. O. M. O. or coin only.

Question No. 72.

Best answer will be published, and the names of others sending in replies of excellence will appear in the Roll of Honor. Theater managers looking for high-class men will do well to watch the Roll of Honor.

Suppose you had a G. E. mercury arc rectifier, and were connected to the 110-volt side of a three-wire system. But the light company issued orders that all projection lamps must connect to the two outside wires. Using the cut on page 177 of the Handbook, tell us what changes you would make. Explain something of the theory and action of a mercury arc rectifier. What is lead 32 for? How could you raise the amperage of your rectifier, if it were not already to capacity? Explain, in plain, understandable words, the construction and action of a choke coil. Is it or is it not as efficient as the transformer? Why is the transformer (economizer) generally preferred for moving picture projection circuits?

Roll of Honor on Question No. 66

The Roll of Honor on Question 66 is short. It consists of Jos. H. M. Smith, Fort Worth, Tex.; G. D. Bullock, Gallup, New Mexico (it seems he has moved); Harry Grant, Placeville, California; H. W. Seward, Reading, Pennsylvania; Charles W. Brown, East Dedham, Massachusetts; Montreal, Canada; John Hindman, Chicago, Illinois, and Spokane, Washington.

I have selected the reply of Brother Hindman as best suited for publication.

Reply to Question No. 66.

By John Hindman, Chicago, Ill.

The Question:

With a semi-reflecting type of screen, is there any special reason why the operating room ought to be located as nearly as possible square with the screen? That is to say, why is this of greater importance with such screens than with non-reflective types? What is the objection to a perfectly smooth surface on a metallic or other semi-reflecting screen?

The Answer:

It is always important that the screen be placed level with and central sidewise with the lens, since only thus can the least possible distortion be obtained. However, this is even more important where a semi-reflecting type of screen is used, due to the fact that there is somewhat less diffusion where these screens are used than where a dead surface, such as cloth or plaster is employed, therefore there is a somewhat greater tendency to reflection, with consequent uneven distribution of light. The practical effect is that if the machine be above the screen that portion of the audience seated below and near the screen will see a brighter picture than those seated above, say, for instance, in the balcony. This is not pronounced enough to be to any considerable degree objectionable, but the effect is there just the same.

A perfectly smooth surface is objectionable because of the fact that with these surfaces there is cross reflection which often causes a sort of haze in front of the screen. This is not present with mirror glass screens, but is nearly always present when a smooth, polished metallic surface is employed, and the higher the polish of the surface the more pronounced and objectionable the effect.

Powers Gears.

R. E. Wicker, Pinehurst, North Carolina, sends in a subscription and says:

> Regarding the trouble of B. L. Whitney, November 28th issue, your reply sounds plausible, but the trouble is not caused by the gears being too tight. I have experienced the same thing with the new Powers Six A, and have spent half an hour before each show for a month trying to adjust the toggle or intermediate gear so it will not grind, but at this writing am no nearer the solution than I was in the beginning. The best remedy I have found is to mix graphite with beeswax, and hold it against the train of gears while the machine is in motion. By using this preparation you have the advantage of a raw hide gear with the regular bronze gear with which the machine is equipped.

My dear sir I do not like to take flat issue with you, but I inspected more than 12,000 new Powers machines, and come pretty near knowing whereof I speak. It is a fact, however, that if you have a fibre or raw hide toggle gear (some machines were equipped with that sort of gear but their use was abandoned later on) it is quite possible the gear has swelled, in which event you cannot remedy the grinding, but, if it is a metal gear and my directions are properly followed out, it will eliminate the trouble, provided, of course, the machine was right when it left the factory, as probably it was. If your gear is raw hide or fibre I have no doubt that upon application the Powers Company will send you a metal gear. If it is a metal gear, then first ascertain whether it is tight against the fly wheel pinion or the driving gear and try adjusting screws 744, Plate 7, Page 284, Handbook, first, however, loosening screw 745 slightly. If this don't do the trick, then try tapping casting 684, Plate 7, one way or the other with a punch. This little casting is held in place by two screws, which are under bar 682, but you can move it with a punch without loosening it.

Automobile Power for Generator.

J. W. Sweeney, Gordon, Nebraska, contributes three photographs and writes the following letter:

Notice the Crystal theater, Dodgeville, Wis., wants to know if there is any good way to run a dynamo with an automobile engine. There is. Set the dynamo on the ground and fasten it down securely. Then back the automobile to within eight or ten feet of it, jack up one hind wheel and remove its tire, put on a belt the right size so it will fit into the rim, put the other end of the belt on the dynamo pulley and there you are. By running only one wheel you will have to run the engine only half as fast, or at the rate corresponding to 8 or 10 miles an hour. Be careful to keep your auto well oiled and the brake set. The enclosed pictures were taken July 4 at the big Indian celebration. The automobile is a Ford. For all of which we are very much obliged. The photographs show your idea very clearly. The matter is respectfully referred to Dodgeville.

Comic Section.

H. B. Byron, Chicago, Illinois, writes:

> Relative to the query of F. H. Daly, Birds Island, Minn., January 16th issue, the waves of heated air ascending through air of normal temperature gives rise to a lively and constantly varying refraction of rays of light projected through them, due, of course, to the lower refractive index of the rarified warm air as compared to the cool surrounding atmosphere. I regard the department as a comic section, and read it always with great interest from that point of view. I really expected to read of this very common phenomenon being explained by some of the authorities saying that the rays are blown about by the rising air, like the boughs of a willow tree by the wind, which funny as it may seem, is not at all a bad explanation.

The point is, after all, that you do read the department, and while no doubt you, individually, are far too well posted in the art of projection to learn anything therefrom, still at least you get amusement, and amusement is at least of some slight value. Of course such elementary questions as are being discussed in the department, which the best opticians in the country are unable to fully and thoroughly explain, or even in some instances attempt to explain, are mere child's play and quite laughable to Brother Byron. We appreciate all that, but you must remember that we are not all so blessed with such superior knowledge as that possessed in such abundance by the Chicago neighbor, therefore some operators still regard these matters quite seriously—silly boys that they are. I have no doubt, however, that the error I made in answering that particular question did cause huge satisfaction to quite some few. Oh, well, I should worry! By-the-way here is the next letter I picked up from the top of the pile. Read it also.

P. S. I want to add, however, that Friend Byron's explanation of the heat wave refraction is absolutely correct. With so learned a gentleman it could not, of course, be otherwise.

The Next Letter.

Arnold R. Bonnell, 766 Buffalo street, Conneaut, Ohio, says:

> I have the second edition of the Handbook. Please advise if there is a later one containing enough more information to "pay its hire." I find the Handbood to be indispensable, and the projection department a great aid in my work, and as for the World, it can never some early enough.

It will be observed that, strange as it may seem to the Chicago brother, Neighbor Bonnell actually needs the department in his business. Well, taking the two together, I must remark that I, myself, get a lot of amusement out of some of the Chicago operators' antics (some of them mind you—I have got lots of good friends in Chicago) so I guess, after all, we are about even, therefore, in chorus, "We should worry."

Contributes His Share.

Williamsport, Pennsylvania, says:

> Have derived great benefit from the department, and am only too glad to contribute my share towards helping someone who has troubles of his own, and the following may be a remedy for Brother Barron's trouble, "A Queer Proposition":
> The lost is found. My Jinx has strayed to your little burg and roosts in Brother Barron's lamp house. Evidently Brother Barron is using more than the usual amperage. The same trouble Mr. Barron has beset me. I worked, experimented, cussed (soft pedal), and blamed it on pretty much everything but the right one—myself. Then I found the answer—carelessness. I might modify the above and say—an insufficient knowledge of the vagaries of the arc.

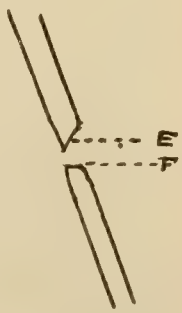

Fig. 2.

> In burning 50 or more amperes (d. c.) it is necessary to have the top carbon from ⅛ to ¼ inch in advance of the lower carbon. If lamp is not angled enough and top carbon advanced far enough (I refer to any lamp which has not all the modern adjustments) the top carbon is inclined to burn too much on the face (fore) side, making the spot somewhat oval (lengthwise) giving, however, a beautiful clear light, in fact, it looks so good that one is inclined to forget to feed, allowing the arc to become so long that it almost reaches the point of going out entirely. Instead of doing so it seeks a new path (that of the least resistance), which happens to be the heel (back) part of the lower carbon and the tip (also the back) of the upper carbon and starts to form a new crater on the tip of the upper carbon with the result that nearly all the light goes to the back of the lamp.
> Illustrations 1 and 2 explain themselves.
> Fig. (1).—Incorrect position for carbons when using high amperage. (A) is crater and (B) negative point just before arc shifts. (C) shows where new crater forms and (D) the negative point producing poor illumination on the picture.
> Fig. (2) shows correct method of setting carbons and angle for lamp when burning 50 or more amperes (d. c.).
> I may state that carbons burn off slanting both upper and lower, similar to an a. c. arc.

All of which sounds pretty good—butt, and but and but, and likewise but, if all this is true you will kindly inform the editor why he, the editor, did not experience any such trouble when using 50 amperes d. c. with the regular d. c. set and the lamp angled at various degrees. I did all this, not once, but many times, and did not experience any such trouble either. And then another point, too. This particular arc did not wait to have its length altered, but made that little switch regardless of anything you could do. I stood there and regulated the blinkety-blanked thing so that the variations in length did not alter by even as much as a thirty-second of an inch, and yet at the end of the given period Mr. Arc would get up and walk back to the rear and sit down. I could imagine the thing looking over at me with its finger at its nose and asking: "What are you going to do about it?" No, my brothers, I am sorry to say all answers so far have failed to answer, as far as I can see. As I said that I had tried almost everything imaginable that had not already been tried on that arc, and I might just as well have saved my labor. Please do not misunderstand me. I appreciate you brothers trying to solve this matter, but it is by no manner of means a simple proposition in this individual case.

A Complaint.

From Flint, Michigan, comes a well-written letter which is signed "Flint Operators." Ordinarily I would promptly consign this letter to the junk pile, because unsigned letters usually receive but scant consideration. In this case, however, I am going to "take a chance." Some time ago there came a letter from a Flint operator in which the statement was made that, whereas there was no local I. A. in Flint, still "most of the operators chummed together and helped one another," though there were a couple of exceptions who imagined they were so far advanced in knowledge of projection they did not need anyone's help, etc. The present letter makes a charge that the writer of the former communication has always discouraged the organization of a union in Flint.

Now, I do not wish to go into this matter extensively with only an unsigned letter for basis, but I will say that if the operator in question has discouraged the formation of a union, he is taking a very much mistaken position. Organization is the order of the day, and the Flint men are behind the times in remaining unorganized. If the operator in question discourages organization this need not prevent it. Simply go ahead and organize, without him, if necessary. But, by all means organize. Get together and be in a position not only to protect your own rights, but also to improve yourselves in your profession.

Arc Trouble.

Walter H. Johnson, Rantoul, Illinois, says:

> We have a Powers Six A projector, 110-volt a. c., 133-cycle current through a Fort Wayne compensarc, but the arc continually flutters; that is to say, the light plays all over the carbons. Would changing the carbons to a different angle remedy the trouble? We get fair results, but could get better.

Changing the angle of the carbons ought not to effect the matter Anyhow, there is but one correct set for carbons, and it is illustrated on page 211 of the Handbook, Figure 101. You have not told me how long this has been going on, or what kind of carbons you are using. It sounds like you might be using solid carbons. You must have cored carbons for projection. A defective carbon would cause exactly that kind of trouble. Be sure, also that your lamp leads are not coiled up close to the arc, since that might set up magnetic field which would affect the arc. From your description I would say that you have a solid carbon above or below, or maybe both are solid.

Testing.

T. Glucksmann, New Orleans, Louisiana, writes:

> Reviewing the answer to Question 61, January 16th issue, I would call your attention to the following: You mention 110, 220 and 500 volts, and the brother answers as to the test lamp the following: "One weatherproof socket and carbon lamp." That would be correct for one voltage, presumably 110, but for 220 or 500 he would have to have respectively two and five, 110-volt lamps in series.
> Also, as to testing, the big supply houses use a bell and battery for cartridge fuses, with an old receptacle with half of it cut away for plug fuses.

All of which is correct, though it does not necessarily mean there is an error in the answer to Question 61. There is, however, an omission as above set forth. The bell and battery is very efficient for fuse testing, but why bother with that, when you have current at hand?

Experiments.

In a letter, Brother John Griffiths, Ansonia, Connecticut, says:

> The relation of the objective to the condenser is pretty much the same as that of the pin-hole to a general source of light. It shields the image from the rays which have no true direction, or in other words, do not pass through the point of focus; always remembering the point of focus may be a small plane instead of a point. A single lens may be considered an improved pin-hole, but a corrected compound lens is a vastly improved pin-hole which allows a much larger quantity of light to pass, and yet screens the image from the mis-directed rays. (Later, in an article which deals with these mis-directed rays, Brother Griffiths kicks this over.—Ed). There is one point on which we all agree, and that is the angle at which the rays emerge from the objective lens, which same is always similar to an angle having as its base the width of the aperture and its length from base to apex, a distance equal to the e. f., which sometimes is and sometimes is not in the center of the lens tube. Now we all know it is possible to produce any length of condenser light cone with any combination of condensers, according to the relative position of the arc and condenser. Knowing the angle of the cone required, however, what we need is a condenser combination which will project that cone with the maximum amount of light (nearness of arc to condenser) taking into consideration condenser breakage and spherical aberration, the last being very important. Experiments carried out along these lines would, I believe, settle the condenser question once for all.

Well, the editor is now arranging to have current brought into the basement of his home where he is constructing suitable apparatus with which to make tests and he believes those tests will settle a good many things. Their results will begin to appear in the department before long, always provided, of course, they prove successful. The experiment involves an outlay of considerable money and a vast amount of labor, therefore, we hope for big things. The Precision Machine Co. has loaned a large lamp and lamphouse, and the General Electric has loaned a new 50-ampere mercury arc rectifier. The plant will be complete in about a month. I hope to present some very interesting matter later on.

Bunch of Questions?

Newark, New Jersey, asks the following questions:

(1) Is there any kind of sign with movable letters used by film companies for making titles, etc., to save the time and cost of printing? If so, where can I buy one? I did think of purchasing a sign fitted with changeable letters, such as I have seen in stores, but understand moving picture producers use a special changeable sign for this kind of work. (2) What is the smallest projection lens I can use for M. P. film? Thought of using a 1 or ½ inch focus, the same to be used on a home machine where I need the largest possible picture at the shortest distance. (3) What is the smallest condenser I can use for M. P. film, using a special small filament mazda lamp? Was told I could use a small bi-convex which would be in one piece instead of two separate lenses. (4) What size lens would I need to cover a double size moving picture gate 1½ inches by 1 inch instead of 1 inch by ¾?

(1) Yes, I believe there is a sign such as you are looking for, but I am not very well posted on that end of things, therefore will refer that part of your inquiry to Brother Sargent. (2) It would be impossible to answer positively without seeing the machine. The shorter the focal length of the objective the nearer the lens will come to the film, and there are, of course, mechanical limits, especially if the machine is of the inside shutter type, since the lens will finally come back so far it will strike something. Another equation which enters is the fact that very short focal length objective lenses are usually small in diameter, and if you get it too close to the film, the lens opening being considerably smaller than the aperture, there will be optical difficulties set up and a large loss of light. Still another point is the fact that lenses of very short focal length give poor definition on the screen. Unless my memory plays me false I have seen a 2½ inch e. f. lens used on a Powers Six mechanism over on Sixth avenue, New York City. It was quite awhile ago, and I might be mistaken about the focal length, but that is the way I recollect it. The definition of the screen was none the best, and the flicker was very bad, because the shutter, of necessity, cut the light ray after it had spread considerably, and this made necessary a very wide blade in order to overcome travel ghost. (3) Yes, you could use a bi-convex condensing lens, but I think you will find two plano-convex lenses to be much better. If you mean the diameter, why some of the new home projectors have a very small condenser. As I remember it, the Edison home projector condenser was less than 1½ inches in diameter. This is made possible by the fact that these lenses work with a low power illuminant, and the absence of excessive heat makes it possible to bring the illuminant very close to the lens. You can obtain these small diameter lenses through the Theater Equipment Co., Fifth Avenue Building, Fifth avenue and Broadway, New York City. I have not paid much attention to the small-diameter condenser, hence am not competent to answer your question fully and completely. (4) I think such a proposition would be entirely impractical by reason of the fact that if you made a spot large enough to cover that amount of space, and used a 4½ inch diameter condenser, the objective would receive very little light and the thing would be optically impossible. Without giving the matter any considerable amount of thought, I should say that in order to do a thing of that kind you would have to have a condenser of sufficient diameter to give a cone of light that would converge at the proper point with relation to the objective and still be large enough to cover a space nearly 2 inches in height at a distance from the objective equal to its e. f. Now, I can hear some of you emit a sputter and say: "Ah, ha! I have you, Brother Richardson! You have been advising carrying a spot almost that large." Yes; that is true; but don't forget that the effective part of that spot is only about an inch (the diagonal of the aperture) in one case, whereas in the other it would be a little more than 1½ inches.

Water and Glycerine.

William McGrew, Oakland, California, says he asked some time ago with regard to keeping film in good condition, and I replied that water was best. Says he finds water keeps some film in good working order, whereas in other cases the film seems to absorb the water to such an extent that it shows up in projection. States he has inquired from various sources, and from observation the most successful was the placing of troughs, containing a mixture of water and glycerine, under each reel shelf. He has a home entertaining outfit of eighty reels which he keeps in a wooden cabinet. Possibly I could advise him as to something better than water.

No, I cannot. I would direct your attention, however, to the letters from authorities on this subject recently published in the department. As to adding glycerine to the water in the troughs underneath the film, I know that is done, but for the life of me I cannot see what earthly benefit the glycerine part is, because, as I understand it, the glycerine does not evaporate, or it evaporates so slowly that it would not be of any benefit. After film has been washed and fixed, in the development process, it is run through a bath consisting of water and a small percentage of glycerine. The emulsion thus absorbs glycerine, which tends to keep it soft by reason of the fact that glycerine itself is a great absorber of moisture—and there you are. This is all I can tell you on the subject. Possibly the reason some films are not affected by the water underneath is that they are too thoroughly saturated with oil.

Real Appreciation.

The editor just received a very pleasant surprise. Moving Picture Operators' Local Union, No. 75, I. A. T. S. E., of Peoria and Pekin, Illinois, pulled off their second annual grand ball and entertainment December 31, 1914, and, as is usual, got out a very neat souvenir program, containing the advertisements of Peoria and Pekin picture houses, merchants and others. They sent me a copy of the program, and on one of the pages, in big, black type, was the following, occupying a space which would undoubtedly have brought them a good many dollars revenue had it been filled by a paid advertisement:

> We endorse it—have you got it? Richardson's Handbook. The "Operator's Bible."

Now, this was a genuine and very, very pleasant surprise. I could have made myself far, far more popular with the really big men in the business, and might have reaped far greater financial reward, had I, during the past five years, conducted the projection department in a way which would have pleased the manager and the "big interests," rather than the operator—for instance, if I had knocked the better-wage-better-operating-room-conditions proposition, instead of boosting it. Whether you believe this or not, I know it is true. I do not regret the stand I have taken, and maintained, and which I intend to continue to maintain, but it, nevertheless, makes a man feel good to find, not only individuals, but a whole union, and a good-sized one, too, which will voluntarily do the right thing. But this is not all. On another page of the program occurs the following, occupying fully three-quarters of a page:

This is also a voluntary offering. In writing the union says:

> We have devoted space in which to offer our tribute to the World and the "Operator's Bible" because we consider them worthy of our united support.

My compliments to Local 75. It has demonstrated the fact that it is a live, up-to-date, thoroughly progressive body of men. Their photographs are reproduced herewith, the same being a reproduction from a page of the program.

By-the-way, David C. Adams, secretary of Local 75, is something of a poet. On the program appears a really classy piece of work, the first stanza of which reads:

> When the theater is crowded, and the picture's on the screen,
> And you gaze in admiration at the moving picture queen;
> While the music's softly playing, then you let your fancies roam
> Mid the scenes which form a story, bringing thoughts of folks at home.
> When the light is clear as crystal, with projection bright and keen,
> You forget the guy, with eagle eye, beyond the port, unseen.

Wish I had room for it all, but it's too lengthy.

Life of Film.

E. B. Dunn, inventor of the Dunn Arc Controller, New York City, says, with reference to A. M. Dederick's Loudonville, N. Y., query as to keeping film.

> I have in my possession film purchased fully fifteen to eighteen years ago, which has been used many times during that period. No special care has been taken to preserve it. Most of it is wound on ordinary reels, wrapped in paper and has remained exposed to the air, though several reels have been kept in tin boxes. It has been used within six months, and while some of it was found to be brittle, most of it seemed to be as good as ever. about fifteen years ago this film was constantly exposed to considerable heat, in fact the heat was so great it would curl up, and it became necessary to wrap it in wet newspaper so that it could be used for the next show, the same being given twice a day. It was also wrapped in damp paper over night. I believe the life of film can be made indefinite by keeping in cool, damp places, and not wound too tightly. The only trouble I have met with is that some reels from which the hypo was not sufficiently cleaned after removal from the fixing bath, developed white spots after a number of years.

It will be observed that Brother Dunn recommends the film be not tightly wound, whereas the Eastman people advise exactly the opposite.

From the data at hand it seems film will keep very well under almost any ordinary condition, provided it be thoroughly washed after removal from the fixing bath in developing. I, myself, believe, from the various letters, that film can be kept in good condition at least fifteen years, possibly much beyond that age. I also gain the notion that the best way is to remove it from the reel, roll it up and wrap it in paper, then in oiled paper, and finally, for mere protection against mechanical injury, encase it in either a wooden or metal box. Having done this, it does not seem to matter very much where it is kept, though I should say that a cool basement free from excessive moisture would probably be best.

A Laugh.

A. Phillips, Winston-Salem, North Carolina, encloses a money order for $2.50, and says:

> Even though I everlastingly ruin my dollar typewriter in the effort, I want to tell you how much I appreciate your editorial bursts of oratory, interspersed with some mighty good information now and then. I notice that once in a while some dejected, broken-hearted operator writes you a tale of woe that would wring tears from a wooden Indian, but which would require at least three pages of printed matter to render him any relief whatsoever. But when you find it impossible to send him a through ticket to Glory, with a right-of-way over everything, he at least gets some consolation to the effect that he can obtain his desired haven by turning to the 'steenth hundred and 'steenth page of the "Handbook," where, under the title, "What to do and how not to do it," he will obtain the desired information. Now, I am going to take a shot at investing a couple and a half of perfectly good bones in a copy of the aforesaid "Condensed Quintessence of the Art of Turning the Crank," and sincerely trust you will not get mixed and send me the "Ladies' Own Almanac," as I am already the proud possessor of a couple of those. I read the World, and every issue of the department, and I think it is just fine. Here's wishing you a happy and prosperous 1915.

Evidently Brother Phillips is no grouch. The "Condensed Quintessence of the Art, etc.," has gone forward, and we trust it will be fully up to his expectations. Would like to have felt the pulse of the dollar type whacker when you got through with that. It must have been above normal.

Sure I Will!

Hon. Mr. T. E. Anderson, graduate I. C. S., E. E., N. Y. University, Class '02, E. E. Esq., St. Paul, Minnesota, arises to make the following very pointed remarks:

> I have read several articles on and off about Stillwater, Minn. (Hope you've finally read 'em off for good.—Ed.), and would like to put in a few words to let you know the conditions in Stillwater. It is the poorest show town in Minnesota, conditions being against it and the people there either have to pay ten cents car fare and ten cents to get in a show and then stand the chance of waiting on the corner an hour for one of the "twin City" street cars to get him home. (How about the "hers."—Ed.) I don't blame Mr. Flynn for not hiring a $25 "operator." If there is any St. Paul operator or exhibitor who has any money to put into a first-class picture house and wants to lose the aforesaid coin, let him go to Stillwater and he can come back to St. Paul in a week or two with heavy heart and an empty pocketbook. Not so very long ago there was a "reel" show man, went to Stillwater and opened the Auditorium a legitimate house seating about 900 and gave out 5000 free tickets every day for two weeks, trying to get the people into the habit and he put on three reels and three independent vaudeville acts and the people would not come even on a free ticket. I wish to take a little of the conceit out of you also. I purchased one of your hand books recently and it is full of bunk. I would advise you to take a correspondence school course in Mechanical Drawing. If you want to see a "reel" book get one of Horstman's & Tousley's "Motion Picture Operation and Stage Electrics," Chicago. I hope you will be man enough to put this in print, will close with best wishes. I am yours very sincerely.

Man, man, you make me laugh when you say you "hope I will be man enough, etc." I put it in print just exactly as it was written, and while I accept your kindly proffered advice with regard to my humble efforts at drawing, I leave it to our readers, after a careful examination of your literary efforts, if I sought not to advise you to take a course in English, punctuation, etc., before you write any more letters. Umph! There, I feel better.

My stenographer calls me down. Says: "This is not dignified; it is too much like a kid." Well, I guess she's right, but I'm a bit of a kid at that, though forty-eight years old. You surprise me, however, with your criticism on the Handbook. I had supposed that the unanimous approval of nearly 10,000 purchasers of the book, and the fact that it has for a year and a half been reported almost every week by the New York City Public Librarian as among the ten most-called-for books in the Greater New York Public Library was sufficient commendation of my humble efforts in the way of book making. However. it is a fact that most of the readers are just plain moving picture operators who have not risen to the dizzy height of "electrical engineer." Like the editor, himself, they are not "graduates of a university," but merely graduates of the public school, class—in the editor's case about '83, therefore, their opinion does not count, and in view of the disapproval of my well-wisher, Neighbor Anderson, I am properly squelched. As to the Horstmann & Tousley book, I can readily concede there is a great deal in that work which would be highly approved by an electrical engineer. The principal trouble with it, from my viewpoint, is that neither Mr. Horstmann or Mr. Tousley are practical operators, and have, therefore, left out all the "bunk" you complain of, adding quite a considerable amount that our non-electrical engineers would have trouble in understanding, and have tried to deal with two subjects, either one of which would require 1,000 pages to cover fully, in, as I recollect it, less than 300, though I am not positive now about the exact number of pages. It might be a little more or a little less. It is not a work I could very strongly recommend to operators, though, of course, it contains considerable excellent matter. On practical projection it is extremely weak, and the Hawkins' books are far better on the electrical end. The operator is not much interested in stage electrics. He has plenty yet to learn about his own profession.

"A Queer Proposition" Solved.

C. H. Torrey, sales manager, American Standard Motion Picture Machine Company, New York City, sends in the following solution to "Queer Proposition," page 215, January 9th issue. He writes:

> The theater referred to, "The Queen," 59th street and Third avenue, is supplied with both a. c. and d. c. The iron pipe conduit of both a. c. and d. c. are laid 3 or 4 inches apart for a distance of about 150 feet, and we have discovered that the a. c. sets up a magnetic field which brought about the trouble complained of. In your article you say the other machine is not affected, but we have to advise that the only reason it was not affected was because it was not grounded. Just as soon as that machine was grounded, in our test, it acted the same way. The Standard machine worked all right for a time, because the d. c. conduits were grounded, but that ground had been corroding for a long period of time, until now there is no ground at all. There are three ways of overcoming this difficulty, viz.: Ground the machine to a water pipe—it is now grounded to the conduit; ground the d. c. conduit thoroughly, or remove the d. c. conduit from the magnetic field.

When I visited "The Queen Theater" I took Brother Barron's word for certain things which I have since discovered were not correct, meaning by this, that he said he had done things he had not, though he probably thought he had. He claimed he had insulated the Standard machine, without any effect; also that he had done certain other things with relation to the grounding. However, I am free to admit this solution of the matter would not have occurred to me, even had I not been, to some extent, misled by supposing Friend Barron had performed certain acts which he had not. The matter had us all puzzled. One big machine manufacturer in this city took instruments to the Queen and put in considerable time trouble hunting, but found nothing. It is, therefore, to the credit of the Standard people that they solved this very puzzling proposition.

Another From Flint.

C. A. Borgen, Flint, Michigan, says:

> I have been a department reader for years, and believe I have a good one this time on a certain electrician who claims that he can boil out the mercury tube of a rectifier so as to give it new life. If this is possible, pardon my ignorance. I think it sounds "bug-house." I have always understood that when the vacuum of a tube is gone the tube is spoiled. I have only been in Flint three weeks, and during that time have only spoken to one operator besides my partner. The bunch seem to be rather distant; there are about twelve operators here. Wages are very little better than the average unorganized town, or city, as Flint has about 50,000 population. The Royal theater is the only house to employ two operators, but we start at 9.30 A. M. and have every other afternoon and evening of the following day off. (I don't "get you" there.—Ed.) Have two Powers machines, one Six A and one Six, motor driven, handled with Preddy speed controllers. Direct current is supplied by G. E. mercury arc rectifier, and it gives us a good light. Have had the last edition of the Handbook for about one and a half years. It certainly is the clear thing, which every operator, no matter how much he knows, or thinks he knows, will find it very helpful.

I guess you will find the Flint boys sociable enough after you get acquainted. I would, however, suggest that you organize and get a charter in the I. A., thus joining with operators of other cities who are striving to improve their condition and their work. As to the mercury tube, so far as I know you are absolutely correct. Presumably when a tube loses its vacuum it is defective. Of course, if the defect can be located and repaired and the tube again exhausted by an air pump and resealed, I suppose it would be as good as ever, but, even so, I do not think the repairing of mercury tubes is a very practical proposition. If I am wrong, will somebody kindly correct me. I know of no method of creating a vacuum in a tube other than by pumping.

WHEN SLIPPERY SLIM BOUGHT THE CHEESE (Essanay), Jan. 28.—A story of Limberger cheese and love that is very funny in spite of the fact that a piece of the cheese walks across the table and through the next room to a rat hole. Mustang Pete plays a joke on Slim by putting a piece of the cheese in his pocket when he goes courting. A refined upper Broadway audience found this comedy intensely amusing.

PATSY ON THE TROLLEY CAR (Lubin), Feb. 1.—No. 6 of the "Patsy Bolivar" series reveals the fact that again Patsy's troubles are legion. After being thrown from a freight car on which he attempts to steal a ride, he is lodged for ten days in jail. Later he is employed as a conductor on a trolley car, meets his father and mother who are in search of him, and in the course of events gets thrown of the trolley car and is again lost to his friends and relatives.

OLIVE AND THE HEIRLOOM (Edison), Feb. 2.—No. 11 of the "Olive's Opportunities" series finds the old aunt dead, and Olive endeavoring to convey to Vance, who is on a hunting tour in Virginia, the valuable pearls which the aunt has left him. This episode is an especially interesting one. The fall of Boggs from the train, after he has been killed by the jealous cousin of Vance, is a distinct thrill. Mabelle Trunelle and Edward Earle do effective work, as do also Herbert Prior and others to whom distinctive roles have been entrusted.

FORKED TRAILS (Selig), Feb. 2.—There are some points of excellence in this picture, but there are also a number of weak points which might have been avoided. For instance, at the point where the Mexican enters the cabin where the girl has gone to hide and she lays the revolver on the table while she tries to tie his hands is rather a weak bit. At other points of the picture one is inclined to admire the quality of the work. Photographically speaking the production is good, and throughout many artistic scenes appear.

THE INSURANCE NIGHTMARE (Kalem), Feb. 2.—In this comedy will be found a comical farce founded on the matter of life insurance. C. E. Ward has produced the picture and has done well with it. After a fruitless chase on the part of some insurance agents, among them a young man eager for the hand of the old man's daughter, a nightmare persuades the victim that his troubles might be ended by the signing of the insurance contract.

THE CREED OF THE CLAN (Essanay), Feb. 2.—This is a drama founded on a story from the Munsey Magazines with Ruth Stonehouse, Bryant Washburn, Rapley Holmes and Lillian Drew in the principal roles for the play. In many ways the production is an attractive one, although there are times where the plot is a trifle indistinct. The identity of the detective, for instance, is not altogether clear at first. One point of merit of the production, besides efficient work exhibited in the action, is the effectiveness of its sub-titles.

A THORN AMONG ROSES (Edison), Feb. 3.—Dan Mason makes the fun in this clever comedy. Gladys Hulette, Harry Linson, Harry Beaumont and Edward Boulden are among the remainder of the cast. The trouble is created through the conditions of a will left by a deceased relative wherein May Hope must marry before a certain date in order to get the inheritance, and the divergence of opinion on the matter of getting a husband entertained by her guardian and herself.

THE COMBINATION (Vitagraph), Feb. 3.—Barring one or two poorly covered suggestions as the newlyweds seek suitable living quarters, this is a rather good comedy. Sydney Drew and Jane Morrow are the newlyweds and have acquitted themselves in the manner of talented and well-versed picture players. The most laughable point in the picture is where the young wife intending to hide her husband's revolver in the safe hides his new pipe instead, mistaking the case of the one for the other. Then she forgets the combinations and hence the trouble and the fun.

SEEN FROM THE GALLERY (Edison), Feb. 3.—This picture is unique from the fact that all of its scenes have been photographed from above. The story, which is, of course, comic in development, has to do with stage people and many of its scenes are representative of those on the vaudeville stage and behind the scenes.

JUST LIKE A WOMAN (Selig), Feb. 3.—A newspaper story which is not a particularly strong one. It will suit the average audience and no doubt prove very entertaining, but from the point of criticism it could not be termed a big story. The opening of the story would lead one to suppose that it has been designed to champion the cause of woman in the world of journalism, showing the difficulties which she meets in combating the masculine opinion that a woman is incapable of performing man's work in that field. It simmers down, however, to the usual love story.

SOPHIE'S HOME-COMING (Essanay), Feb. 4.—Again Slippery Slim gets into trouble through Mustang Pete's love of a joke. Slim gets even with Pete, who in setting his alarm clock an hour slow has prevented his meeting Sophie at the depot, by filling his new silk handkerchief with snuff. Result—when Pete goes acourting Sophie, trouble ensues.

HEARST-SELIG NEWS PICTORIAL, NO. 10 (Feb. 4).—Some interesting items of this number are the use of the X-ray system to detect contraband in cotton bales, the "Oregon" going to marshal the Canal parade, and scenes from the European battle front.

THE BORROWED NECKLACE (Biograph), Feb. 4.—An excellent drama bordering on the melodramatic. Claire McDowell plays the feminine lead. An unusually good ballroom scene appears in the picture, the situations of the story are perfectly legitimate, and it is altogether an attractive production. The trouble occurs through the innocent duplicating of a borrowed necklace in imitation stones; and through also innocent failure to return the right necklace, its theft brings suspicion on the wrong party.

IN THE PALMY DAYS (Mina), Feb. 4.—This comedy has doubtless some claim to originality, but no special merit can be claimed for it. The lover of one of the "Dainty Sisters" a vaudeville company dresses in female attire in order to accompany her. A good deal of slapstick stuff follows, some of which is amusing. The average audience would like it.

THE GREEN CAT (Vitagraph), Feb. 5.—Billy Quirk, Lee Beggs and Constance Talmage play the leads in this production, which is interesting in a comedy way. Lee Beggs has directed the picture. The fun arises out of a chase by the Tubbs Detective Agency for a green cat, the tracing of which has been handed to them.

THE NAMELESS FEAR (Lubin), Feb. 5.—Written by Emmett Campbell Hall the story of this film is rather unusual. The production has been well directed, and is a most attractive one. The story deals with the attempt of an old man to frighten a young girl, of whose fortune he has charge, into insanity, that he as her guardian may still have jurisdiction over her money.

CATS (Lubin), Feb. 5.—This is a good comedy based on a woman's love of cats. The husband in desperation puts them all in a trunk and wheels them to the water, gets himself into trouble with the police, and finally agrees to be peaceable if his wife will keep but four cats in the house at a time. This comedy will set any audience laughing, and is opposed to the designation of "low comedy" which applies to so many of our would-be comedies.

THE UNDERSTUDY; OR BEHIND THE SCENES (Vitagraph), Feb. 4.—Rather an unusual production, the story of which was written by Frank Dazey, and produced by Maurice Costello and Robert Gaillard The entire story takes place behind the scenes and on the stage, and commences with the rehearsal of the play which is to be enacted. The Understudy (Maurice Costello) is accidentally shot while substituting for the real actor. Other members of the cast are Estelle Mardo, Gladden James, Thomas R. Mills, Phil Sandford and Robert Gaillord.

THE HICKSVILLE TRAGEDY TROUPE (Kalem), Feb. 5.—An excellent comedy, but another "behind-the-scenes" subject. It is, nevertheless, none the less enjoyable, and shows some of the old-fashioned contrivances for making stage effects in a most comic manner.

THE LEOPARD'S LAIR (Selig), Feb. 6.—Although there are some scenes of intense interest in this film, the scenes showing the leopards, for instance, the story does not altogether ring true, and it would scarcely be possible for a leopard, from its savage nature, to carry a baby away and lodge it alive in a tree. The scene where the baby is carried from the cradle is not especially well done, in so far as the bundle intended to represent the child is noticeably a light one.

THE ESCAPE OF THE FAST FREIGHT (Kalem), Feb. 6.—The thirteenth of "The Hazards of Helen" Railway Series, is an unusually thrilling episode, and presents several dangerous ventures, such as Helen dropping an apparently dangerous height from a bridge to the top of a moving freight train. A good scuffle with a couple of robbers aboard train is another of the attractions of the picture.

WINNING THE OLD MAN OVER (Biograph), Feb. 6.—There is nothing particularly attractive about the subject chosen for this comedy. Some scenes in a dissecting room are shown which are intended to be comical. The story has, of course, the usual love thread, and is developed along the lines of farce comedy.

THE CLUB PEST (Biograph), Feb. 6.—This is an amusing comedy treating of a joke played by the members of a mens' club on one of its troublesome members, and is on the same reel with "Winning the Old Man Over," is of a much better quality.

THE STONE HEART (Edison), Feb. 6.—An excellent drama with Augustus Phillips and Viola Dana playing the leads. The picture has been directed with an eye to the artistic, and, although distinctly a drama, is not without a touch of comedy, especially where the old Jew, Burnstein, after doing his best to be kind, cannot refrain from pocketing the five-dollar bill possibly stolen from him, that the unconscious employee has clutched tight in her hand.

BRONCHO BILLY'S GREASER DEPUTY (Essanay), Feb. 6.—A western drama of rather an ordinary sort. It is not, however, without interest, and has considerable realism.

THE FURNACE MAN (Lubin), Feb. 6.—This is an acceptable comedy, the scenario of which was written by Florence C. Boles. Ethel Clayton plays the feminine lead in a charming manner. Others of the cast have acquitted themselves well, and the production classes as one of the pleasantest comedies of the week

Licensed Specials.

THREE HATS (Biograph), Feb. 2.—Adapted from a French farce of the same name this two-reel production stands as one of the few comedy productions that have real merit and are worthy of classification as comedy. The situations of the play are legitimate, and the dove-tailing of events perfect. The quite possible exchange of three hats belonging to three different parties, and the mix-up of circumstances following makes an excellent basis for a truly amusing bit of farce comedy.

HOW CISSY MADE GOOD (Vitagraph), Feb. 2.—A Broadway Feature that is a good one. Cissy Fitz-Gerald tries to interview the entire Vitagraph aggregation, and gets a rather warm reception. This production which is in three parts has been reviewed in a previous issue of this magazine.

A NIGHT'S ADVENTURE (Lubin), Feb. 3.—A two-reel production that has a general appeal. In the first place the story by Marc Edmund Jones has been artistically developed in the film. It has also some originality, which, by the way, is one of its chief charms. The various situations of the picture are approached in a perfectly natural manner. Now and then a reminder to turn the lights out at certain given points would have added to the realism of some of the scenes.

THE REGENERATING LOVE (Lubin), Feb. 4.—A three-reel drama written and staged by George Terwilliger, and featuring Ormi Hawley. Others of the cast are Earl Metcalf, Kempton Greene and Justinia Huff. The story is a strong one and has had the advantage of logical and artistic staging. There is realism in its every scene, and it is intensely human. The story also breathes some originality.

WHERE IS MY WANDERING BOY TONIGHT? (Edison), Feb. 5.—There are some good moments in this two-reel Edison. Marc McDermott plays the masculine lead, Miriam Nesbitt plays opposite to him, and Helen Strickland plays the role of the mother. As a whole the production is interesting, and as the title indicates is founded on the old song of the same name.

THIRD HAND HIGH (Essanay), Feb. 5.—A story by Duffield Osborne in the Smart Set magazine has been used as a basis for this two-part drama. E. Calvert, Ruth Stonehouse, Bryant Washburn, Camille D'Arcy, Richard Travers and Sydney Ainsworth are names found among the cast. The production is an acceptable one, and many ways above the ordinary. A big play for suspense has been successfully made, the photographic quality of the picture is excellent, and the action free and easy.

FOR ANOTHER'S CRIME (Vitagraph), Feb. 6.—An excellent two-part drama with Leo Delaney, Leah Baird, Roger L. Lytton and other capable Vitagraph players. The story has been developed with considerable suspense, it has strong human interest tendencies, and, above all, has been well played. It treats of a shooting affair, an unjust conviction and a proper balance of circumstances in the end.

Independent

ANIMATED WEEKLY, NO. 152 (Universal), Feb. 3.—This number contains views of Harry Thaw being returned to New York, splendid pictures of the allies in winter camp, also actual fighting scenes taken in Belgium, and views of the Italian earthquake.

THE DOUBLE DECEPTION (Majestic), Feb. 5.—A rather improbable story, although not the less interesting has been used as the basis of this film. Two rich young people off on a vacation fall in love with each other; the girl poses as a dairy maid and the young man as a clerk to avoid being married for money. Complications arise after marriage that serve as vehicles for comedy. Elmir Clifton and Miriam Cooper play the leads.

NELLIE'S STRATEGY (Princess), Feb. 5.—This starts out to be a drama and becomes farcical in treatment toward the close. It is diverting just the same, and has a new type of villain who buys paintings from the girl's artist-father in order to get a hold upon the girl. But the hero wins out in the end. The close is quite amusing, and not to be taken seriously.

BILLY TURNS VALET (Komic), Feb. 7.—No. 16 of the "Billy" series falls short of the usual standard of this interesting series. It is hardly to be expected that each one should be as good as the other or always better. This comment does not mean that "Bill Turns Valet" would not please the general audience, in fact it is good for many laughs.

A BIRD'S A BIRD (Keystone), Feb. 8.—With some eliminations which will doubtless be made before the picture reaches the public this comedy which has no special value in any case will at least be received without adverse criticism.

THE ADVENTURER (Paragon), Feb. 8.—This two-reel subject produced by the Crown City company is well played by a good cast. It strains the credulity a bit in the beginning to believe that a young woman entering her own home and finding there a burglar, even one in evening dress, would be so fascinated by him as to introduce him a moment later to her father as a friend of her brother's. From this point, however, the story proceeds logically and interestingly. Dorothy Davenport and Felix Modjeska are featured.

THE STUDIO OF LIFE (Reliance), Feb. 8.—Only fair in quality, as to development of subject. The production gives some food for thought, however, and from the standpoint of an audience would be entertaining.

HIS LAST DEAL (Majestic), Feb. 9.—In this one-reel drama a good moral lesson is taught. The picture is cut short it is true, but not before an idea of the pathetic situation intended to be presented has been conveyed. It is the story of how a father, imprisoned for theft, released from prison hunts up his son, and commences his old tricks again, stealing from his son the last instalment of hard-earned money to be paid on his farm. The close of the picture shows the son and his wife dispossessed and wandering about with no place to go, and all through the misdeeds of a father. Tom Wilson, Loretta Blake and C. McDermott have the principal roles.

THE CHINESE LOTTERY (Reliance), Feb. 10.—Irene Hunt again appears in her brisk characterization of a girl reporter. This time she helps round up a gang of Chinese smugglers. The action is good and the plot fairly strong.

FATTY AND MABEL'S MARRIED LIFE (Keystone), Feb. 11.—A rapid-fire comedy number, full of amusing action. Fatty and Mabel offend an organ grinder traveling about with a monkey. The organ man gets his pal and plans revenge upon Mabel, who is alone at home. This is a good number and well photographed.

MAKING A GREAT NEWSPAPER (Nolege), Feb. 12.—This showing of the details of the making of a metropolitan newspaper is one of the best we have seen. There are shown in order the delivery of the great rolls of paper, the distribution of copy in the news room, various steps in the composing and stereotype rooms, with close-ups of the linotype, monotype and autotype, and the printing and delivery of the papers. The photographs were taken in the offices of the New York Times, which has a new building and latest equipment. The photography, especially in the pressroom scenes, is unusually good for this style of picture. On the same reel is the Kriterion Cartoon, by Harry Palmer, under the Pyramid brand. The drawings of former President Taft as a golf player are fair; those of Secretary of State Bryan are undignified and in bad taste, to say the least.

ACROSS THE WAY (Princess), Feb. 12.—A comedy drama with some fresh points of interest. The girl fools her young admirer with some shadows on her window curtain, making him think a tragedy is occurring. Later when the burglar appears the hero thinks it is a joke. This is full of action and quite pleasing throughout.

SIGHT TO THE BLIND (Eclair), Feb. 14.—Quite an appealing little story of a girl who elopes with a scoundrel. Later she remembers leaving the wrong medicine for her blind sister and hastens back to save the latter's life. The photography is good and the story has considerable strength.

PEGGY'S SWEETHEARTS (L-KO), Feb. 14.—A country youth meets a girl wading in a stream and an attachment is formed. Later her father objects and brings in a rival. The fun is fairly good, being of the knockabout type. Photography fair.

THE GRATITUDE OF CONDUCTOR 786 (Thanhouser), Feb. 14.—A love story featuring an eloping couple. The lover takes the girl from her upper window on a trolley wire repair truck. Then they get the minister and a witness and are married on the high platform of the truck. Just a little plot with a number of amusing moments.

FOOLING FATHER (Joker), Feb. 15.—The young couple make the girl's father believe he has killed a man. The latter has visions of himself in the electric chair. Old in plot but well photographed and better than the average production of this company.

IT MIGHT HAVE BEEN SERIOUS (Nestor), Feb. 16.—A first rate comedy number of the farcical type, with Jack Dillon and Billy Rhoades in the leads. Four men, by a natural turn of events, take refuge in a closet when the jealous husband appears with a gun. The situations are complicated and amusing. Photography good.

ALMOST A SCANDAL (L-KO), Feb. 17.—An eccentric comedy number, with Billy Ritchie and Henry Bergman in the cast. The opening scenes in a park are the usual knockabout sort and not of much interest. The sword duel scenes at the last are quite amusing.

THE ADVENTURES OF A SEA-GOING HACK (Rex), Feb. 18.—A comedy number, with Ben Wilson and Dorothy Phillips in the leads. He drives his wife to a party, as a joke, impersonating the cabbie. On the way both are arrested for burglary. The situations are complicated and prove quite amusing.

THE FOX TROT CRAZE (Sterling), Feb. 18.—Picturing the adventures of two Willie boys at a hotel. They quarrel over a suit of clothes and run about in summer underwear. This is mildly amusing, but needs more plot.

HOW DOCTOR CUPID WON (Nestor), Feb. 19.—A brisk comedy number by Al E. Christie, with Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran, Victoria Forde and others in the cast. The young doctor escapes with his beautiful young patient in spite of the detective's efforts to detain him. Good comedy of the burlesque type.

LOVE AND LAW (Joker), Feb. 20.—A knockabout comedy number in which the mother favors the judge as an aspirant for her daughter's hand. The young couple contrive to outwit them in a decidedly amusing way. This makes an entertaining release.

A MARTYR OF THE PRESENT (Powers), Feb. 20.—A story of sacrifice, produced by Sydney Ayres, who plays the leading role. The married brother commits embezzlement and the other assumes the guilt. He goes elsewhere and marries a Mexican girl and has a child. Later he is exonerated; the wife killing herself because she cannot return to his former home with him. This resembles the plot of "The Squaw Man" strongly. It is well photographed and quite strongly presented.

WOOF, WOOF (Pathe-Exc), February.—One-reel farce by Donald Mackensie with the two tramps and new sausage machine. It is likable and amusing.

Independent Specials

THE GIRL I LEFT BEHIND ME (Box Office Attraction), January.—An excellent five-reel film vision of David Belasco's great military play has been made by the Box Office Attraction Company with Robert Edeson, Claire Whitney and Stewart Holmes in the leading roles. The production is tremendously realistic, and Lloyd Carleton has made of it a well-nigh flawless photoplay. The cast throughout is a strong one. The story treats of the days of Indian warfare, and many of the scenes of the picture have been photographed in the vicinity of Fort Assinaboine, Mont.

HEART BEATS (Reliance), Feb. 6.—A two-reel production in which the interest centers around an attempt to prove the source of a crime by registering the heart beats. The experiment does not prove successful. The picture is a fairly interesting one. Sam de Grasse, Francelia Billington and Frank Bennett are among the cast.

IMAR THE SERVITOR (Majestic), Feb. 7.—With considerable Arabian atmosphere and many beautifully laid scenes this two-reel production will doubtless prove attractive to the public. The story is not a particularly strong one, and it is sometimes difficult to follow the thread of the story, but otherwise the production is an acceptable one. Special attention has been given the composition of the picture, some fine effects having thereby been obtained.

JUSTIFIED (American), Feb. 8.—A two-reel number, with Ed Coxen and Winifred Greenwood appearing as newlyweds. George Field is the unwelcome stranger who tells the wife of city life and renders her temporarily unhappy. The young husband grows unreasonably jealous and sends her away. Later he relents, during the storm, and goes for her. The rainstorm was a fine feature, being a genuine downpour. Five years elapse before the husband, a fugitive, finds his wife and child. A little more intensity of feeling would have helped some of the scenes. This makes an offering of about average strength.

THE MASTER KEY (Universal Special), Feb. 8.—Episode No. 12. —This moves along in lively fashion, carrying the interest of the observer with it. The Hindu peddler takes the idol back to India, where it is restored to its niche in the temple. Dore and Ruth follow, accompanied by Lord Faversham. Later Wilkerson and his party appear, still trying to get the plans. Faversham turns traitor and lays a plot to separate Dore and Ruth. He writes the girl a note saying Dore is untrue to her and the instalment closes with Dore being thrown into a dungeon by the Hindu worshippers.

$500 REWARD (Kriterion-Paragon), Feb. 8.—A very acceptable two-reel production in which Benjamin Horning and Dorothy Davenport play the leads. The picture was made by the Crown City Film Company, and is more than usually meritorious. Excellent types appear in the cast of the play, the photographic work is excellent, and with one exception, namely, the negligence of the old money lender to lock the door of his office after consigning valuable papers to the safe, no other discrepancies of any account appear.

A SMUGGLED DIAMOND (Thanhouser), Feb. 9.—A two-reel detective story, Flo LaBadie being the lady secret service agent. She trails Diamond Bill, who smuggled in a large stone on the Ruritania. Many of the scenes are mechanically put together. The heroine does some clever work in climbing out on the ladder of the high building and holding up Bill and his pal single handed. This makes altogether an offering of about average strength.

A WOMAN IN TROUBLE (Reliance), Feb. 10.—Episode No. 5 of "The Runaway June" series. The first reel of this again goes over familiar incidents which might have been shown in a synopsis at the beginning. Later the instalment picks up considerably in interest. June becomes bookkeeper of a woman's gambling house. She sees a wife, whose husband had stinted her allowance, ruin him by playing cards. The husband comes and the villain, Blye, starts a fire in the gambling house to divert the suspicions of the police. June escapes during the excitement. This contains more action than some previous instalments.

THE UNEXPECTED HONEYMOON (Victor), Feb. 15.—A two-reel comedy number of the light, breezy sort. It contains a delicate situation, but is handled in such a way as not to offend. The young couple appear in a mock marriage, which one of the guests afterward tells them is legal in the state of New York. The guests then leave the quarreling couple alone in the house all night. They are still angry at breakfast, but, of course, finally decide to make their marriage valid. The characters were not very well identified at the beginning, but later the plot clears up and becomes quite entertaining.

A RAID ON THE MADHOUSE (Thanhouser), Feb. 15.—Episode No. 13 of "The Twenty Million Dollar Mystery," formerly known as the "Zudora" series. Zudora and the mine superintendent are confined in the asylum at the beginning of the instalment. Jim Baird goes to Africa and investigates conditions at the diamond mines. On his return he and John Storm combine forces to release the victims. The superintendent does this after confessing his part in the conspiracy. Zudora is rescued after a sensational raid on the institution. This number is full of action of a melodramatic sort.

CHANGED LIVES (Gold Seal), Feb. 16.—A three-reel number, written and produced by Otis Turner, with Anna Little, Beatrice Van, Herbert Rawlinson, Wm. Worthington and Laura Oakley in the cast. The main situation, in which one girl poses as another in order to claim an inheritance, has been done before, but is here handled very convincingly. The first two reels make an exceptionally strong appeal. The close of the story is not handled so strongly, as there should have been more effort to justify the girl's deception, or at least more evidence shown of her repentance. As it stands the story has both unusual strength and considerable weakness toward the close.

SHORTY'S SECRET (Broncho), Feb. 17.—A very enjoyable two-reel Western number, with Shorty Hamilton in the lead. Shorty is thrown into jail after a mischievous escapade. He digs below the floor and discovers a treasure vault at the entrance to an abandoned mine, with a letter from the former owner bequeathing everything to the finder. He gets out and arranges with a friend to buy the jail site. Some very amusing comedy scenes appear in this number; it makes altogether an excellent combination of humor and drama.

THE VOICE IN THE NIGHT (Eclair), Feb. 17.—An unusually good mystery story in two reels. In a few vivid scenes the death of a man is pictured, the sole observer being a reporter who afterwards unravels the case. The photography could have been a little better in places and there are a few minor faults in construction, but the story is well above the average of its type. The solution is surprising and yet accounted for in a natural way. A good mystery production.

AN EXAMPLE (Big U), Feb. 18.—A two-reel number in which Murdock MacQuarrie appears as a sheriff and Agnes Vernon as his married daughter. She leaves her husband on a slight pretext and flirts with another. The sheriff tells the story of how her own mother deserted him for another man. This narrative is strongly pictured and full of intense interest. There are some good Western scenic effects, particularly during the tragic scenes on the desert where the husband finds the mother and her despoiler dead and only the baby girl alive. A picture of strong moral trend and telling a story that holds the interest closely.

THE SECRET OF THE DEAD (Domino), Feb. 18.—This story, pictured in the "painted desert" section of the San Diego exposition, is decidedly novel in both plot and settings. It is one of the best Western productions shown in some time. The body of the petrified Indian contains a treasure map and the professor and his students dig up the lost gold. Fighting scenes with Indian tribes are graphically shown. There is also a pretty love story. The photography is fine and this makes a very attractive production.

MR. "SILENT" HASKINS (Kaybee), Feb. 19.—This is a two-reel number of more than average interest. A New England girl inherits her uncle's property in the West. On arriving she finds to her horror that the "property" is a gambling house, with a saloon attachment. The place is ordered closed by the girl. The gambler then tries to force her to marry him, but she is defended by the former manager of the place, with whom she falls in love. Wm. S. Hart and Mitchell play the leads acceptably. This makes a very entertaining Western yarn.

AN ORIENTAL ROMANCE (Imp), Feb. 19.—A two-reel number with a novel plot. King Baggot appears as the son of a wealthy Chinaman. He has been to an American college and falls in love with the sister of his chum, Dick. He saves Dick from the clutches of a money lender, who is conducting the business for his own father, Liang Kung. Later, when Dick learns that his sister loves Hop, he turns upon him and insists that he leave her alone. The young Chinaman then sacrifices the girl's love by flirting with another and breaking his own heart at the same time. The settings are pleasing throughout and the story handled in a convincing way. The photography is good.

THREE BAD MEN AND A GIRL (Bison), Feb. 20.—A two-reel Western number, written by Grace Cunard, in which she and Francis Ford play the leads. Three cowboys are mistaken by the residents of a small town for three bandits and the town is turned over to them. They shoot up the place and have a good time till the real bandits come and abduct the girl. Later the cowboys go to her rescue and there is a prolonged fight on the edge of a cliff. The girl crosses on a rope to safety. This is not a very convincing type of plot but is a relief from the ordinary Western because it contains humor and novelty.

THE WOLF UNMASKED (Pathe-Exc), February.—A four-reel offering that is very melodramatic, but is certainly exciting. It is a picture for the gallery—the gallery will surely like it much; is likely to get worked up over it.

THE GILDED FOOL (Box Office Attraction), Feb.—Henry Guy Carlton's play, "The Gilded Fool," with William Farnum in the lead, is a distinct success in its filmed presentation. In this production William Farnum is seen in another light, playing, as he does, the jolly, devil-may-care role of Chauncey Short. The production is a strong one, and has been played with a strong supporting cast, and as large a number of supers; in fact it might be termed an elaborate production, distinctly human, tense in its moments of pathos and hilarious on its comic side.

SELLING STOCK FOR DUPLEX THEATER.

By no means have plans been dropped for the building of a duplex theater on the Grand Boulevard, Detroit. Stock is now being sold by a promotion company having offices at 2033 Dime Bank building, which report that sales are being made very freely. Some time ago this new theater was fully described in the Moving Picture World, but since that time a number of changes in plans have been made. The structure is to be erected for the Grand Boulevard Theatre Company on the south side of the East Grand Boulevard, 300 feet from Woodward avenue. The building is to have an attractive front, illuminated at night by more than 1,000 lights. White tile floors, marble wainscoting, ornamental plaster, concealed lighting effects, rich furnishings, decorations and stage settings will form a handsome interior. The general plan provides for a lobby so arranged that by passing from the entrance vestibule across a first portion of the lobby, one may enter the first auditorium; or by passing through the length of the lobby or foyer, one may enter the second auditorium located beyond the first one. Each theater has a stage, orchestra pit, boxes, women's and men's retiring room, ushers' room, and a picture booth. There will be a sound-proof pipe organ loft located between the two auditoriums with openings from the loft into each auditorium. The picture booths will be connected by a hall or passageway permitting an exchange of films between the booths. Among the well-known men who are identified with the Grand Boulevard Theater Company are Fred H. Aldrich, former judge; Dr. J. B. Kennedy, H. L. Hurlburt and Arthur Bergeron.

RUSSELL OPENS THE COLONIAL.

Mrs. Albert Russell recently opened the Colonial, a moving picture theater, at Jasper, Ala. The house has been doing a capacity business since the opening. An expenditure of $15,000 was involved in the erection of the building. Ralph A. Root is managing the theater for Mrs. Russell.

OBSERVATIONS

BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN.

SOME PEOPLE who are closely identified with those who are constantly on the alert to suppress the production of pictures that savor of White Slavery and similar objectionable subjects were busy during the past week prosecuting a secret inquiry for the purpose of ascertaining what film producing company contemplates putting upon the market a film based upon the Rogers poisoning case, which has occupied the attention of the criminal authorities of this city for some time. It was stated that the intention was to "crush the evil at its source." Thus far the investigation has been fruitless. Indeed, the results to date show that no producer has sufficient hardihood to undertake such a production. Many rumors are afloat that certain people have made flattering offers to both Lorlys Elton Rogers and Mrs. Ida Sniffen Walters Rogers, the two principals in the deplorable affair, contingent upon the failure of the authorities to convict either or both of them of a crime. The investigation made had no bearing on this aspect of the matter. One of the interested parties stated that developments of that character would be taken care of at the proper time. The object at present is to learn whether such a film subject is in course of preparation or about to be placed upon the market.

From information secured by the writer from a confidential source, it is reasonable to surmise that the inquiry was started by a remark made by a man connected with the motion picture business that in Rogers he identified a person who portrayed the part of a judge in a court room scene that was produced by a film manufacturing concern which had a plant at Coney Island. The person who made the identification said he could not be mistaken, because he played a part in the picture and Rogers was selected only after the director had spent some time in seeking the type he wanted. The type presented by Rogers was so striking and fitted the character portrayed so well it left an impression upon the mind of the informant that made identification instantaneous when Rogers appeared in the poisoning case.

The informant was questioned closely to ascertain whether he was allowing himself to be used as a publicity agent for some production now being prepared, or about to be placed upon the market, or for some film which antedated the Rogers case and had a prominent character bearing a striking resemblance to Rogers. He emphatically declared his innocence of any such purpose, and said his remark was purely incidental to a general conversation regarding the Rogers case. He added he doubted very much that the negative of the picture is still in existence. The company that made it gave up business after a brief career. The informant also volunteered the opinion that an attempt to make the picture a feature on account of Rogers' appearance in it would prove a flat failure.

This opinion will be shared in by all advocating clean and wholesome motion pictures. And the same opinion will prevail should the principals in the case ultimately find themselves in a position to accept the offer reported to have been made to them. Recent decisions of the courts have so clearly defined immorality and public policy to the public that, irrespective of action of the law's machinery, the people will not stand for anything in the line of the Rogers case, whether it be in disguise or otherwise.

"What will Billy Sunday do?" is a question that is agitating managers of some of the regular theaters and a number of the motion picture theater managers. Mr. Joseph Brooks, one of the most prominent of the former, is reported as saying they will not be hurt if Billy Sunday decides to open a religious revival campaign in this city. At least one newspaper writer seems to incline to belief that enthusiasm and curiosity and the chance to get something out of the ordinary free of charge will make Billy Sunday meetings a strong counter-attraction to all lines of amusements. In this instance we do not think the newspaper writer has the correct dope. Mr. Brooks, in support of his opinion, simply says that in the smaller towns and cities such an effect might be felt, but not in New York.

The opinion of the theatrical manager is supported by what is termed in sporting parlance as "past performances." Years ago, when New York had but few theaters and other places of amusement compared with the present number, and the population of the city was proportionately smaller, two of the greatest evangelists in the history of revival meetings here, or abroad, worked industriously for months in the city. They were Moody and Sankey. For a long time they held forth in the old Madison Square Garden, and night after night the crowds in and about the Garden were so great that late arrivals were unable to get within a block of any of the many entrances. Yet, during all the time of the marvelous success, the theaters continued doing their regular business. It is a certainty that no record exists showing complaint by managers of a falling off.

The newspaper writer, who is timorous about Billy Sunday's coming, is not without supporters, who say that one most important fact that must not be overlooked is that nearly all the theaters of the present day are of the motion picture class, and a large percentage of the patrons of those theaters are people who will be influenced by Billy Sunday's work. They are the recent converts to the photoplay form of entertainment. This statement will no doubt give some picture house managers a chill. But it falls far short of sealing their doom. Thousands of the photoplay converts were, like their ancestors, patrons of the regular theaters, and, like the patrons of the olden days, will find time to visit the revivals and also patronize their favorite form of amusement. In the olden times the revivalists attacked the theaters as agencies injurious to the morals of the public. That attack cannot be made with sincerity against the photoplay houses, which now have the endorsement of the public, press and pulpit throughout the land. In other words, conceding for the sake of argument that many converts made by Moody and Sankey turned their backs upon the theaters for a time at least, such action on the part of converts Billy Sunday may make need not be looked for as against the picture houses.

Perhaps the best buoyancy to the hopes of the motion picture people who may feel timid regarding Mr. Sunday's proposed campaign in this city is given by the fact that at no time during his present campaign in Philadelphia has Billy Sunday attacked the motion picture houses, nor have any of the managers of those houses in that city reported any falling off of business through the evangelist's work.

All the motion picture people have to do is to give the public clean and wholesome entertainment. If they do this, and Billy Sunday comes here and is fair, the evangelist will look upon them as co-partners in his great work. From a moral and educational standpoint at least, Billy Sunday must recognize such shows as among the greatest factors of the times. Strong claims may also be made for the pictures from a religious standpoint, but to make conditions mutually satisfactory and avoid conveying the impression that the motion pictures are doing all that Billy Sunday aims to accomplish, the motion picture people may rest their pretensions upon the moral and educational phases of the situation, and leave the finishing touches to the evangelist. Thus we have a finished picture. Bill Sunday is welcomed by the motion picture interests and both pursue their good work with equanimity.

A prominent newspaper in this city has courageously attacked in its motion picture department film producers which it charges with misleading exhibitors by misquoting critics. The practice is condemned as an under-handed and unfair method of advertising. The paper could have very justifiably advanced into another branch of advertising frequently adopted by some manufacturers and agents. It canot be classed with the practice the newspaper condemns, but it is not strictly legitimate. Reference is made to instances when some question of great importance to the motion picture industry is at issue. There is a great scramble by certain people to get upon record, and after reading the interview one finds that the real purpose attained is an advertisement of the pictures produced by those interviewed. Something should be done to make interviews legitimate and not have them distorted so that they class with the patent medicine advertisements that have so long challenged the patience of the readers. Let us have more expressions of honest opinion to the point, and less about Prof. Bull's enormous capacity for annihilating competitors.

"Fatty's and Mabel's Married Life"

A Keystone Farce With Bright Moments of High Comedy.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

Principals.

Fatty .....Roscoe Arbuckle
Mabel .....Mabel Normand

IF ASKED what form of story is most difficult to adequately review, the average critic would reply "farce comedy." In letting go earnestness, the average critic finds himself wandering about like a man who has lost his bearings. It has even been said that farce does not come within the sphere of art it is so largely a question of types. Then the very uncertainty about what produces laughter makes the labor of sifting out that element so arduous as to be almost unsurmountable. The audience will laugh at "Fatty's and Mabel's Married Life" and I can give at least one reason why.

Scene from "Fatty's and Mabel's Married Life" (Keystone).

The newly-weds are in a park when visited by a monkey that has escaped from his organ-grinding master. Fatty becomes enraged over the intrusion and repels the intruder. The Italian organ grinder is furious, but he is defeated in a clash with athletic Fatty and monkey and organ thrown at his head. He swears vengeance and enlists the services of a murderous-looking comrade to assist him in carrying out a scheme of murderous intent. Mabel becomes nervous, but she makes no protest when left at home by her natural protector.

She glances out of an upper window—that of her sitting room—and notes the presence of the suspicious characters in the garden. In an effort to calm herself, she sits down and tries to fasten her attention upon her sewing. Even as she does so, she notices a peculiar movement of a heavy curtain, but she realizes, just as we do when we hear peculiar noises at night in the empty house or flat, that her nervousness is to blame—there can really be no one intruding under the circumstances. Our common sense tells us that all is well, but our sense of fear and caution keeps us on edge.

Mabel Normand's mental revelations while in this situation rise to a degree of fine acting rarely seen on the screen. She does not strain for effect, but, by an infinitude of tiny movements and shifting changes of facial expression, she lays bare the state of mind of a woman struggling between primitive emotion and acquired self-control. The scene is not long but it is an exquisite piece of work. The curtain moves in a peculiar manner. She is startled, then she affects a smile. "There can be no one there—if there was a man, he would come in—then there is not room for a man—it is all a mistake—the effect of nervousness." She looks again. Again a peculiar movement of the curtain. She gasps, but she gradually recovers. She dares not investigate—"The vengeful Italian might be there—impossible." Again she attempts self-government, every variety of feeling showing in her manner. At last she is startled by a decided movement. She rises and runs shrieking out of the room. The rest is roaring farce. What is behind the curtain, where no human being could hide?

Campbell Gollan

CAMPBELL GOLLAN, who plays that most romantic of blacklegs, the exquisite Comte Jean Du Barry, in George Kleine's beautiful six-part feature, "DuBarry," had his first experience before the motion picture camera in his old familiar role, in the Kleine studios at Grugliasco, Italy, last summer. With Mrs. Leslie Carter, Hamilton Revelle, Richard Thornton and other members of the original cast that made the stage play so celebrated, Gollan went through the various scenes, using the oft-repeated lines of the play wherever possible. In the Petit Lever scene, where Mrs. Carter hides the wounded Cosse in her bed, only to be discovered by Du Barry, the language of the play was used by the three characters with all the ease of long familiarity.

Campbell Gollan.

But a motion picture built from a play contains many scenes, the action of which is made plain on the stage by words. Hence there were moments when it was difficult to find the proper words and Campbell Gollan tells of one such experience which occurred in Naples, Italy, recently.

"I was notified one morning to get dressed and make up in my revolutionary garb for a 'hurry-up' scene. I jumped into an automobile and was speedily whisked to a remote part of Naples where I was unceremoniously hustled to the top of a rock pile in the midst of a great crowd of wild-looking Neapolitans dressed as French Revolutionaries. One of our Italian directors assisted me to mount the stones and in his very limited English indicated that I was to incite these people to violence. I looked around helplessly at that mob. Such a mob! Quite the wildest looking aggregation I have ever seen. They were shouting and clamoring and waving their swords, sticks, scythes and guns in a most disconcerting manner. My mind became a perfect blank until above that din I heard the director's first whistle, which meant for me to get ready. I could think of absolutely nothing to say. Then the second whistle sounded shrill and clear and, to my utter amazement, I found myself vehemently addressing that crowd with—Marc Antony's oration from 'Julius Caesar.' It was an inspiration. The strange English language suddenly struck the crowd dumb and the hitherto unruly multitude stood agape. I heard the camera grinding away and casting a hurried look in its direction, saw Mr. Kleine with Mrs. Carter and Hamilton Revelle convulsed with laughter. I continued to borrow from Shakespeare until near the end of the scene and then, in my choicest Italian, yelled, 'Now, boys, rip the tar out of it'—at which they tore loose again. And this, they tell me, is one of the best scenes in the picture."

PHOENIX PURCHASES SITE FOR STUDIO.

The big Crystal palace which had been used as a dance pavilion at Rocky Glen, Pa., has been purchased by the Phoenix Films Corporation for use as a motion picture studio. The structure has a floor space of 35,000 square feet. Thomas Kimwood Peters, who had been connected with Pathe Freres in the production end, is vice-president and general manager of the company which has been chartered in Delaware. The corporation is reported by the Wall Street Journal as having a capital stock of $1,500,000. Rocky Glen has many beautiful spots for the making of artistic outdoor scenes.

"Runaway June"

Episode Five Tells of "A Woman in Trouble"—Another Influence Crosses the Path of June.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

IN THE fifth of the interesting episodes of "Runaway June" we believe that at last we have an inkling as to the final outcome of the unfortunate incident from which the serial gets its name. But then the man with the black vandyke had rather an unpromising expression, we remember, as the curtain dropped, and June, although out of his clutches for the moment, is still on the run, and we haven't the slightest idea where she is headed for. Nevertheless, of one thing we can be certain—at least we think we can—the incident of "The Woman in Trouble" is going to go a long way toward sending foolish June back to her husband's arms. This woman, peeved at the smallness of her weekly allowance, it not being sufficiently large to cover the trifles of her existence, enters a gambling house where through the instrumentality of the "man with the Black Vandyke" June has been given employment, and is called on a debt of eight hundred dollars. Her husband is notified and through the scene that takes place the police come to raid the gambling house, a mock fire is arranged, and while the firemen are putting out the fire June and the others escape.

Scene from "Runaway June" (Mutual).

Some comedy has been worked into this episode where the colored servant from June's own home goes marketing and comes across June's maid. On the whole the producing end has not been quite as successful with this as with the previous episodes, and a slight bit of padding is noticeable.

FAITHFUL SERVICES EARNS MANAGER THEATER.

Robert J. Harmon, who has been associated with Max Stern, now president of the Majestic Theater Company, Columbus, Ohio, operating the Majestic Theater, one of the biggest and best picture houses in that city, for the past ten years was rewarded for his long and faithful service by being given the Exhibit Theater, one of the picture houses owned by Mr. Stern. Mr. Harmon was managing the Edisonia for Mr. Stern for two years and for eight years he directed the destinies of the Exhibit. There was a consideration in the deal, but it was only nominal.

Mr. Harmon recently announced that he would close the theater for a short period, during which time it will be repaired. He has taken a long new lease on the property. The Exhibit was one of the finest theaters in the early days of exhibiting, and will again be in that category when improvements have been completed.

THEATER ADVERTISING.

Exhibitors will notice that the appeal for dignified yet snappy and striking advertising display has been answered by a concern who are supplying by mail and express all through the country, hand painted signs, show cards, banners and other display.

Individual expression can now be given to any theater's advertising without more cost than by using the lithographed posters.

Nicholas Kessel has inaugurated the new concern known as the Kessel Advertising System of 155 West 46th street, New York City.

Harvey Gates a Free Lance Writer

IN ORDER that he may devote all his time to the writing of photoplays Harvey Gates, who has achieved a reputation in the film world as a publicity expert of exceptional ability, has left the Lubin company at Phoenix, Ariz., of which Romaine Fielding is the director. It was two months ago that Harvey, as he is known to a host of friends in the game, severed his affiliations with the Universal company, where he had been associate editor of the Universal Weekly and had handled a great part of the trade paper publicity, to write scenarios for Fielding and do his personal publicity work. One of his two-reel plays, "West, Two Thousand Miles," is just being completed in Phoenix, and another, "Dr Gonzales, from Mexico," in three reels, is the next one scheduled for production. The publicity dope put out for Fielding by Harvey has attracted widespread attention. "Giving Credit," a feature article which appeared in the New York Dramatic Mirror annual, is one of his stunts, and there are those who should know who are ready to assert that he is the sole author of it. Harvey first broke in as a writer and film reviewer on the Dramatic Mirror over two years ago. Here he remained for a year and during this time he started the writing of photoplays and found success almost immediately. Following, he became associated with the Universal, and while his duties as editor and publicity man were arduous, he found time to turn out scenarios which sold. Among those which he has had produced are: "I Was Meant for You," Biograph; "Concentration," Biograph; "His Father's House," Biograph; "The Scar," Biograph; "The Elder Brother," a two-reel Essanay in which Francis X. Bushman starred; "When the World Was Silent," a three-reel Imp drama; "At the Banquet Table," two-reel Imp, and "In the Hands of the Potter," Essanay.

Harvey Gates.

For the present Harvey will be located in Salt Lake City, where he has gone, with his wife, to visit his folks, from whom he has been separated several years. "Bennie (Zeidman) of Lubinville" and he left Fielding's Lubin company the same day, an odd coincidence in that they are the first two men from the Rialto and the film game to ever join the director. It is generally understood that Fielding has always taken his people from the "brush." Bennie is now located in Los Angeles, and there is a probability of Mr. Gates moving on to the Pacific coast within a month or so. As it is, he is confining his efforts to scenarios which he has every assurance of finding a ready market for.

BURLESQUE DETECTIVE SERIES.

Allen Curtis has started production on the second of his detective travesty series featuring Gale Henry and Max Asher in the title roles of "Lady Baffles" and "Detective Duck." The series is intended to burlesque the impossible secret service plays which have been prevalent of late and of yore. In these secret service and governmental near-tragedies plans of fortifications and explosive formulae are usually on the brink of being stolen. Sometimes the theft actually does take place, but the foreign spy (usually the "spy" looks perilously like a Mexican general), is caught before he has time to open the portfolio containing the precious papers.

"POP" ROCK AT PALM BEACH.

Mr. and Mrs. W. T. Rock left New York on Friday, Feb. 5, for Palm Beach, Fla. A large party of friends assembled at the Pennsylvania station, New York, to wish them a pleasant trip. "Pop" expects to remain in the region of balmy weather for several weeks.

"Mistress Nell"

Famous Players' Five-Part Subject Is Prettily Staged, but Rather Pointless Dramatically.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

IN "Mistress Nell," the Famous Players' five-part production released Feb. 1, we have a prettily staged and lavishly costumed subject. Its lack of dramatic force will be compensated in great measure by the presence in it of Mary Pickford and by the work of Owen Moore. The story, which is an adaptation of the play by George C. Hazelton, Jr., is one in which there is lacking any great objective. An actress is in love with a king. The king rather likes the actress, but every one knows that the actress cannot be queen, and the observer feels that the story must end in the air—and it does.

It is probable that most of the admirers of the famous little star who takes the lead in this picture will like her as Scene from "Mistress Nell" (Famous Players).

Mistress Nell, but it is likewise probable they will feel she is not fortunately cast in any part which requires her to assume the role of a rollicking cavalier. While on the screen she is unrecognized by the king and the duchess when she appears at the grand ball in the garb of a young dandy her identity is only too plain to the man and woman out front.

There are many scenes that will interest. The opening, of the hunt with the horses and hounds, and the following view of the theater stage and audience, is auspicious. The setting of the duchess' ball is one that stands out, too; it is wide and deep.

Miss Pickford is given excellent support. Owen Moore as King Charles II, who, it is explained, is a man who never said a foolish thing or did a wise one, gives a performance that is dignified and convincing. Arthur Hoops is the Duke of Buckingham and Ruby Hoffman is Louise, Duchess of Portsmouth. Their work is deserving of praise. And there are many others of whom the same may be said.

MARSTON JOINS SELIG.

Lawrence Marston, one of the most celebrated producers of big pictureplays, arrived in Chicago recently and reported at the General Offices of the Selig Polyscope Company. He proceeded at once to organize a strong company and will direct the productions of some of the pretentious Selig Spectacular Specials to be filmed from the works of America's leading authors.

"I am glad to be in Chicago at last," said Mr. Marston to a representative of this publication. "It is exceedingly gratifying that Mr. Selig should have selected me to direct the production of some of the great pictureplays which are to be turned out. I have read a great deal about the contracts that Mr. Selig has made with the biggest writers in the world, and with such material at hand, it is only natural to expect that splendid productions will be made from them. With the unprecedented array of the world's biggest authors as the creators of possibilities in pictureplay making, the world can look forward to some extraordinary motion pictures from the Selig Studios."

Mr. Marston is accompanied by Mrs. Marston. He is looking over a number of scenarios for the purpose of selecting his initial subject for picture making at the Chicago studio.

William L. Sherrill

"WE ARE going to make films that you would be glad to take your sister and mother to," said William L. Sherrill, the genial vice-president and general manager of the Frohman Amusement Corporation, when asked the policy of his new corporation. That, indeed, is a purpose to be welcomed with enthusiasm in this day of new film concerns. The first feature film of this new producing organization is one which is built on human interest and the stars are two youthful stars from the legitimate. The production is "The Fairy and the Waif," an original scenario written by Marie Hubert Frohman.

William L. Sherrill.

There is a combination of substantial business and artistic temperament and personality about the Frohman Amusement Corporation. On the business side is Mr. Sherrill, who is widely known in insurance and financial circles. It is claimed he has interested financiers in this city and Chicago in this producing organization which comes into the film industry with high producing ideals.

On the artistic side is Gustave Frohman, of the famous Frohman brothers, Charles, Gustave and Daniel. Mr. Frohman has had a most wonderful career and has made much very important theatrical history. In coming into the film business and taking charge of the artistic side of this producing organization he has brought with him from the theatrical business a wealth of experience and knowledge that will make it possible for him to work out some really big things in the way of feature productions.

George Irving, the well known producer, has directed the first Frohman film under the guidance of Marie Hubert Frohman. Starring in this production is "The Littlest Rebel," Marie Miles Minter, and Percy Helton, the cripple boy in "The Miracle Man." Little Miss Minter is the original "Littlest Rebel," having originated the part and played it for four years with Dustin and William Farnum. Other girls played the part after Miss Minter, but there has never been any question as to the right to the title, "The Littlest Rebel," by which she is known from coast to coast by people who have forgotten her real name. In fact hundreds of dramatic critics and theatrical people always refer to her as "Virgie," the name of the "Rebel." In speaking of Miss Minter's first appearance in pictures, which is in this film, Mr. Irving said: "I think she is the most beautiful girl I have ever seen on the screen." Mr. Irving is also most enthusiastic over the work of Percy Helton as "The Waif."

Offers from several of the distributing organizations are being considered for the output of this new corporation, but they are not yet ready to announce their plans. They say they are in the position that few independent producers enjoy, having plenty of finances and substantial backing.

WARREN TO SELIG COAST STUDIO.

Giles R. Warren, who has been directing Tyrone Power, the distinguished actor, in Selig Spectacular Specials in the Selig Chicago studios, has gone to the Pacific Coast, where he will take charge of one of the Selig company of players. Mr. Warren while at the Chicago studios, directed the production of such unusual subjects as "The Servant in the House," "A Texas Steer," "Your Girl and Mine," etc. The transfer to the Coast comes as a promotion to Mr. Warren.

Lawrence Marston, the well known director recently engaged by the Selig Polyscope Company, will succeed Giles R. Warren at the Selig Chicago studios. He has already started the work of filming some Selig picture plays of unusual worth. Gilson Willets, the author, has adapted the first story into picture play form to be used by Director Marston.

"The Secret Room"

Two-Reel Kalem Picture of Horror—Owns Spectator Till Happy Ending Begins.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

NEVER was a happy ending more welcome than in this picture by the Kalem Company, "The Secret Room." It is one that demanded some relief at the close; for it builds up a veritable nightmare and would have been almost insufferable if one couldn't wake up from it—insufferable from sheer horror. "The hardened reviewer" has no shield to protect his nerves from such a theme as is pictured here. He is only hardened to often repeated themes, like the public to a new song growing old; a new theme such as this will get as effectively under his skin as any normal man's. People have thought up situations of terror before this and even put them into pictures—psychological, devilish situations that were born on some blasted heath where the soul loses its grip and becomes the naked prey of dominions—but in this picture the showing is made real. We have seen only three or four other film offerings portraying horror that were as effective. When the spectator sees it he will know whether he has strong nerves or not. If some spectator happens to be blue and dyspeptic it may be to him like some "hysterico passio," some King Lear's "climbing sorrow" for a while. No one will call it dead or flat or sloppy or any other of the names disgruntled spectators have abundant store of to give the worried exhibitor. As a nerve-thriller, it wins with both feet.

The author of the script new or classic is not given; but Tom Moore produced it and plays the Mephistopheles role as a doctor learned in Eastern lore. The honors for acting go to Ethel Clifton as his wife, although every one of the entire cast plays ably and in first-class professional style. Robert Ellis plays a derelict whom the doctor buys. The man was about to commit suicide on account of a girl and the doctor wants to use his life and promises to give him a good time for a few weeks. The doctor's house is fitted up in Oriental style; he has a Hindoo servant (Paton Gibbs) and his wife has a great unexplained sorrow. There is a mysterious room in the house. The wife's niece, Marguerite Courtot, comes on a visit and wonders what is in the closed room. The "time" of the bought derelict is now up and he comes to the house. We soon see that the girl was once his sweetheart and that it was for her that he was about to commit self-destruction. But they now make up; the man for the moment forgetting that he is sold. Now we find that the doctor has an idiot son and that his purpose is to take the mind and intellect he has bought and give them to his son. If some unforeseen thing had not happened just at the right time he would have done it too. Betty Peterson plays the mad boy.

W. S. HART IN "MR. SILENT HASKINS."

Cast again in his favorite role—that which has made him nationally famous as a character actor—William S. Hart promises to create another stir in motion picture circles soon in "Mr. Silent Haskins," an interesting western story to be released by the Kay Bee Co. Feb. 19.

Beata Lily Gray

BEATA (BETTY) LILY GRAY, one of the stock members of the Vitagraph Company, began her artistic career during her school days, when as a young lady in her early teens she was noted as a beauty. It was Miss Gray's fortune to be selected as the model for Harrison Grey Fischer's famous Western Girl creation and later to grace Charles Dana Gibson's Debutante series, besides posing for Clarence Underwood for a year.

"Betty" Gray.

Miss Gray, or Betty as she is familiarly called, was born in Passaic, N. J., February 27, 1894, and is of Danish-Swedish parentage. Her father, Nelson Gray, having been born in Copenhagen, Denmark, and her mother, whose maiden name was Amalia Hansen, in Sweden. Miss Gray received her education in the public schools of Passaic. Graduating from the high school, she studied art in the New York School of Applied Art and was making exceptional progress when the lure of vaudeville attracted her. Securing booking for an eight months' tour, she presented a single act in which she made four changes of costume, appearing as flower dancer in an Italian number, and finished with a recitation. Vaudeville did not appease her craving for artistic triumphs and she sought other fields in which to display her ability, finally deciding to try posing for pictures. Strange as it may seem, her magnificent head of hair, Miss Gray's crowning glory, was responsible for her first engagement as a screen artist, her ability as an actress being in the nature of a surprise to her first director. It is a noteworthy fact, that although she has posed for several motion picture companies, her first picture has always been the means of her making stock, and it was so when she joined the Vitagraph Company.

Miss Gray enjoys the distinction of having played opposite a number of leading artists, some of whom came from the legitimate stage to pose for a single picture and her work in every case has been received with critical commendation. Although having been with the Vitagraph Company but a short while, she has appeared in a number of successful pictures, the most important being "The Smoking Out of Bella Butts," "The Hand of God" and "The Girl That Might Have Been."

During the hours when she is away from the studio, Miss Gray finds time to write stories, scenarios and poems and to illustrate and make head-covers for magazines. She believes in "living up to what light you have and in being true to yourself."

EDISON STORY ON HISTORICAL INCIDENT—A QUADRUPLE EXPOSURE FEATURE.

An unusual photographic feat—a quadruple exposure—was successfully executed by Edison Director Eugene Nowland in "The Boston Tea Party," a forthcoming release, in which the effect is tellingly used in a patriotic speech during a stirring moment of the play. A dramatic heart-interest story is woven in and around that famous historical incident, where the early settlers rise against the government and, disguised as Indians, dump the cargo of tea into the harbor. The play bristles with action. Every historical feature is preserved, down to the smallest detail. Miss Maxime Brown, a pretty, young Edison actress, does some excellent riding in the play.

TEMPLE THEATER CHANGES HANDS.

The Temple of Ocala, Florida, erected some few years ago by the Marion-Dunn Lodge No. 19 of Ocala, was recently sold to E. C. Bennett and Charles H. Lloyd, both residents of that place. The consideration named in the transfer was $23,560. Mr. Bennett, who has had the management of the Temple since it was opened, will continue in that capacity.

THE Edison Company has always excelled in sensation stories based on the adventures of railroad employees, "The Tragedy of the Rails" is one of these. All ends well for hero and heroine, hence the term "Tragedy" is misleading. The common acceptance of a "Tragedy" is that of a dramatic composition of stately movement and unhappy termination. his story is built on a foundation of sensational incident, one calling for the physical activity and daring temperament of a Gertie McCoy, and Gertie is in her glory. Whether or not she actually does what the spectator sees is of minor importance. What is actually portrayed calls for the exercise of both courage and strength. Some fiery strain in her blood makes it appear that she actually finds exhilaration in reckless adventure, she takes to it so kindly.

There is a bal masque of railroad employees in the preparatory scenes, attended by Gertie, in her brother's overalls. She gets into the smoking room where Bob, the young engineer she loves, suspects her sex if not her identity. She is unmasked. Bob flies into a rage that his sweetheart should dress in men's clothes and snubs her during the rest of the evening. Woman-like, or human-like, she finds consolation in the attentions of "Tony." She trifles with Tony until she sets up the customary triangular situation.

Gertie is the hypothenuse of a right angle triangle, the square of which is equal to the sum of the squares of the other two sides, respectively "Bob" and "Tony." You will notice in all such triangles that the other two sides meet at a point more or less acute. So Tony meets Bob in the cab of the latter's engine. Struggle. Bob is knocked senseless. Tony starts the engine to cover his crime. Then Tony's revolver goes off in his pocket and fatally wounds him somewhere or other, deponent sayeth not. That gets the engine started and Tony out of the way. Now for the thrill.

Gertie gets a message that "No. 33" is running wild against the course of a fast express. She boards a "gasoline handcar" and starts it on a track parallel to that of the derelict "No. 33." She lets the engine overtake her and springs from the handcar to Bob's locomotive. The engine is brought to a stop as soon as possible but this is done barely in time. The engineer of the fast express brings his train to a standstill where his cowcatcher could just crack an egg with the other engine.

Does Bob feel sorry when Gertie revives him and he is told what a splendid girl he nearly lost? You will have to see the picture to solve that deep mystery.

BERT SIEBEL WITH KRITERION.

Mr. Bert Siebel, formerly with the Willis Studios and Laboratory, now with Kriterion Service, as assistant to the technical editor.

Dustin Farnum in Captain Courtesy

A VAST ranch presenting one of the most beautiful locations in the mountains back of Los Angeles and overlooking a valley with a snowcapped range in the vista beyond has been leased by Bosworth, Inc., where work is now well under way on the forthcoming release, "Captain Courtesy."

Those who have viewed the sets for this production and the buildings which are already completed say they are the best they have ever seen. In staging "Captain Courtesy" Bosworth, Inc., are displaying their usual exactness of detail and faithfulness to the minor as well as the major points in the story. The producers borrowed from an old Californian Mission the altar, decorations, pictures and accessories, in order to present the true atmosphere. The play, inspired by the romance of California history, has for its locations and backgrounds the mountains, the San Gabriel Mission of the Padres and the houses, architecturally Spanish, which preserve the romantic atmosphere that pervades the old historical landmarks.

Dustin Farnum.

Dustin Farnum, the prominent legitimate star who recently allied himself with the Bosworth forces, will appear in the title role of "Captain Courtesy." While the cowboy on the stage is after all an idealized puppet, the cowboy on the plains and hills, who scales cliffs and rides bucking bronchos, must be a real man and an athlete. To see Dustin Farnum in a Western costume dashing up a steep hill on horseback, fording streams and performing other feats which demand physical ability as well as a steady nerve one is readily convinced that in addition to his great dramatic talent, the star easily fulfills every demand of the character which has been assigned him.

Large battle scenes are being staged among the mountains at the present time which promise to be entirely above the ordinary. In place of the usual crowd of "extras" there are regular United States troops, whose correct attire and military deportment will aid materially in the success of the big film. There will be over five hundred troops used. In addition to the regular troops large bodies of cowboys, Indians and Mexican soldiers are included in the play.

Dainty as a wild-flower, playing with Dustin Farnum is Winnifred Kingston, the same little leading lady of "The Virginian" and "Cameo Kirby." Courtenay Foote, one of the most brilliant artists among screen actors, appears in an important role, which affords him many opportunities to display his remarkable ability.

A CAMERA MAN IN THE TRENCHES.

E. A. Wallace, the American newspaperman, who is acting as camera man for the Hearst-Selig Twice-a-Week News Pictorial, with the German army in Belgium and France, has been filming motion pictures of soldier life in the trenches. He has forwarded some interesting films taken along the battle front.

Mr. Wallace writes: "I have spent days at a time in the underground passages, termed by courtesy, trenches. They are so devised that the soldiers can eat and sleep in them. In some localities, little underground apartments have been dug out and they are heated and rudely furnished. All through them the telephone wires criss-cross, and at certain stations in the trenches, operators are seated and they report at stated intervals to the executive officers in command.

"Occasionally, there will come an order to fire and then the heavy guns will let loose. The range is found by mathematical calculation, and the enemy is rarely seen. For miles and miles along the battle front, if it were not for the thunder of the guns, and exploding shells, a spectator would be loth to believe that a real conflict was being waged."

The views of the rudely constructed trenches, occupied by the soldiers, their methods of constructing these trenches, and modes of enduring many hardships and inconveniences, are realistically shown in scenes released in the Hearst-Selig Twice-a-Week News Pictorial.

"The Exploits of Elaine"

The Seventh Episode with "The Double Trap" Proves to Be One of the Most Thrilling of the Series.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE dizzy height of a belfry tower has been chosen for a portion of the staging of the seventh episode of "The Exploits of Elaine," and the thrills that penetrate from this elevation are of the most poignant kind. In other words, this particular episode is a hair raiser. So realistic is its presentation that what we happen to know about studio work does not seem to matter in the jar which our nerves get at the sight of Craig Kennedy's wrestling match with another agent of the "Clutching Hand" on the very tip top of the tower, and the final breaking of the cross on the cupola, to which they cling, and its fall through the air to the ground, accompanied by the villain, who succumbs shortly afterward.

In this number there is less of science than in the previous ones. There is an added interest in the introduction of two or three more interesting types, namely, "Weeping Mary" and her son, the former claiming to have been married to Taylor Dodge, Elaine's father, and "Gertie the Pippin," begging to claim the services of Kennedy in the search of her missing jewels. These incidents serve to place Elaine and Kennedy again in the hands of the enemy, and, as before stated, their miraculous escape is a thriller.

The same care in the direction of the picture is noticeable in this number as has characterized throughout the Pathe-Hearst series.

TERWILLIGER MAKING "CAVE MAN" PICTURE.

George W. Terwilliger, the Lubin director and author, who is in St. Augustine, Florida, with a special company of Lubin stars, is at present presiding over a most unique set of buildings. They are located on Anastasia Island and have been transformed into structures that represent several widely different ages in the development of the human race.

Terwilliger is filming a big feature picture the action of which begins back in the cave days, continues through various periods and ends in modern times. The background for some of the big scenes in the play he found on Anastasia Island, and the old buildings he so rearranged that one can walk into a different age, costume and atmosphere at every turn.

The old buildings have a romantic history, but their future will be even more so. As soon as the cave man picture is completed a thrilling naval drama, written by Terwilliger, will be filmed in and around the buildings. Then the roofs will be removed in order to take interiors, and when this is completed Terwilliger will stage a young war on the island, during which naval men will train heavy artillery on the buildings and shell them until nothing remains.

CAST FOR NEW VIVIAN MARTIN PHOTOPLAY.

In the coming Vivian Martin feature that is being made at the World Film studios, at Fort Lee, under the direction of Emile Chautard, the cast includes the following players: Milton Sills, who has just concluded his work in "The Pit" with Wilton Lackaye; Alec. B. Francis, who has just finished working in the Robert Warwick feature, "Alias Jimmy Valentine"; Fred. C. Truesdell and Miss Nora Sisson.

Al. E. Christie

IT IS hard to say which is the more humorous, Al. E. Christie or his comedies. Al. E., as he is known to most of his friends, is very much of a character, and he is like nothing else but Al. E. Standing well over six feet, wiry and boisterous as an overgrown boy, it is seldom that he is not laughing with or at someone. Christie's picture experiences are virtually confined to one firm, and he still insists upon his releases going out under the brand with which he started, the Nestor. There is a big difference in conditions, however, for when the Nestor company was owned solely by Dave Horsley (who turned the crank) Christie acted, painted scenery, obtained and put up his own props — all this apart from directing as well. Christie looks back and laughs and says he thoroughly enjoyed it all. In those days he did not confine himself to comedy, but produced a number of dramas; but probably his first big success was with the "Mutt and Jeff" series which were made in New Jersey.

Al. E. Christie.

When Christie first came to California he added to his other duties that of general manager. Thomas Ricketts was the only other producer at that time, and the rise of the great aggregation now in possession started in Los Angeles with Christie as manager. Al. had his own method of making funny plays. He insisted upon having young and well-dressed people around him, and although the powers that were viewed his efforts with not a little alarm they caught on, and, before they were aware of it, the Nestor comedies had established a place for themselves in the hearts of the exhibitors and the public.

In directing, Mr. Christie laughs with his players and is about the most energetic producer in captivity, for he talks and directs and follows every action. Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran have been with him almost from the start.

CHANGE OF BILL AT VITAGRAPH THEATER.

The Vitagraph Theater will offer as its principal feature for the week commencing Sunday, February 14, the four-part melodrama "The Wheels of Justice." Theodore Marston produced the subject with a cast that included Dorothy Kelly, James Morrison, Louise Beaudet, Anders Randolf, Eulalie Jensen, George Cooper and Charles Eldridge in the most prominent parts.

Four shorter pictures that add variety to the program include a one-part comedy, "When Samuel Skidded," in which a wife's cupidity subjects her weak-kneed husband to laughable indignities, featuring Kate Price and Jack Brawn; a one-part drama, "The Quality of Mercy," picturized from George Bronson Howard's magazine story of the same name, in which Edith Storey, S. Rankin Drew and Antonio Moreno will be seen in prominent parts; a one-part comedy, "Some White Hope," a laughing story of a fighting "rube," introducing Donald MacBride and Nicholas Dunaew; and a decidedly interesting two-part drama, "The Millionaire's Hundred-Dollar Bill," that tells in dramatic sequence the story of a wager, a girl, a hundred-dollar bill and the result, with a selected cast including Leo Delaney and Leah Baird.

OHIO CENSORS PASS "WAR OF WARS."

C. Lang Cobb, Jr., manager of sales and publicity of Ramo Films, Inc., visited Columbus, Ohio, on Feb. 1, 1915, for the sole purpose of having this high grade American-made feature passed upon by the Ohio Censor Board. With one exception, the entire board was present and complimented Mr. Cobb on the excellence of the picture. "The War of Wars" is a very strong, substantial photoplay which cost the Ramo Company $22,000 in cash to produce. The States of Ohio, Indiana, Kentucky, Illinois, Missouri and Texas are the only states unsold for this picture.

"His New Job"

Charles Chaplin Makes Successful Start with Essanay in Enjoyable Two-Reel Comedy.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

JUDGING from first impressions and the roars of laughter evoked by Chaplin's first Essanay comedy from a representative New York audience, "His New Job" is going to be popular.

Strange to say, the production has no plot to speak of; but it would seem that Charles Chaplin has but to poke some other fellow in the stomach, pommel the seat of his trousers, or rattle his brains with anything that comes handy to call forth round after round of the heartiest laughter. And after all is said and done the whole production consists merely of slapstick comedy; nor does it seem to belong to any distinct school of comedy. The fact of the matter is that "His New Job" is rather a hard proposition to analyze, and the only thing that is certain, besides its assured popularity, is that it sets the fuse to the picture fan's bump of mirth.

Ben Turpin proves a good foil for Chaplin. For him the comedy star has no respect whatsoever. He pushes his face in, kicks him, slams the swing doors in his face, and finally walks on the unfortunate's stomach. In fact, he abuses with sturdy vigor most people who happen to cross his orbit; and stepping on the leading lady's train, with the result that her shapely silk-stockinged calves, with their appendages of feet in French-heeled slippers continue on their upward way unconscious of the public gaze, is one of the least of the offenses committed by the clever comedian.

What there is of a plot consists of his coming to a moving picture studio to look for work. From the position of carpenter's assistant he falls heir through stress of circumstances to the enviable role of the hero of a picture play which is in the course of production. The mistreated applicant whom he has pommeled to the queen's taste takes his place as carpenter's assistant. Later, by a clever reversal of situations, the head carpenter, blamed for the hero's misdeeds, is thrown bodily from the studio.

It would be impossible in short space to recount the various atrocities committed by comedian Chaplin in these two vibrant reels; but, as indicated before, if the audience thinks it's funny, it must be so.

ARTISTS' MODELS IN "OLD DUTCH."

Admirers of female beauty in real life, as well as between magazine covers, should make a point of seeing Lew Fields in "Old Dutch," the five-reel comedy released by the World Film Corporation on February 8.

There is a scene in the film in which, at a large Florida hotel, it is necessary to have a group of beautiful girls. Frank Crane, the director of the picture, determined to have the most beautiful models he could procure, and instead of going to the theater for them went to the studios of the best-known illustrators in New York—those having pleasing drawings and sketches of feminine types which delight us on, and in, magazines, books, billboards, etc. This resulted in Mr. Crane being able to procure eight of these lovely girls to appear in "Old Dutch."

Josephine West

JOSEPHINE WEST, one of the new stars of the United Film Service, makes her first appearance at the head of the newly organized Pike's Peak Film Company in a striking play of Indian life, "The Greater Barrier," which is to be released shortly.

Miss West, while only just added to the roster of stars appearing under United auspices, is a leading woman of vast experience in legitimate as well as screen productions. Since entering the ranks of photoplayers she has been identified in particular with Western subjects, having played leads in the Broncho Films for two years, in the Cheyenne Feature Films and the Colorado Motion Picture Company's productions, as well as with other companies, specializing in Western reels. She has also appeared in a great variety of roles for the Edison, Lubin and Selig companies. It was she who was the leading woman in "The Hand of the Law," a Western photoplay which featured Thomas J. Tynan, warden of the Colorado State Penitentiary.

Josephine West.

Miss West has entered heart and soul into the life of the plains since going West some years ago and has become an adept at riding, roping, shooting, boating and swimming. In a recent film play, "Bringing in the Law," she permitted a horse to be shot under her while in full gallop, a fair example of her intrepidity and fearlessness. The play proved one of the greatest thrillers ever thrown on the screen. In the most recent production in which Miss West appears, "The Greater Barrier," which is promised for early release by the United Film Service, Miss West allows herself to be dragged by a horse at the end of a lariat.

This lithe and lissome pet of picturedom has been appearing before audiences either in the flesh or in reflected poses ever since her sixteenth year. She is a Southern girl, being born in Virginia, and boasts all of the lusciousness, magnetism and olive-skinned pulchritude of the daughters of that state. Her experience on the legitimate stage includes many important roles, in which she won high recognition.

That invaluable asset where picture-playing is concerned, experience in a repertoire theater, is possessed by Miss West. She was leading woman of the College Theater Stock Company of Chicago and of the Imperial Stock Company of the same city for several years.

AGNES EGAN COBB LEAVES ECLAIR.

Agnes Egan Cobb, after two years of hard work placing the Leading Players Film Corporation and Features Ideal, Inc., on the market and giving them a world-wide, substantial reputation, has resigned from the management of the aforesaid corporations, as well as from the board of directors of the Eclair Film Company.

Mrs. Cobb has had no vacation during this time and feels the need of one very badly. She has gone to Toronto to visit her brother for one week. Upon her return she will take up the management of the Egan Film Company until the complete recovery of her brother, Charles S. Egan, who is gaining his health rapidly, and is expected back to his office inside of the next two weeks, whereupon, Mrs. Cobb says, she will launch the biggest surprise the film industry has known yet.

CARLYLE BLACKWELL AND "THE HIGH HAND."

Carlyle Blackwell hopes to be through with "The High Hand" in about a week, and both he and William D. Taylor, the director, believe that they have turned out a wonderfully interesting film for the Alliance Program. They are much pleased at the manner in which the Favorite Players' features have been received by the exchange men, and Mr. Blackwell is in receipt of several letters telling him that the appearance of "The Last Chapter" has broken all records.

"From Headquarters"

Remarkable Three-Reel Vitagraph Containing an Abundance of Heart Interest and Many Big Moments.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

THOSE who believe the quality of a motion picture depends on the number of spectacular incidents that may be injected into it may with profit study "From Headquarters," the three-part Broadway Star Feature shown at the Vitagraph Theater during anniversary week. Here is a story of the simplest description. In it are three principals —and few others. There is never any doubt as to what is going on; clarity is absolute. Yet this simply told story maintains a hold on the feelings, from the beginning to the very end, such as only the best drama can. Ralph Ince produces the subject, and his skilled hand and fertile mind are in evidence all the way. David Sonnenblick is the author who has given us a real script.

Anita Stewart, Earle Williams and Anders Randolph are the three players who portray the story. We name them in the order in which they appear on the program. There is, however, no superiority in merit but rather equality, and this fact constitutes one of the features of the production. Miss Stewart is the daughter of a Headquarters' detective who when her employer has won her love and discarded her plunges a knife into him. Mr. Williams is the employer who has such a narrow escape from death at the hand of his stenographer. Mr. Randolph is the detective assigned to clear up a case, but has reason, before he gets out of his home, to believe his daughter guilty of the crime.

Mr. Ince has made frequent repetitions of vital scenes in order the better to hammer into the mind of the onlookers what is passing through that of the character. He has gone to the limit in the employment of restraint; he has had the courage to continue turning the camera's crank when the only action discernible was the storm raging behind the rigid features of the men or the mobile face of the woman.

No time is lost in the development of the story. As the broker and his stenographer lean over to pick up a sheet of paper the attraction of the man of the world for the girl in her first position is clear. Rose dreams at her machine of sitting on the arm of his chair and taking notes. The dream comes true, only too true. The impish young clerks see in the general situation opportunity for comedy; Rose is unaware of their mirth or unmoved by it.

Of the strongest scenes—just a few—are the denunciation of the broker by the girl when she sees he has turned his attention to a newcomer; the plunging of the two-edged envelope opener into the back of the employer; the escape; the discovery of the wounded man by a client, the word to Headquarters and the assignment of the father to the case—it is in his district; the dialogue between the two when the father meets at the door the frantic daughter and his suggestion that she seems to know something about the trouble; the father's investigation and the confirming of his fears, with flashes of Rose curled up at the window awaiting the inevitable; the return to the station of the Spartanlike detective, to report and then to make the arrest, only to be informed that the broker has called off the investigation; his homecoming and the misinterpretation by the daughter of the stern, sad face of the father and of the hand reaching out to her shoulder; the ensuing explanations and the heartbreaking embrace. And then, after the lapse of time, the call of the repentant broker, and the irruption of the enraged father; the struggles of the daughter to release the stranglehold of the father, her face between his arms and touching the faces of the two men; her victory over the giant detective as the convalescent collapses, and the concluding scene as the reluctant father leaves his daughter in the arms of the man who had come to make amends for the wrong he had done.

The play's the thing, of course; in "From Headquarters" we have the play and the players, too. There are others besides those mentioned. Among these is Temples Saxe, the witness; and there is the sergeant at the police desk—grim and to the life.

"From Headquarters," as the Yankees put it, is man's size —and woman's, too.

"$50 Prize Contest"

Three-reel Imp Production, Based on Prize Story, Contains Strong Moral Impetus.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

A CREDITABLE production written and staged by Stuart Paton, but still waiting for a name, is the result of the $50 prize contest held by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.

The story is good. The writer had in mind the crime of intemperance, and has ably demonstrated his idea with the case of a drunkard; and he has, moreover, chosen a strong example, that of a young doctor, using as illustration of the consequences of his sin the sorrow and bereavement in the household of a patient, and the ravages wrought on his own destiny through his addiction to the liquor habit, gambling, etc.

In the cast of the picture appear Matt Moore as the intemperate young Dr. Carson, Hobart Henley as his professional rival, Dr. Grant, William Welsh in the role of the bereaved husband, Howard Crampton as the crook, and Dorothy Phillips as the crook's daughter.

The production has plenty of interesting action, is well set, and is, of course, strong on the human interest side. Looking at it in a general way, the story is true to life, falling short possibly in one instance only; the placing of the doctor in prison is rather a forced situation. True, his entry into the home of his rival, when several years after his downfall he happens by one night and sees Nell, the daughter of the crook, being forced to open the safe in the Scene from $50 Prize Contest Story (Imp).

Grant home, and is caught with the goods on him in his attempt to save the girl, is a perfectly legitimate situation. The following situations are not, however, all of the same sincere nature, namely, those which occur when the child of Grant is shot and operated on by Carson, with the girl Nell as his assistant, while the police wait outside the door; and it is an unsatisfactory solution of the problem that places Carson in prison after the service rendered Grant on behalf of his child, without even the sign of an expostulation on the part of Grant.

The production has, in spite of any adverse criticism which might be offered, a mission of its own to perform, which it is perfectly able to carry out; and it will be a welcome one to both educators and reformers. A plan is on foot, as this review is being written, to exhibit the picture before the prisoners at Sing Sing on Lincoln's birthday, the prisoners to be asked to give the production a name.

March 5th will see the release of this production, although a suitable name is not expected to be decided on for some time.

Considerable Tact Displayed in the Direction of Four-Reel Subject Presented by the Picture Playhouse Film Co.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

AMONG the various subjects presented for film adaptation, occasionally one springs up, which, having excellent marketable qualities, presents situations difficult of analysis from a moral standpoint, and more difficult still by way of unbiased criticism; for after all the criticism of a picture play from the very vastness of the field to be covered requires, if possible, the focus of the viewpoint of many minds, rather than an individual opinion.

The play in question has been played by a company of talented European artists, Gustave Serena, Anna Patersen, Maria Jacobini and Mario DeAngelis, and has been directed with a good deal of care and tact. The story is that of a French citizen, a local politician evidently, whose campaign for mayor is suddenly brought to a standstill through the lack of funds. This is overcome, however, through the self-imposed offices of an actress who has fallen in love with the mayor elect and who advances the sum of $20,000 for the furtherance of the campaign. In his gratitude the man fails to resist the affectionate demonstrations of the woman, who goes off on a three months' trip with the supposition without positive grounds that on her return she will become the wife of the mayor of the city.

On her return, however, she is met with coolness and the payment in full of the debt, and also the news that he is betrothed to another. Later the marriage of the man takes place and, persuaded by a cast-off lover of the bride, the actress enters into a successful plot to steal the receipt which she gave for the return of the money. The former lover of the wife of the mayor being an editor of a newspaper circulates through the columns of his publication a scandalous report as to the methods resorted to by his rival in gaining his election.

The young wife of the mayor under a somewhat exaggerated sense of honor, steals off to the home of her former lover. After her entry to this house the question of just what did happen is left open to conjecture. There is the scene where she apparently yields to the persuasions of the man, and follows him into a room whose doors are closed to the spectator immediately; there is the scene where the woman staggers from the room alone with the black envelope and the receipt which it incloses. Following this she is seen to enter her own home and give the receipt to her husband, who demands an explanation, the answer to which is also clothed in mystery. When the husband enraged rushes to the house of the editor, and into the room which was formerly closed to us, the scene presents a dishevelled bed with the man lying dead at its side. And finally we discover through a note in the hand of the wife who lies dead in the home of the mayor on his return, that having saved the honor of her husband she has decided that it would be best to save her own.

The production has many points of beauty—the scenes in the garden of the mayor's home for instance. It has its weak points also, various technically incorrect jumps being made in the course of the production. Commercially speaking no fault can be found with it.

Lorle Palmer

THE photoplay world has claimed another actress from the legitimate. Miss Lorle Palmer, who during her theatrical career has played with some of the biggest stars this decade has known, and also appeared in some of the biggest successes of the past dozen years, has cast her lot with the motion pictures. Miss Palmer in the future will be seen in the photoplays which bear the trade mark of the Alhambra Brand.

Lorle Palmer.

This gives the Kriterion service another noted actress out of the legitimate theatrical field. Miss Palmer has appeared in both this country and across the Atlantic with such stars as Viola Allen. She played a leading part in the production of "When Knighthood Was in Flower." The Shubert stock at Salt Lake City for many years claimed her as leading woman.

This will be Miss Palmer's debut in motion pictures to a certain extent. While she has been called upon before to pose before the camera for a reel or so, her many other contracts never permitted her to give pictures the serious consideration that she wished. Her decision, however, has been made and in the future her entire time and talent will be employed to make permanent on celluloid some of the splendid big productions in which she was featured, and also many other interpretations which undoubtedly will bring her as much fame in the photoplay field as did her legitimate career in the theatrical world.

The Kriterion has gained a valuable acquisition in Miss Palmer. Her work in the productions which she has appeared in has marked her a lady whose possibilities are not gauged by the ordinary rules of measurement. In her past efforts she has displayed a talent that predicts a splendid future for her in the pantomime. Her type of beauty also is something that is not seen every day in the motion pictures. Her carriage and appearance make a striking appearance in photoplay.

KERRIGAN-VICTOR COMPANY LEAVING FOR MEXICO.

As soon as "Vengeance Is Mine," the story on which they are now working, is finished, the Kerrigan-Victor company, under the direction of Jacques Jaccard, will leave the Hollywood studios for the mountains in the northern part of Mexico, where they are to remain a fortnight in order to stage the exterior scenes in a film adaptation of William McLeod Raine's popular novel, "Bucky O'Connors."

Twenty extra people will be taken along in addition to the regular cast, and with them will go a carload of saddle and pack animals and another one of provisions calculated to last them for three weeks. The company will travel by train to San Juan Capistrano, where many of the beautiful scenes in "Smouldering Fires" were filmed. Then they will travel by horse to Tia Juana, Mexico, into the heart of the mountains south of the Jacumba district, the scene of several battles during the recent Mexican revolts.

MANGAN TRANSFERRED TO CRESCENT THEATER.

Francis A. Mangan, who was directing the destinies of the Cumberland theater, Greene avenue and Cumberland street, Brooklyn, since that structure was opened a year and a half ago, has been transferred by the Photoplays Theater Company, owners of the Cumberland, to the Crescent theater at 168th street and Boston Road, Bronx, New York City, another of the company's houses. The seating capacity of the Crescent is 1,800, three times that of the Cumberland. Mr. Mangan's conception of a diversified and entertaining program together with his pleasing personality will undoubtedly place him in the good graces of the patrons of the Crescent.

"The Incomparable Mistress Bellairs"

A High Class Feature of Genuine Merit Released by the Cosmofotofilm Company.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

THIS is a refined comedy of the best type. There are few pictures which show greater attention to detail and greater care in the matter of correctness in dress, furniture, etc., of the period in which they are laid than "The Incomparable Mistress Bellairs," released by the Cosmofotofilm Company.

This story deals with the matrimonial adventures of two sweet young English maidens. It takes us back to the days of George III. An English lord named Mandeville, tired of the gayeties of life, is attracted by a demure little Quakeress, whom circumstances has driven to seek a livelihood on the stage. The Lord is being urged into matrimony by his sister and Mistress Bellairs is proposed as the bride. Now Mistress Scene from "The Incomparable Mistress Bellairs" (Cosmofotofilm).

Bellairs is a willful though lovable young creature. She is surrounded by admirers of whom the son of an impoverished Irish Earl, Daniel O'Hara, is the most persistent and the most submissive. He gets very little encouragement. Woman-like, the "incomparable Mistress Bellairs" treats her most abject suitor with unbending hauteur. She is flattered by the attentions of Lord Mandeville only to become furious when she finds that the Lord is rather perfunctory in his gallantry. The Lord indeed makes no secret of his love for the Quaker girl and at a masked ball his devotion to the little modest beauty is in quite a sensational manner made known to everybody. Some very interesting developments follow. The incomparable Mistress Bellairs is confronted by a remarkable situation; an accident has made her the guest of Lord Mandeville. The latter in his cups offers an affront to Rachel Page, his Quaker idol, whereupon Mistress Bellairs most generously takes her rival's part and makes the Lord feel ashamed of himself. The Lord then marries Rachel, while Mistress Bellairs at last unlocks her heart to the incessant pleadings of Daniel O'Hara. It all ends very prettily and very happily.

The acting throughout the play is good and in some instances excellent. This is particularly true of Lord Mandeville, whose portrayal of the English nobleman of the time of George III was a most artistic and creditable performance. The part of Mistress Bellairs was taken by Edna Flugrath and was on the whole rendered quite capably. As to the photography of this film, it stands far above the average. I have never seen costumes photographed with such fine detail, and as the costumes of the Georgian period were both rich and elegant, the effect on the screen was most delightful. For houses who seek to entertain their patrons with a high class feature "The Incomparable Mistress Bellairs" is an ideal attraction.

DUBOSCH GOES TO COAST.

Charles M. Dubosch, general manager of Hugo Reisinger, left New York Saturday, February 13, for a five weeks' tour of the Pacific Coast territory in the interest of "Electra" pink label carbons, of which Hugo Reisinger, 11 Broadway, New York, is sole importer. Mr. Dubosch is a very pleasant gentleman and well informed on the subject of carbons. He should receive a warm reception on the coast.

Gilday Meets Up With Screeners

Manager of Kansas City's Superb Willis Wood Theater Is Greeted by Many Well-Known Players.

JOSEPH H. GILDAY, manager of the splendid Willis Wood theater, of Kansas City, a detailed description of which was printed in the Moving Picture World last December 5, has returned home from a short business trip to New York. Mr. Gilday looked over the film field and attended a number of local theaters along the Great White Way.

Joseph Gilday.

Besides the Willis Wood he is interested also in the Tenth Street, the Twelfth Street and the Powers, all down-town houses, and the Alamo, situated in the suburbs of Kansas City. The Willis Wood was converted from the leading legitimate theater to pictures at an expense of $50,000, of which $20,000 was represented by the installation of an organ.

Passenger elevators were constructed so that patrons might be conveyed to the upper gallery, the 550 seats of which are sold for 10 cents each. Admission to the balcony is 20 cents and to the orchestra 25 cents. There is an orchestra of sixteen pieces. Six shows are given daily, at 11, 1, 3, 5, 7 and 9 o'clock. The program, consisting of about seven reels, is for a minimum of one week's run. If the production featured consists of five reels Mr. Gilday uses a weekly and a comedy. Sometimes there is a song by a well-known singer. The manager is a firm believer in advertising, the Willis Wood expending on an average of $400 weekly in the local press.

Mr. Gilday says there has been an era of over-construction in picture theaters in Kansas City; he adds that in his opinion Kansas City now contains more photoplay houses than does any other town of its size in the country. Mr. Gilday started in the exhibition business about eight years ago, and has been very successful. When asked to what particular factor he ascribed his progress he remarked that it was his belief that personal acquaintance with his patrons had much to do with it. He thinks there are many things an exhibitor should do besides putting on a show. Mr. Gilday says that every Friday night preceding the initial showing of a new feature the musicians of the Willis Wood rehearse the music for the subject. By Sunday the leader has ready his orchestration. No paper is used in the lobby of the Willis Wood. Instead elaborate photographs are prepared by a skillful local artist.

Mr. Gilday made a pleasant call at the office of the Moving Picture World. Later he was escorted across the park and introduced to the famous Fireman's Shirt; he made an especial request to be enrolled among the ardent admirers of this concoction. A visit and a luncheon at the Screen Club followed. Here the Kansas City man, during his stay on Friday and his return on Saturday afternoon, met many of the players who for years have been appearing on the screens of his houses. He knew them all, and by name He found a great many who had played in the Willis Wood before it was converted to pictures. Among the men with whom he chatted were Dan Mason, William H. Tooker, Thurlow Bergen, "Doc" Willat, William Welsh, King Baggot, William Wadsworth, Bigelow Cooper, William Mandeville, Bud Ross, Ben Wilson, Walter Mcnamara, "Arty" Housman, Matt Moore, Dave Wall, Howard Crampton, James Gordon, William Russell, and there were a host of others. Mr. Gilday admitted that while he was born and raised in Kansas City, New York, and especially the Screen Club, surely looked good to him. A message received from him since his return home mentions his pleasurable visits to the screen players' home.

World Film Anniversary

Brief Resume of the Feature Marketing Idea as Developed by Lewis J. Selznick.

ON February 16, 1915, the World Film Corporation celebrates its first anniversary. In the brief period of twelve months, it has done enough to make it the best known of the major feature films producing and distributing organizations. On February 14, 1914, the World Special Films Company, releasing two feature films a month, went out of business, and the World Film Corporation was formed to manufacture and distribute features every week.

At that period, conditions in some departments of this business were not satisfactory; the method of marketing films on the state right plan had proven unworkable, and at the same time, feature films themselves were, it was said, losing favor with exhibitors and the public. Lewis J. Selznick, vice-president and general manager, met these conditions by organizing the World Film Corporation along lines which admitted of the distribution of films by the best commercial methods. In the early months of the Corporation's existence, he showed that good feature films were in great demand among exhibitors and the public, by releasing weekly, among other features, the following: "Sapho," "Protea," "Joan of Arc," "Master Criminal," "Brass Bottle," "Last Days of Pompeii," "Germania," "The Lights o' London," "Uncle Tom's Cabin," "The Lure."

Mr. Selznick by his experience confirmed his original idea that exhibitors wanted "productions," big pictures, with the backing of prominent names. The instantaneous success of this idea induced him to secure for the World Film Corporation the film productions and rights to all the Shubert offerings. Through that arrangement he opened the way to filming many of the biggest Broadway successes that have appeared under the direction of those famous managers. Soon after Mr. Selznick secured the productions of the William A. Brady Photoplays, Inc., and this made possible such successes as Robert Warwick in "The Dollar Mark" and "The Man of the Hour," Emma Dunn in "Mother," Wilton Lackaye in "The Pit," Alice Brady in "As Ye Sow," and others too numerous to mention. The next arrangements that Mr. Selznick concluded brought into the World Film fold the entire output of the Charles E. Blaney photoplays.

The Colonial Motion Picture Corporation had spent a fortune to make "The Seats of the Mighty," and when Mr. Selznick proposed that their production should be released through the World Film Corporation, they readily saw the advantage of placing this feature in his hands. The Dyreda Art Film Corporation was the next unit brought into the World Film Corporation. This insured all of the artistic productions of J. Searle Dawley to World Film exhibitors.

Soon after it became evident that the California Motion Picture Corporations' features were of the standard that the World Film Corporation had established and Mr. Selznick arranged to have their films released through the World Film Corporation. It was due to Mr. Selznick's personal efforts that Lillian Russell was prevailed upon to make her greatest success, "Wildfire," and the same is true with the noted comedian, Lew Fields' work before the camera. The Paul Armstrong masterpieces, "The Deep Purple" and "Alias Jimmy Valentine," were on the market for motion picture productions, and Mr. Selznick lost no time in securing them for his schedule. And so it has been his idea to secure for his clients the best known the market affords. A recent acquisition is "Money," made by the Keanograph Company, Fairfax, California. That assured them the "Bertlevyettes," those unique offerings of the master artist Bert Levy. The World Film is placing the suffrage photoplay, "Your Girl and Mine," which is the realization of an idea that Mrs. Medill McCormick had to bring the suffrage cause before thousands who heretofore have known it only as propaganda. "The Adventures of a Boy Scout" is also being handled through the World Film Corporation because of its unique interest to thousands of boys throughout the country.

To insure that these unique offerings are given the publicity that they deserve, Mr. Selznick created a special attractions department under the guidance of Al Lichtman. Through this department one of the greatest foreign masterpieces ever imported in this country, "Salambo," will be released to the public.

In the World Film directorate there are as follows: Van Horn Ely, 15 Wall street; Lewis J. Selznick, 130 West 46th street; Briton N. Busch, 130 West 46th street; Herbert H. Dean, 27 Pine street; W. Alden Pratt, 27 Pine street; Frederick Edey, 111 Broadway; Geoffrey Konta, 62 Cedar street; Theodore F. Reynolds, Mills Building; Jules E. Brulatour, 130 West 46th street; Chas. Jackson, 19 Congress street; Amory G. Hodges, 14 Wall street; Lee Shubert, Shubert Theater Building; J. J. Shubert, Shubert Theater Building; Joseph L. Rhinock, Shubert Theater Building; William Klein, 346 Broadway; Frank B. Ball, 30 Church street.

The company owns, operates and controls its own exchanges in New York, Philadelphia, Cleveland, Detroit, Minneapolis, Boston, Indianapolis, Chicago, Kansas City, Cincinnati, Pittsburgh, Atlanta, Buffalo, St. Louis, Dallas, New Orleans, Washington, Denver, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Seattle, Omaha, Salt Lake City.

In November, 1914, Mr. Selznick outlined and placed in operation a profit sharing scheme by which every employee of the World Film Corporation is permitted to participate in the profits of the company. This is the first time in the history of amusement enterprises that such a step has been taken.

Within sixty days of the institution of this plan prizes have been distributed among successful salesmen.

George Zorn in New York

Old-Time Philadelphia Exhibitor, with Mrs. Zorn, on Business and Pleasure Trip to the Metropolis.

GEORGE ZORN, proprietor of the New Broadway theater, in the Kensington district of Philadelphia, was a visitor in New York City last week. He was accompanied by Mrs. Zorn. Mr. Zorn has been in the picture theater business for over half a dozen years. His first house was one of the store variety, which when he secured possession of it he believed would seat somewhere about 400, but shortly discovered would accommodate but 125. Mr. Zorn recalled that one of his exhibitor associates in the early days was Mark Dintenfass.

The New Broadway has a seating capacity of 1,200. Mr. Zorn has made a feature of ventilation. There are four big exhaust fans and four ventilators as well as twenty-eight windows. The exits number twenty-two. These factors make for comfort in warm weather. In spite of the fact that he has lively competition Mr. Zorn says that he could fill many more seats than there now are in his house. He gives one show in the afternoon and two in the evening, with orchestral music.

Mr. Zorn uses a feature service, filling in with Mutual. His neighborhood is a manufacturing one. The patrons of the New Broadway show preference for dramatic subjects of action, and it is this class of pictures that Mr. Zorn tries hard to obtain. He makes it a point whenever possible to see his subjects before booking them. Judging from Mr. Zorn's conversation during a most pleasant visit he and Mrs. Zorn made at the office of the Moving Picture World he is an exhibitor who keeps sharp watch of the film market.

"Runaway June" Goes to Bermuda

Entire Company Sailed for West Indies Wednesday on the Bermudian—Will Produce Several Episodes.

"RUNAWAY JUNE" has found a new place to run away to. She is running away from chilling blasts and snow and sleet and slush, from darkling skies and bleak midwinter scenes, to balmy Bermuda, where the weather is fair and the birds are in the trees. She has packed her thirty-seven trunks and fifty-one hat boxes and accompanied by her faithful collie, "Bouncer," and her entire company of fifty, will embark on the steamer Bermudian, chartered by Reliance for the purpose, on Wednesday, February 10, and remain in the tropics till spring smiles once more on suffering New York.

In the little party are Norma Phillips, Marguerite Loveridge, Evelyn Dumo, the Misses Drew, James and Adey, J. W. Johnston, Arthur Donaldson, Charles Mason, Ezra Walck, George Day, Arthur Forbes, Frank Holland, Edward Fay, James Barnes, Alfred Fischer and many minor characters. Chief Director Oscar Engle, Assistant Director Harry Weir, Marc Edmund Jones, who writes the scenarios from the George Randolph Chester story, three camera men, two wardrobe women and several stage carpenters, electricians and property men will also be on the ship.

Episode Ten will be done on the steamer and Episode Eleven will be a pirate story and will be taken in Bermuda, as will Episode Twelve, which will be "The Spirit of the Marsh," centering around a romantic young artist. Marc Edmund Jones will work into his scenarios every interesting feature of the Island and there will be diving, and submarine scenes such as has never been done will also be completed before the Runaways run back to New York.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

"THE RED BLOOD OF COURAGE" (Selig).

"The Red Blood of Courage," a Selig drama of Hindustan, produced by Thomas Santschi, from James Oliver Curwood's two-part story, will be released on Monday, February 22. This is a realistic and gripping pictureplay drama of India, containing beautiful backgrounds, convincing action, and a succession of spectacular surprises. Thomas Santschi takes the part of Roscoe Harding and Miss Bessie Eyton makes a beautiful and sincere Lydia. They are supported by a strong cast.

This is an extraordinary release in every way and one well worthy of prominence on any motion picture program.

LEWIS STAGING "THE NEW GOVERNOR" AT AUGUSTA.

Edgar Lewis, who has gone down to Augusta, Ga., for the purpose of staging "The New Governor" for the Box Office Attractions Co., writes back a letter to New York in which he waxes eloquent over Augusta as a choice locality in which to make moving pictures. "All properties and scenery necessary in the production of a film are at hand in Augusta," says Mr. Lewis; "if we need a mountain range it is only a few miles west of us; if we desire an ocean liner it is a short distance by rail, and what is more to the point, if we are staging a production which requires scenes from regions of two different climates, we do not have to leave the environs of Augusta, as the magnolia and palm grow within easy working distance of the pine. It is rumored that Mr. Fox contemplates the construction of a large producing plant down here because of the many natural advantages of the section. I wish to add as an after thought that this region in the way of bodily comfort is an improvement on Jersey Heights in January."

NEW GREAT NORTHERN FEATURE.

About March 1 the Great Northern Film Company will release another big production in four parts, entitled "Through the Enemy's Lines." This is a most realistic and impressive war picture, within the boundary of perfect neutrality, and interwoven with a pathetic and stirring incident of a great conflict. It is needless to dwell upon the photography, scenery, settings, etc., because "Great Northern" quality prevails throughout.

Miss Ebba Thomsen, who plays the part of the heroine, is a member of the Royal Theater, in Copenhagen, and a favorite with photoplay fans all over the world. Her interpretation is both convincing and appealing.

It is anticipated that "Through the Enemy's Lines" will enjoy, at least, the enthusiastic reception which was accorded "Lay Down Your Arms" of recent fame.

A CORRECTION.

In the last week's issue of this paper it was erroneously stated that the Liberty Film Renting Company of Pittsburgh, Pa., purchased the rights to "The Avalanche," "A Modern Magdalen" and future productions of the Life Photo Film Corporation for one year, for the territory of West Virginia, Western Pennsylvania, whereas they purchased "The Ordeal" only for that territory. The same applies to the Famous Stars Film Alliance of Cleveland, who bought "The Ordeal" only for Ohio and Kentucky. "The Avalanche," "A Modern Magdalen" and all future productions of the Life Photo for the coming year, for the territory of Western Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Ohio and Kentucky, were purchased by the Northern Film Company of Pittsburgh, Pa.

A PLAY-MAKING RECORD.

"In His Father's Footsteps," the Edison drama, is making a record for itself. Starting out as an educational film, it worked up to such a climax that it was placed in the regular drama list, while the acting in it placed two actors on the stellar role of the Edison stock company, although the two, Marie Le Manna and Patrick O'Malley were newcomers. The play also won the Edison prize for the photography in it. The play's great scene is a sensational bareback, fence-leaping ride.

"PATSY AT THE SEASHORE" (Lubin).

The eighth number of this very entertaining series is replete with good luck and bad luck, one on top of the other, until you will laugh your heads off. Patsy gets a well-paying job with a company of fishermen and proves such a failure that he is thrown in a boat load of live fish, nearly smothered and promptly fired. Much disheartened he wanders forth and by good fortune finds a little bag of medals with which he decorates himself and with a letter from Mrs. Squills obtains an appointment as instructor at the bathing pavilion. Mr. and Mrs. Bolivar with the Sykes family and the Graces arrive, the meeting is touching and all are happy that Patsy has secured such an important job. On the first day Sykesy and Tilly Grace are caught in the undertow. Patsy saves the maid is made a hero. He gets a Carnegie medal and one thousand dollars. A ball is given at the hotel in his honor. Of course, Tilly makes a big fuss of him and seated in a remote corner of the hotel balcony become spoony and Patsy proposes. Sykesy comes upon the scene and the usual fight occurs. Patsy throws his enemy over the balcony rail to the pavement, badly injuring him. To escape arrest he has to run but gets stuck in a swamp and is captured. Once more he is in bad luck and sent to jail.

"HER MARTYRDOM" (Lubin).

This is a very intense story full of touching situations and heart throbs. A sweet girl, to obtain money to send her sweetheart to a dry climate and save his life, he being afflicted with tuberculosis, accepts the advances of her employer and finally marries him. The husband's love soon induces her to respond and they are very happy. The sweetheart returns and being told of the situation demands blackmail for the return of her letters. The amount being $25,000 is too much for her to pay and the lover forces her to assist him in robbing the safe of her jewels. The thief is discovered and meets his death at the hands of the worthy husband, who never knowing the true story tells his wife that it was only "A thief in the night." Arthur Johnson and Lottie Briscoe sustain the leading roles, which are played with the usual force of these excellent players.

NEW YORK MOTION SIGNS COMEDY PLAYERS.

The year 1915 will be without a doubt the Keystone Film Company's greatest year, as Messrs. Kessel & Baumann, of the New York Motion Picture Corporation, while out at the studios at Los Angeles, Cal., signed up five big leads, to be starred in Keystone one and two-reel comedies. They are: Ford Sterling, who, for a brief space of time, was associated with another company; Harry P. Gribbon, who was famous throughout the northwest in musical comedies; Billie Walsh, famous on Broadway as a cabaret comedian and entertainer; Harry "Dutch" Ward, of burlesque fame, and Polly Moran, who has been very successful in vaudeville for the last ten years.

This makes twelve high priced leads now working in Keystone comedies. The other ones are: Mabel Normand, Roscoe Arbuckle, Charles Murray, Sidney Chaplin, Chester Conklin, Mack Swain, Minta Durfee, Ed Kennedy and Harry McCoy.

KRITERION KOMIC KARTOON.

Harry Palmer, the international cartoonist, who is responsible for the "Babbling Bess" and other cartoon series, which have been exploited for many years in over one hundred and twenty newspapers throughout the United States and Canada, is now associated with the Pyramid Film Co., which releases through the "Kriterion Program." Mr. Palmer will draw animated cartoons which will be released under the title of "Kriterion Komic Kartoon." These animated cartoons will not only depict comical stories, but will show up-to-the-minute topical events such as "Bryan's Recent Rabbit Hunt in Virginia," "Taft Playing Golf Without the Use of Profanity," "Knitting Socks for the Soldiers to the Detriment of Hubby's Feet," etc., etc. First release Feb. 12th. Watch for it!

A CORRECTION.

In the full-page advertisement of the Central Film Co. in our issue of Feb. 13 by an error it was stated that this concern owns the Illinois state rights for the 6-reel production, "The Avenging Conscience." The rights for this subject for Illinois are owned by the E. L. K. Film Co. of Chicago. The rights to Iowa, Wisconsin, Indiana and Michigan are owned by the Central Film Co.

KLEINE OFFERS WELL ROUNDED CAST IN "STOP THIEF."

With his characteristic genius for doing things thoroughly, George Kleine presents a cast in "Stop Thief" that is unique in more than one way. Aside from the fact that practically the entire original cast was used, there are no cheap "extras" to mar the work of the stars with amateurish acting. Even the "bit" parts are handled by well known Broadway artists as for example: the "boob detective" role in "Stop Thief" which is in the capable hands of Dan Moyles, who made the character of "Officer 666" famous during the sensational run of that comedy.

Instead of one, "Stop Thief" features two expensive stars in the persons of Mary Ryan and Harry Mestayer. They are supported by such capable and experienced players as Albert Tavernier, Marguerite Boyd, August Burmester, Della Connor, Harold Howard and William Boyd.

WALLACE EDDINGER IN "A GENTLEMAN OF LEISURE."

The Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Co. announces that the picturization of Wallace Eddinger in "A Gentleman of Leisure"—the farce-comedy by John Stapleton and P. G. Woodhouse which created such a laughing sensation on Broadway a couple of seasons back—will positively be released on Monday, March 1. This naturally means that the first showing in New York will be the engagement at the Strand Theater, beginning on Sunday, Feb. 28.

"A Gentleman of Leisure" is a comedy which falls into a different class from any of the lighter productions yet released by the Lasky organization. "Young Romance" fell into the catagory of human nature satire, with two department store clerks as the chief characters. "After Five" came more in the class of straight farce, founded on an improbability but worked out consistently. "A Gentleman of Leisure" contains nothing that might not absolutely happen—and it also contains an element of more serious romantic drama—with the main characters chosen from people of wealth and social position.

The title character, played by Mr. Eddinger, who brings to it the charm of genuine comedy spirit with rare refinement, is that of a young society "blood" who, in an unguarded moment, makes a rash wager that he can himself commit a burglary without being caught. That very night he goes home, finds a burglar on his own premises and overpowers him; then takes the fellow into partnership in attempting to work out his enterprise! It unfortunately happens that a former associate, no longer friendly to the real burglar, has tipped him off to a good thing; and the good thing turns out to be the home of the Police Commissioner! To complicate matters still further, the "Gentleman of Leisure" is in love with the daughter of this police official, and, though he can "square" the father with a bribe he cannot bring the old man to regard him in the light of a possible son-in-law!

The mere outlines of this story are sufficient to indicate the truly extraordinary opportunities for bewilderment and confusion, which are the characteristics of the farce. In the end, however, the enterprising society man contrives to extricate himself from all his difficulties, to win the hand of the girl he loves, and to exact from the father a promise not to take bribes in the future.

"STARS THEIR COURSES CHANGE" (Essanay).

A searching psychological analysis of the fundamental laws that govern the impulses of love is made in the Essanay three-reel photodrama, "Stars Their Courses Change," released February 26. Francis X. Bushman, who plays the leading part, shows a thorough comprehension of the workings of the mind by bringing out the subtle principles underlying this emotion with unusual vividness. The play deals with a young author who is skeptical in his attitude toward women and real love. A beautiful woung woman, displeased with his attitude, resolves to bring him to her feet to teach him a lesson. She succeeds and then tells him why she had led him on. The young author, though madly in love, then pretends to be indifferent, which in turn makes the beautiful enchantress fall in love with him. He carries his plan of indifference too far. In pique she pledges her troth to another. The author sees his mistake and hies to the woods to forget, leaving a note, however, saying he is madly infatuated with the girl. She immediately pursues and finally, after many adventures, the two are united.

WIDE INTEREST IN "HYPOCRITES."

Seldom, if ever, has the demand for a picture production been so great as has that which "Hypocrites" created in the short time it has been exploited. From almost every point in America and Europe have come inquiries concerning the possibility of securing the picture, and from Dusseldorf, Germany, a cablegram, routed via Rotterdam, London and New York, arrived at the Bosworth office asking that the terms for "Hypocrites" following the present conditions, be cabled at once..

During the past week at the Longacre theater the receipts exceeded $5,000, and when previous contracts compelled the removal of the show from that house to Comstock & Gest's Princess the business increased, if anything.

That "Hypocrites" will prove one of the biggest drawing cards in filmdom is a foregone conclusion. Definite announcements are promised for early next week, as to the method of releasing the picture by Bosworth.

"ON THE HIGH SEAS," A MELODRAMA.

What is expected to prove one of the most popular melodramas that has yet been made at the Inceville studios of the New York Motion Picture Corporation will be released March 5 by the Kay Bee under the title of "On the High Seas." The story, which is a two-reeler, has just been completed. It will serve to offer Richard Stanton, Inceville's actor-director, and Leona Hutton, the gifted leading woman of the Ince companies, in the principal roles.

SELIG MARCH RELEASES.

The March program of Motion Pictureplays to be released by the Selig Polyscope Company, is one of unusual excellence. On every Monday there will be released a Selig Diamond Special of particular appeal. The titles are: "A Child of the Prairie," "The Lady of the Cyclamen," "The Fork in the Road," "Retribution," and "Ma's Girls." These Pictureplays are of an unusually high standard of excellence.

"THE LOVE ROUTE," NEXT FAMOUS PLAYERS RELEASE.

The famous romance of the ranch and the railroad, "The Love Route," by Edward Peple (author of the current comedy triumph, "A Pair of Sixes"), an elaborate film version of which has just been produced by the Famous Players Film Co., at Los Angeles, will be released on the Paramount program February 25. Among the many striking effects introduced in this subject, is the actual construction of a railroad, from the first spade dug in the ground, to the laying of the last tie and the final running of the mammoth engine over the newly-laid line, a distinct novelty in motion pictures. The main characters of the play are a railroad civil engineer and a young woman, the owner of the ranch through which the new railroad is to pass, which she tries to prevent even at the points of the revolvers of her cowboys. These two characters, when they meet, bring forth a clash of will, under circumstances rarely seen on the screen. The fact that they had previously loved each other dearly, adds to the interest of the plot. To the very end she fights, and ultimately wins, but she eventually awakens to the greatness of her love for the engineer after he is shot by one of her men, and is herself responsible for the completion of the line within the required time limit granted the railroad company.

Produced in California, the camera has clearly defined the beauty of that wonderland. The situations calling for the united action of the cowboys and the railroad workmen, and the scenes in which these two elements meet in battle, display to the utmost the craft of the screen director. The cast includes Harold Lockwood, Winifred Kingston and Donald Crisp.

SOME LUBIN WESTERN PLANS.

The Lubin Western Company, under the direction of Captain Wilbert Melville, at Los Angeles, Cal., has many big things planned ahead. Captain Melville, ever watchful of public demand, and with studied foresight of the trend in the picture industry, has already put into operation a plan for greatly improving the character of the product of his studio. In order to do this, larger and more modern dressing rooms have been completed to accommodate the additional number of artists who are to carry the heavier casts in the productions. It was also necessary to purchase several thousand dollars worth of new furniture, furnishings, and an additional scenic artist has been employed to turn out the new sets. The public has learned to expect much from the Lubin Western Company, and Captain Melville is more than ever determined that it shall not be disappointed.

"SHORTY'S SECRET," A REALISTIC BRONCHO.

If anyone disputes the statement that Producer Thomas H. Ince spares no pains to inject absolute realism into his stories, he has only to see "Shorty's Secret," a forthcoming comedy of the New York Motion Picture Corporation featuring Shorty Hamilton, the inimitable cowboy comedian of the Broncho forces.

In this story, "Shorty" becomes embroiled in a fight with the sheriff's brother. The latter squeals on him and the astute official of the village, followed by a band of citizens, goes to arrest Shorty. Shorty, however, has been placed by his friends in a wagon containing a shipment of eggs and awakens to find that he is about to be placed in custody. So he uses the egg wagon as his fortification and pelts his attackers with the proteid ovals.

"THE FIGHT FOR FORTUNE" (Great Northern).

This is an unusually powerful and effective photodrama with a most impressive moral. The spectator is carried from the primitive wilds of Australia to the modern metropolis, the interest being held throughout the entire exhibition. The leading role is remarkably acted by Olaf Fonss, one of the famous Great Northern stars.

ROSENGARTEN OUT OF COSMOS.

At a recent meeting of the board of directors of the Cosmos Feature Film Corporation Leo Rosengarten tendered his resignation as president and sold his entire holdings in the company to Arthur H. Jacobs, who was elected president in his stead.

GEIGER WITH WORLD FILM.

Manager Geiger, who has been associated with the Pathe Exchange in Michigan, is now a member of the traveling forces of the Detroit branch of the World Film Corporation.

"WHO'S WHO IN SOCIETY" IS CLEVER CROOK STORY.

George Kleine's latest multiple, "Who's Who in Society," is a clever crook story featuring several well-known Broadway players, including Kate Sargeant, William H. Power, Dan Moyles and Della Connor.

Mrs. O'Brien, a newly rich and very anxious to break into society, sends out invitations for a social function at her new home, much to the dismay of her good-natured but unpolished Celtic husband. He, however, invites his own friends who arrive in a body and enjoy a merry evening. It chances that O'Brien meets a strange young man at his club and invites him to the party also. This young gentleman falls quickly in love with O'Brien's pretty daughter.

About this time a wrecked motor car attracts the family attention, and a man who calls himself Lord St. Clair is brought into the house slightly injured. Mrs. O'Brien promptly scents a noble match and encourages the Lord in his fancy of her daughter. It develops, however, that sundry articles of value disappear on the night of the ball and O'Brien's young friend is accused.

What follows adds a touch of drama to the comedy. The strange young man proved a secret service sleuth, who has been long on the trail of Lord St. Clair, a notorious crook.

The story is charged with action and is typical of the modern tendency toward stories which are full of snappy, dramatic situations and yet not devoid of hearty laughs.

KRITERION INVADES MINNEAPOLIS.

The Kriterion service, which will be issued out of Minneapolis comencing with Feb. 15, will be handled by an exchange managed by Harry Rowe, formerly owner of the Rowe Feature Film Company.

The exchange is backed by a coterie of motion picture people of that territory, including amongst them not a few exhibitors of that section.

The Kriterion Service Company, as it has been named, will be located at 105 Temple Court Bldg., and will serve all of Minnesota, North and South Dakota, part of Iowa, Northern Wisconsin and the upper Peninsula of Michigan.

This new exchange will not only purchase those pictures which are now being released, but will also have in stock all the pictures which have been made since the inception of the Kriterion Service. This is done in a measure to take more adequate care of all those who will use the Kriterion pictures, and also because amongst those earlier pictures it is felt that subjects are included that will materially help to lend convincing proof of the quality of the Kriterion brands.

AN ATTRACTIVE HOUSE ORGAN.

Under the title "California Motion Picture Review" the California Motion Picture Corporation issues a very interesting and well printed eight-page house organ. Stuart G. Masters is the editor and the matter he has included in the eight pages is quite informing and interesting.

MINNEAPOLIS EXCHANGE MOVES.

Notice is given that the offices of the Famous Players Star Feature Film Service have been moved to the Produce Exchange building, 608 First avenue, North, Minneapolis, where more spacious quarters were obtained. Growth of the business of this exchange is the reason for the change.

Notes of the Trade

MISS HELEN DUNBAR, talented Essanay actress, plays all sorts of roles with equal ability. In the photodrama, "The Accounting," she takes the part of a peasant woman with skill and realism. She had no more than finished this play, when she was called upon to take the part of the Countess Yvonne in George Barr McCutcheon's "Graustark."

Bruce Mitchell, director of Thistle comedies for the Crown City Film Manufacturing Company, has produced a powerful two-reel drama entitled "The Heart of a Vagabond." This, together with the comedies, "Taming Father, "The Frame Up," "Dirty Dan's Demise" and "Stalwart Steve's Steadfast Steed," will be released by the Kriterion Service.

Bert E. Siebel, formerly with the Willet Studios and Laboratories, is now associated with Kriterion Service in the capacity of assistant editor in the Technical Department.

Mack Manes, of the Lyric theater, Greensburg, Pa., found it necessary for him to run the California Motion Picture Corporation-World Film picture "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch" at top speed, turning his house every forty-two minutes on Monday last, as he was unable to accommodate more than half of those attempting admission to his theater. Mr. Manes has the reputation of giving to the people of Greensburg the very best productions that money can buy, and, while his house is of very limited capacity, he has one of the most expensive programs shown in any picture theater in the United States.

The Hybar Film Corporation of Atlanta, Georgia, are opening a branch office in New Orleans. They are handling a large number of film brand in the Southern States.

Richard C. Travers, Essanay actor, has made up a Hockey team of Essanay players. He has been training them in the sport all winter on the Hockey rink he made on the Essanay grounds. He claims he has a team that can beat any in Chicago. He has issued a challenge to all teams to meet the Essanay at any hockey rink.

Director "Bob" Daly, of the Santa Barbara Motion Picture Company, of Santa Barbara, California, has just completed his production, "The Keeper of the Flock," featuring Fritzi Brunette and Edward Alexander. The production promises to be one of the best released on the Kriterion Program.

"An Example" is the title of a new Big U drama featuring Murdock MacQuarrie. In this photoplay this actor makes an imposing figure as the sheriff in his riding costume. He does some fine riding in the desert race scene.

There is a real thrill in "The Treason of Anatole," an Imp picture, when Jean Giradot, who is sentenced to be shot as a spy, is shown in an enlargement tied to a tree bravely waiting for the gunners to fire away

Tyrone Power, the famous actor, who is soon to appear in Selig spectacular specials, says that the motion picture screen will be an essential adjunct to every church in America. He says it will not be many years before clergymen will illustrate nearly all of their discourses with motion pictures.

Manager Levison, of the Pittsburgh branch of the World Film Corporation, has appointed Joel A. Levy, one of his road men, manager of the special feature department. He will handle "Your Girl and Mine," the co-operative suffragette pictures; the special release for the Boy Scout production to be worked in conjunction with the popular movement, "The Land of the Head Hunters," a notable exposition of the secret religious ceremonies of the Kwatiutl Indians, and the other special releases to emanate from the World Film Corporation.

Hundreds who have seen Beatriz Michelena in the screen-drama, "Mignon," have questioned whether or not she wore a wig. They admired her long curls, but doubted their genuineness. As a matter of fact, Miss Michelena does not have to wear a wig. She is the possessor of a beautiful head of hair, and, unless the exigencies of some part absolutely demand the use of wig, she prefers to be seen in her natural charms.

From the initial run of "The High Hand," the next Favorite Players' release, it would appear that they have done better than with "The Last Chapter," which earned such eulogistic notice in the trade press. It is safe to say that better interiors have never been portrayed in a photoplay with artificial light in actual rooms and halls. The story is one of tense interest, in which Carlyle Blackwell has surpassed himself in dramatic ability. William D. Taylor, director, has again asserted his ability as a producer. Neva Gerber, William Brunton, John Sheehan, Douglas Gerrard, Harry Kernan and the rest of the cast have enacted their parts splendidly and the result is truly a gripping photoplay.

J. Barney Sherry can play any part in motion pictures from a handsome leading man to a grizzled old fellow of the the mountains, his friends say, but there is one that fits him especially well and that is the part of a western gambler. He demonstrates this in "Mr. Silent Haskins," in a release of the Kay Bee companies, February 19, featuring William S. Hart.

Harry Myers, the genial Victor-Universal director, while rehearsing a scene in "Saved by a Dream," leaned against the door of a wooden safe, slightly ajar, and as he walked away he felt a weight on his coat-tail. Said weight was none other than "the safe" locked tightly and not a soul in the studio knew the combination. Poor Harry struggled for two hours and then someone suggested that he take his coat off!

Cora Williams, the comedienne with the alluring dimples, famous as "The Edison Widow," and known fer her wide experience in characters and distinction in personal charm, severs her connection with the Edison Co. after an engagement of 26 months.

In the role of Priscilla Miller, a prim, temperance worker of a staid old New England town, Miss Rhea Mitchell, the beautiful leading woman of the Kay Bee companies has given the motion picture world a character study not commonly seen on the screen. Miss Mitchell, who has confined her work in the past for the most part to interpretations of society buds and western heroines, found herself cast for the part of the Yankee maid in "Mr. Silent Haskins," a release of the Kay Bee companies, February 19, starring William S. Hart. But she handled it so skillfully that Producer Ince is contemplating writing more scripts of the same nature for her.

Mr. Francis X. Bushman startled one down-and-outer in a loop bread line (Chicago), when he thrust a crisp bill into his hand for his place as thirteenth man in the bread line to take a scene in Essanay's photoplay "Thirteen Down."

"Say Bo," said the astonished man, "you kin buy twenty loaves of bread for that."

Mr. Bushman was dressed so naturally for his part as a tramp that not one of the others in the line suspected who he was until the camera began to work.

The Crown City Film Manufacturing Company, of Pasadena, California, have completed three beautiful dramas, viz.: "The Skein of Life," "A Tale of the Hills" and "The Secret Formula." These productions were directed by Donald MacDonald. Miss Dorothy Davenport, Lee Hill and Rupert Julian are featured. They will be released on the Kriterion Program in the near future.

Beatriz Michelena, the beautiful star of the California Motion Picture Corporation, recently, in a "dare," performed the feat of swimming the Russian River in Sonoma County at a time when the stream was flooded with a torrential winter rain.

King Baggot and Frank Smith play the parts of Chinamen in "An Oriental Romance," an Imp drama in two reels. Mr. Baggot is the young son of a wealthy Chinaman in America, and attends college. He makes a striking picture in his civilian's clothes with his close-cropped black hair and cue. The young and handsome Chinese fellow falls in love with his college chum's pretty American sister. The climax and ending are very beautiful, though touching.

Bryant Washburn has taken the part of Villain in Essanay photodramas so often that he awoke one night to find himself playing the part. He got out of bed, found a big sack and proceeded to loot his own silver chest. He was stealthily stealing out of his own flat with his own silverware, dressed in a robe de nuit, when a noise awoke him and he realized that it was all a dream.

The Navajo Film Company producing dramas for the Kriterion Service, has just completed its production, "A Mask, a Ring, a Pair of Handcuffs." It is stated that this is one of the most thrilling Westerns they have produced. Chas. K. French directed this drama and Lucille Younge, William Parsons and Wallace McDonald share the leading roles.

Donald MacDonald, director of Paragon Brand of dramas, released on the Kriterion Program, has just completed a powerful two-reel subject, entitled "Fate's Vengeance." Anthony W. Coldewey is the author of the scenario. The cast includes Miss Dorothy Davenport, Lee Hill, Benj. Horning and Rupert Julian.

Boards of Trade Useful

California Exchangemen Pleased with Showing Made by New Film Exchange Boards of Trade in Both San Francisco and Los Angeles—Saving on Poster Distribution Alone by Former Amounts to $2,000 a Month—Nearly All Exchanges Affiliated.

By T. A. Church, Special Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE Film Exchange Board of Trade of San Francisco has rounded out the first four months of its existence and its members are very much pleased with the showing that has been made during this period. Of a total of about twenty exchanges in this city, there are but two that are not affiliated with the organization, and one of these will probably join at an early date, as the proposition is under consideration by the Eastern management of the concern. Collections have been greatly improved since the formation of the Board of Trade and members have suffered practically no losses since that time. The proposition of charging for all posters and advertising matter supplied to exhibitors has placed the paper departments of the various exchanges on a self-sustaining basis and it is estimated that $2,000 a month is being saved on this item alone. Word has been received from Los Angeles to the effect that the Board of Trade formed there along the lines of the local organization is also proving a success. This new organization is sending out the same notices to exhibitors as was done by the San Francisco Board of Trade and it is planned to make the work of the two bodies as nearly alike as conditions will permit.

SCREEN CLUB TO HAVE CLUB ROOMS.

A meeting of the directors of the Screen Club of San Francisco was held recently in the offices of the organization at 787 Market street, and a committee was appointed with power to select a location for clubrooms and to proceed with the work of furnishing these when secured. The committee consists of Ralph Marks, chairman, Joseph Huff, O. V. Traggardh and Tom North. Two locations are now under consideration, one in the Empress Theater building, on Market street, and the other in the Tivoli Theater building on Eddy street. In case arrangements for subdivision can be made it is considered likely that the latter location will be chosen. The committee will make a selection at an early date, as it is desired to have the club rooms ready for occupancy at as early date as possible.

REPORT SHOWS HOW POPULAR MOVING PICTURES ARE.

The State Recreational Inquiry Commission, authorized by the California Legislature of 1913, has presented a report to the Legislature now in session indicating that during the past year the attendance at moving picture performances in the state was more than ten times as great as the attendance at so-called legitimate theatrical performances. The report shows the following estimated yearly attendances: Moving picture houses, 19,436,584; vaudeville houses, whose programs usually include moving pictures, 7,382,804; legitimate theaters, 1,790,464; burlesque theaters, 1,055,904. In the playhouses classical plays are the least popular, and musical comedies attract the largest crowds, according to the report.

OTHER SAN FRANCISCO ITEMS.

Judge A. P. Tugwell, of Los Angeles, vice-president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of California, was a visitor in San Francisco this week, making a short stay here. He was on his way to Sacramento, where the State Legislature is now in session.

GRAND RAPIDS CREATES LOCAL CENSOR BOARD

Federation of Women's Clubs Brings About Local Censorship.

By Midwest Special Moving Picture World Service.

LOCAL censorship is on its way in Grand Rapids. The mayor has appointed Mrs. Gelmer H. Kuiper chairman of the new board and, it was announced, two other members soon would be named. Just how this board would work was not determined at the early meetings. The exhibitors wanted some arrangement that would not interfere with their regular shows. A. J. Gilligham, of the Gilligham & Smith enterprises, was on hand with an offer to co-operate. He tended the use of his theaters and an operator at 7 a. m. each morning, but believed the operator should be paid by the board. The hour seemed too early for the women. The exhibitor insisted that a central censorship headquarters was essential. Rev. Robert W. Brown advocated a constructive policy in censoring. Miss Eaton, of the Drama League, said she had been in the censorship work three years, and always had found the theater managers willing to co-operate. The meeting which resulted in the creation of a censorship board was primarily caused by alleged statements that the Grand Rapids shows were not showing proper pictures. It developed, however, that no specific charges had been made. The present chief of police told of but one complaint against photoplay houses and his predecessor could recall none. Previously a resolution had been passed by the Grand Rapids Federation of Woman's Clubs embodying this clause: "Whereas, some of the moving pictures are a menace to the morals of the community, especially to the youth, we protest against films which rehearse scenes of murder, brutality, etc., and we petition the mayor and council to institute a municipal board of censors." The chairman of the new board is president of the Grand Rapids Woman's Club.

MORE MICHIGAN ITEMS.

Exhibitors in Coldwater and other Michigan towns point out a predicament likely to arise if the Michigan state censorship bill is passed. Films for many Michigan houses are supplied by exchanges in Toledo, O. They have been passed by the board in that state and carry the Ohio label of approval. If they do not happen to have been passed also by a Michigan board trouble is foreseen.

A moving picture theater has been opened in the town hall at Empire, giving exhibitions Wednesdays, Saturdays and Sundays.

A communication to the board of health in Grand Rapids declaring that some of the moving picture theaters in the city were unhealthy led to an investigation of ventilation facilities.

The Orpheum theater, at Hancock, has taken on talking pictures for two nights a week.

Frank Willey and George Spink have opened a moving picture theater in the Sping Building, at Mesick.

Johnson's theater, at Vassar, has added a stage so that vaudeville can be handled.

E. M. Smith has retired from active work in the affairs of the amusement firm of Gilligham & Smith at Grand Rapids, and will go to Los Angeles, Cal., to reside. He remains a director in the company.

SOUTHWESTERN JOTTINGS.

THE Muskogee, Okla., Phoenix, which is co-operating in the Thanhouser Syndicate $10,000 prize scenario contest, has received more than four hundred scripts from authors in its territory.

W. I. Cole has sold the Royal theater, at Enid, Okla., to Clarence Harryman.

The Martin theater, at Miami, Ariz., recently had a program made up of the Maxwell auto industrialog and a one-reel travelog.

Theaters As Civic Centers

Exhibitors of Cincinnati Will Aid City's Chamber of Commerce to Advertise Home Town—Committee Has Been Named to Select Slides for Use in Theaters—One More Example of Enviable Place Picture Theaters Are Taking in Modern Communities.

By Kenneth C. Crain, Special Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE recognition by the powers that be in the Cincinnati Chamber of Commerce and the leading business interests of the city of the advertising possibilities of slides in moving picture houses, was evidenced last week in a striking way. Also, the kind of spirit which animates Cincinnati exhibitors was shown convincingly. The Chamber of Commerce has planned to give the city's advantages the publicity they deserse, and decided that the place to begin the campaign of educational advertising was at home. One of the mediums, it was decided, is the moving picture theaters. The exhibitors themselves "came across" with commendable promptness and enthusiasm. They held a special meeting at the Sinton Hotel for the purpose of declaring their indorsement of the plan and offering their co-operation, and thirty—the number present—agreed to exhibit, free of charge, one or two slides daily, either showing views of the city's attractive points or setting forth in words things to be remembered about it. A special committee of the exhibitors was appointed to "censor" these slides, consisting of Messrs. Thomas A. Reilly, chairman; Charles Weigel, Joseph Hennegan, H. G. Kruse and A. G. Hettesheimer, with President F. L. Emmert, of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, as a member ex-officio. It is practically certain that every one of the hundred-odd houses in the city will co-operate in the movement. The great value to any community of popular picture houses and of public spirited exhibitors is once more exemplified. Picture theaters are destined to be one of to-morrow's most important institutions.

OTHER CINCINNATI NOTES.

The Strand theater, which has been showing the Paramount pictures exclusively, in the downtown section for some weeks, has had erected an electric sign which is one of the most conspicuous on Walnut street, being a close second to the blazing electric fountain which marks Keith's theater, only a door or so away. The Strand sign is attached vertically to the side of the building, and bears only the single word indicating the name of the theater, in two-foot letters.

The much-discussed drama, "A Fool There Was," based on Kipling's "Vampire," was released by the Box Office Attraction Company, made its fire appearance last week in Cincinnati at the Alhambra. It drew remarkably well, bad weather and the usual effect of the off day apparently having no effect on the attendance.

Prospects are bright for the addition of at least two more to the already long list of film exchanges and branch offices located in Cincinnati. Details of the proposed new offices are not yet ready for announcement, but it seems certain that they will be established, adding just that much to the growing prestige of this city as a film-distributing center for the whole South. The exchanges which have been here for any length of time are one by one finding it necessary to enlarge their quarters, one of the latest of these being the World, which has moved its offices from Fourth street to the third floor of the Savoy block, on Sixth street, under a new three-year lease.

The Williamson moving pictures of submarine life and action, including an actual combat between a man and a shark, were displayed recently at the Victoria, in Dayton, with considerable success. The wide extent of the free advertising received by these pictures of course helped to draw the crowds, and they were sufficiently interesting in themselves to make good without much trouble.

The management of the new Hippodrome theater, which is getting ready for business in Youngstown, O., is particularly proud of the arrangements which have been made for music, which include the installation of an organ-orchestra, made by the Beman Symphonic Organ Company, of Binghamton, N. Y., costing about $18,000. The instrument is one of the finest made, and is expected to cause something resembling a sensation. It will be electrically operated, and will furnish all of the music for the theater. An opening concert by the inventor and builder, Frank Beman, is promised.

The Duchess, the newest theater of Warren, O., opened a few weeks ago, is one of the prettiest moving-picture houses in that part of Ohio, the decorative work being especially tasteful and attractive. The theater was finished by Samuel W. Rice, of Youngstown, who has given a good deal of thought to this kind of work, and has done some notable jobs, including several in Youngstown.

BRIEF ST. LOUIS NEWS ITEMS.

By A. H. Giebler, Special Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE King's theater, at Kings Highway, near Delmar avenue, which has been closed for some time, will reopen Feb. 7 under the management of Joseph M. Carr. A new schedule of pictures and prices has been arranged. The new plan includes matinees on Thursdays and Fridays from 2 until 5 in the afternoon, and a continuous bill for Saturday and Sunday from 2 unil 11. The price of admission will be 10 cents to all matinees, and 10, 15 and 20 cents for evening shows.

Wagner Brothers, who manage the Alps theater, at 4056 Easton avenue, gave out 200 free admission tickets to ladies in the neighborhood of their theater on the occasion of the showing of the first reel of the "Exploits of Elaine" series.

The Garrick theater, at 6th and Chestnut streets, has booked the Williamson's Submarine Expedition pictures, beginning Feb. 7.

A moving picture entertainment of more than usual interest will be shown at the Odeon, Grand and Finney avenues, on Feb. 8, when Sir Douglas Mawson, the famous scientist and explorer, will illustrate with moving pictures his lecture, "Racing With Death in the Antarctic Blizzards." The films used by this celebrated naturalist are of great educational as well as scientific value, and are said to be the most thorough and realistic ever taken in the polar regions.

G. E. McKean, who has been handling the Paramount Pictures Corporation's releases in this territory for some time past, has established himself in permanent offices in the Gayety theater building, 14th and Locust streets. Mr. McKeon will be in charge of the offices personally, and all releases of the Paramount Pictures Corporation and Alliance Films Corporation will be booked through this exchange.

George E. Kern, manager of the Cherokee theater, Cherokee street and Ohio avenue, has added the Alliance features to his program, which he runs on Mondays, Tuesdays, Fridays and Saturdays.

The policy inaugurated by Charles E. Flesh, manager of the Lindell theater, Grand and Hebert, is filling the house to its fullest capacity every night. Many features and two serials are run each week. "The Master Key" on Wednesday night, and "Runaway June" on Thursday, and special features on all other nights, in addition to vaudeville and dramatic stock.

Progressive Legislation

Oklahoma's Lower House Passes Drastic Picture Bill—Prohibits Exhibiting Any Picture Showing Law-Breaking, Nor Can Scenes Suggesting Immorality Be Shown—No Death of Caesar Could Be Put on Screen, but Natural Scenery Can Be Shown at Will.

By J. R. Jones, Special Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

EXHIBITION of any motion picture film depicting scenes of outlawry, or anything suggestive or of an immoral nature, is prohibited by the terms of a drastic bill passed by the Oklahoma House of Representatives Monday afternoon.

If this bill be passed by the Senate and becomes a law with the approval of the Governor, it will prevent the showing of practically all motion picture films except those of current events and scenery.

The material part of this bill is as follows:

"It shall be unlawful after the passage and approval of this act for the manager of any theater, vaudeville house, opera house, airdome or other place of amusement to show or permit to be shown, any motion picture featuring a bank robbery, or any motion picture of nude forms, suggestive ideas, or featuring any act for which the commission of such act would be a violation of the law, or any motion pictures whatever that are obscene, licentious or immoral."

The portion of the bill prohibiting any act for which the commission thereof would be a violation of the law, will in the opinion of many members of the house prevent the exhibition of many historical pictures as well as a great many comedies, to say nothing of dramas.

Representative Sykes called attention to the fact that the bill, if followed literally, would prohibit the exhibition of pictures showing the murder of many great men, who have been factors in the world's history, for the commission of the act, he said, would constitute a violation of the law as provided in the bill.

Representative Nesbit, one of the authors of the bill, darkly hinted that the true object mas 'o prevent the further showing of "Beating Back" and "other films of outlawry nature," which, he says, has already given Oklahoma too much undesired publicity.

Section 2 of the bill further provides that "it shall be unlawful to produce or manufacture any moving pictures representing outlawry, outlaws or depredations committed within the State of Oklahoma." This provision would end the making of any kind of a motion picture in Oklahoma of a wild west or outlawry nature, including those purporting to show scenes during the frontier days in Oklahoma and the Southwest.

It is intended that the county attorney, mayor and chief of police of any city in the State shall constitute a board of censorship to determine whether or not the pictures would be prohibited by the terms of the bill.

If this bill passes and becomes a law, the new film, "The Passing of the Outlaw," now being produced by the Eagle Film Co., will not be permitted to be shown in the State, and unless the picture is completed before the bill is passed several scenes will have to be taken in some other State.

BRIEFS FROM HAWAII.

By Midwest Special Moving Picture World Service.

A big feature from the States that was appreciated by the residents of Honolulu was Annette Kellerman in "Neptune's Daughter." The natives of the islands have a world-wide reputation for their ability as swimmers, and took keen delight in this picture when it was shown at Ye Liberty theater.

Sam Blair, of the Popular theater, in Honolulu, has received a letter from one of the foremost producing companies in the United States asking him if it would be possible to take pictures of Kilauea showing the fire and molten lava.

STUDIO OF SEATTLE PRODUCER NEARLY READY.

Seattle's Home Motion Picture Company to Have Studio Soon—Pictures It Is Making.

By Midwest Special Moving Picture World Service.

THE Washington Film Company of Seattle, will have expended $30,000 when its plant at Kirkland, now under construction, is completed. The site secured is a block in area. It will contain a studio, 40x100, mechanical department, film vault, administration building, garage, carpenter shop, paint shop and laboratory. April is fixed as the time when production will begin, with C. W. Peterson directing a company of thirty which will include some Seattle talent. First releases will be parlor comedies. These will be followed by strong outdoor dramas and later something may be done toward putting out some scenics and educationals made in and around Lake Washington. The company's offices, with J. L. Adams as president, have been opened in the Washington Building, Cherry street and First avenue, in Seattle.

PICTURE THEATERS BECOMING COMMUNITY CENTERS.

Benefit performances and local talent have been introduced into northwestern programs the last week by way of heightening the interest. "Save the Baby" buttons were distributed to the children of Valley City, N. D., by local Child Welfare Workers. Each youngster was given a penny for this button when he bought a ticket to the benefit show at the Grand. Pauline Bush, in "The Pipes of Pan," was the feature for this show.

Dreamland, at Willmar, Minn., helped the Cosmos Club furnish its club room by giving a benefit show. The Globe, at Albany, Ore., showed the films of Albany made by William Card, of the Card Film Company, of Portland. A large block of seats at the Caughren, in Sauk Center, Minn., was reserved by the Commercial Club on the night that organization entertained. A band concert was given in addition to the regular picture show. The band, at Marshfield, Ore., gave a free Sunday afternoon concert at the Lemanski theater just before the regular picture show. "The Merchant of Venice" was shown at the Bijou, in Crosby, Minn., for the local library fund.

OTHER NORTHWESTERN NOTES.

The F. E. Bowman company of Portland, Ore., has completed plans for the erection of a one-story, 40x100 brick, hollow tile and concrete moving picture theater and store building at Thirty-seventh and Caruthers streets in that city. It will cost about $6,000.

A bill providing for the closing of moving picture theaters on Sunday has been introduced before the Washington State Legislature by Senators French, of Clarke County, and Leonard, of Chehalis County.

SAYS CHILDREN NEED SPECIAL PICTURES.

The class of pictures shown in a theater cannot be properly regulated, Miss Edith B. Taylor, principal of the Hancock school, told the Hamline (St. Paul) Commercial Club. She wanted the support of the club in her plan to make the school a center for the moving picture lovers. If the "blood and thunder" features of the theater could be eliminated she favored the commercial house, she announced.

PICTURES HELP CORNELL.

By Pittsburgh Special Moving Picture World Service.

The pictures received a strong indorsement from President Jacob Gould Schurman, of Cornell University, at the annual banquet of the Cornell Club, of Western Pennsylvania, held in the rooms of the Union Club, Wednesday, Jan. 27, 1915. About 150 men attended. Vice-President F. W. Scheidenheim, '05, presided in place of President W. L. Umstad, '05, who was unable to be present. William Metcalf, Jr., '01, was toastmaster. The only other speaker was Attorney F. W. H. Clay, '93, who spoke on "The University's Sons." Moving pictures of Cornell life today were shown.

President Shurman said the moving picture theaters of Ithaca have been a great agency for the promotion of sound morals among Cornell students. Where many of the men formerly went down town to secure diversion "and probably drank a lot of beer," now they go to moving picture show, and after it is over go back to the university. As a result, he declared, there is a growing tendency toward total abstinence among all Cornell men.

FIREMEN BECOME EXHIBITORS.

The Cronin & Murray Company, composed of three firemen connected with Hose Co. 5, Erie, Pa., are erecting a fine moving picture house in Eighth avenue, and it is expected to be finished about the first of March. It will cost $20,000 and will have a seating capacity of 400. The equipment order, consisting of 400 chairs, two Powers 6-A machines, Martin Rotary Converter, Mirroroide screen, etc., have been granted to the Feature Film & Calcium Light Company, Pittsburg.

NEW THEATER IN GRAFTON.

J. W. Rodes and F. F. Hude, owners of the Theatorium, in Grafton, near Pittsburgh, Pa., are building another fine new house in Grafton avenue, in the same town. This house is expected to be ready for opening about the 15th of March. The building will be a one-story structure, 30x100 feet, of fireproof construction, modern in every way, and will cost $15,000, including equipment. The seating capacity will be 400, and there will be room for three four-foot aisles. A steam heating plant and an efficient ventilating system will be installed.

SAFETY DEVICES PROVED.

Bad Fire in Operators' Room of Palace Theater, Johnstown, Kept from Spreading.

A fire in the Palace theater, on Main street, Johnstown, Pa., recently, gave members of the fire department an opportunity to observe the value of fireproofing installation as applied to a moving picture machine booth and prescribed by state laws. The electric light rays from the lamp, focused through a strong lens on the end of a film, overheated the film before the operator could start the reel moving, and the whole reel suddenly exploded inside its metal protective case. Volumes of smoke poured out into the steel and asbestos lined film room, but the metal case that held the film did not break open, and no fire reached the adjacent machine parts. A large case of films against the wall near at hand was unscorched.

The smoke pouring out of the ventilator was the only indication that there was anything unusual going on inside the theater. Manager Chris Bogas was near the booth at the time and rushed to the door with a fire extinguisher, but was driven back and almost suffocated by the smoke when he opened the door of the booth. Had he remained outside a few minutes, he could have entered without encountering any smoke, as the ventilator fan had cleared the air.

The only loss from the blaze was the value of the reel, less than $100, and the slight smear of soot scattered on the machine by the explosion of the film.

Even if the fire had burst the film case and burned up everything inside the machine booth, it could not have reached the theater. The booth is of steel and asbestos, with only tiny peep holes in the wall for the projection of the pictures on the screen. Metal slides are suspended by strings above these holes, so that in case of fire in the booth, the strings are burned and the slides drop automatically.

OTHER PITTSBURGH NOTES.

The commendable enterprise of the Pittsburg Gazette Times and the able and efficient help of the management of the Schenley theater have been combined in a successful effort to present to the citizens of Pittsburgh and the surrounding territory a series of scenes of the battle fields of the great European war, which is fast devastating great portions of Europe. The series of pictures, under the auspices of The Gazette Times, were first presented last Saturday night, and this was the first time that such a series has ever been presented.

A. Baltimore, proprietor of the Lyric theater, New Castle, Pa., has recently purchased property on Long avenue, this city, for the purpose of erecting a modern photoplay house costing $20,000. The property measures 37x110 feet, and the building will be built of concrete, stone and brick with steel construction, conforming throughout with the state code specifications.

The equipment of the theater will include two Powers 6 projectors, electric lighting plant, mirroroid screen, steam heat, plenty of exhaust and blower fans, ventilators and a Wurlitzer orchestra.

Mrs. Henry Oliver, wife of Henry Oliver, road man for the Picture Playhouse Film Company, Pittsburgh, Pa., died at the Homeopathic Hospital last week of pneumonia. The interment took place at Chester, Pa., last Friday. Mr. Oliver has the deep sympathy of his friends. Besides the husband, an infant survives.

James Barry and T. R. Stover, employes of the Pennsylvania car shops in Altoona, Pa., who were sent to San Francisco to superintend the erection there of the Pennsylvania Railroad's moving picture exhibit for the Exposition, have returned and resumed their duties in the shops. The exhibit, which will portray scenes all over the Pennsylvania lines and in their shops and yards, was erected in the Altoona shops and rebuilt in the exposition grounds by Barry and Stover. They accompanied the exhibit out, on freight, taking three weeks to the trip.

David Thomas has recently bought the Beaver theater, at Beaver, near Pittsburgh, Pa., and is remodeling and redecorating the house. It has a seating capacity of 414 and is managed by Howard Baldrich. Mr. Baldrich recently made application for membership in the Screen Club.

With Robert G. Vignola, director, are Miss Alice Hollister, Miss Helen Lindroth, Mr. Harry Millarde, Mr. Henry Hollam, Mr. Robert D. Walker, Mr. John E Mackin, Mr. Arthur Albertson, Mr. George K. Hollister, camera man; Mr. Tisdale J. Dow, scenic artist; Mr. E. E. Potvin, carpenter; assistant, Joseph Schramm; Mr. Frank Hodson, property man; assistants, Henry Hernbrow, E. Jellyman; helpers, Jack McComber and Jim Davis. Mr. Stone V. Boyd is stage manager at the studio. Miss D. S. Reed has charge of the business office and the stenographic work. Clarence Meikel handles the electrical end of the work. H. L. Davis is watchman.

Bad weather delayed work of Peerless Feature Film Company, but it will finish here in a few days. The company includes Miss Dorothy Tenant, Miss Julia Stewart, Miss Jessie Lewis, Mrs. Navarro, Miss Anita Navarro, Miss Gladys Hazeltine, Mr. George Cowl, J. Baker, Fred Radcliffe, Harry Lorraine, who was recently with the Lubin studio here; Lucian Adrienne, camera man, and Helmer Bergman. The company will now return to the Fort Lee studio.

WHAT PLAYERS ARE DOING.

A very realistic fight scenic was taken in a recent Kalem, "The Girl of the Dance Hall," one of the Alice Joyce series, three-reel picture. The fight was between Guy Coombs and John E. Mackin. Mackin was portraying the role of a bouncer in the low dance hall, and when he attempted to eject Coombs, resistance is shown and a "scrap" ensues. The clothing of the players were in shreds at the finish and one of the men scarcely had strength enough left to pick his adversary up in the air and throw him out bodily. It was a great scene, observers state.

Ben Ross has a motor boat in which he "speeds" quite often on the St. Johns River.

John E. Mackin lives near the Kalem grounds, and he has a garden which he attends to himself. He has a ready and plentiful supply of vegetables for his table.

Elsie St. Leon, recently here with "Polly of the Circus," has been the guest of Miss Helen Lindroth.

Arthur D. Hotaling, director, and family, have taken a house near the Lubin Southern studio, moving from apartments at the Mason Hotel. The family is comfortably located in their handsomely furnished home.

Garry Hotaling, with Raymond McKee, went down to St. Augustine in his Regal car recently, to visit the Lubin dramatic company there.

OTHER JACKSONVILLE NOTES.

John R. Bartow, manager of the local Universal office, has just returned from a trip to Tampa, Arcadia, Ft. Meyers and other towns on the west coast. Business has been hampered some by the fact that the phosphate mines are not in full operation. Universal exhibitors of the state are evidencing interest in a proposed trip to Universal City for the opening.

Mr. Bartow reports that the erection of a new theater, the Royal, at Wanchula, Fla., is progressing. The theater is being constructed by McDonald & Turner, business men of that place. The capacity of the theater is to be about 500, and the opening will likely be about March 15. Two 6-A Powers have been installed.

NEW THEATER IN DETROIT.

By Jacob Smith, Special Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE new Knickerbocker theater, at Jefferson avenue, being built by the Ingersoll-Gaukler Company, is expected to be open by the latter part of March. The seating capacity will be about 1,000, and the chairs will have spring seats, and will be as comfortable and roomy as it is possible. The cost of the theater will be $100,000, with the equipment. The company is building it with the idea of permanency and is spending considerable more money than ordinarily goes into a motion picture house. The lobby will be magnificent, so that the impression as one enters from the street will be most favorable. There will be a small balcony with about 300 seats, leaving about 700 on the main floor. Prices will be 10, 15 and 20, with boxes at 25 cents. The best in motion pictures will be exhibited, including the Paramount program. The location is as good as any in the city, outside of the downtown district. It is in a thickly populated section, and is in the outdoor amusement center of Detroit. It is doubtful if during the summer there is any more widely traversed section, both by pedestrians and autoists, owing to its being located on Jefferson avenue, used by all motorists, and the fact that it is only a stone's throw from the main boulevard and the approach to Belle Isle Park.

PICKFORD BOOKING SCHEME CAUSES APPREHENSION

Detroit Exhibitors Foresee Difficulties of New Scheme for Releasing Mary Pickford Pictures.

George W. Trendle and John H. Kunsky returned last week from an extended visit to New York on important business. The purpose of their eastern sojourn was a definite understanding of the new arrangement on Mary Pickford releases. "Mistress Nell" was shown at the Washington the week of Feb. 7, but it is understood that some other house will hereafter be used for the first releases, prices being considerably advanced on account of the new arrangement. A month later they will be shown at the Washington. In this connection, a well-known manager said: "I don't see how this new booking schedule can work out satisfactorily. People here have been used to getting Mary Pickford pictures at 20 cents and under, and they won't stand for paying more; then again, the public mill get 'wise' and instead of paying the top-notch price will wait thirty days until it becomes a part of the Paramount program in order to get the former price."

WANTS TO SPEND THE PEOPLE'S MONEY.

The Recreation Commission has sent a resolution to the Common Council asking a good-sized appropriation for certain work which it desires to carry out. Included was a request for a moving picture machine operator, an assistant, and a moving picture room for censoring pictures. It is not believed that a single dollar will be allowed by the Common Council for such a purpose.

A. W. BLANCKMEYER ON PROSPECTS IN DETROIT.

A. W. Blanckmeyer, owner of the Grand Circus theater, says that business is coming along. He is now showing first-run Keystone comedies, World Film and Box Office attractions, and is doing a big business in the afternoon as well as at night. Mr. Blanckmeyer was asked if he thought there was an over-production of theaters. He replied: "It was seven years ago when I opened a theater near Clark's Park, in the extreme west end of town. At that time there were a few houses downtown, and friends told me then that mine would never pay, because there would be too many. Well, I went ahead and my house coined money from the start. Every year I hear the cry of 'too many houses,' and yet they all seem to do business. It simply will mean that the properly conducted houses that have treated their patrons right, have the capacity and give the shows, will continue to do business, while the others—run-down in appearance, lacking in attractiveness and not in keeping with the times—will have to close up."

NEW OFFICERS ELECTED.

Stockholders of Washington-Detroit Theater Company Hold Meeting and Choose Officers.

Stockholders of the Washington-Detroit Theater Company held their annual meeting the last week in January and elected the following officers: President, John D. MacKay; vice-president, D. T. Davis; secretary and assistant treasurer, Fred E. Holmes; treasurer, A. E. Whitbeck. Reports of the officers reviewing the work of the past year showed that the company's liabilities had been considerably reduced. The Washington is under lease to John H. Kunsky, who is showing first-run Paramount pictures. The present lease expires Sept. 1. of this year.

UNCENSORED PICTURES.

Lester Potter, former censor of moving pictures, says that of late quite a number of theaters have been exhibiting film that was condemned two and three years ago. He attributes this to the fact that the owners of these films, knowing that there is no local censorship, are taking advantage of the situation and getting exhibitors to show the film wherever they can. Police Commissioner Gillespie has threatened to go more fully into the matter of censorship if he gets any more complaints of bad film.

OTHER DETROIT MATTERS.

The Bell theater, 396 Dix avenue, is running Renfax talking pictures every Monday and Thursday and reports that they are drawing well. "People are getting so that they really like these pictures," said Mr. Bell, Sr. "At first they took them as a novelty only, but we have noticed that our patronage is increasing on both of the nights that they are shown."

John W. Harris, general manager of the Family, was in Detroit several times during the first week and says the business was really surprising to him. "Of course I knew from my experience with "Tillie's Punctured Romance" in Pittsburg that the Keystone comic offering would do well, but never did I expect such enormous business as we are having here," he stated to the Moving Picture World correspondent. Frank J. O'Donnell, house manager of the Family, who previous to his assuming this position had handled vaudeville theaters, said he never knew there were so many motion picture fans.

Maurice Geiger, who has represented Pathe pictures in this territory for some time, has resigned and taken a road position with the Detroit office of the World Film Corporation.

The J. L. Hudson department store is now selling Pathescope machines, and its demonstration on the Farmer street side of the main floor has attracted a lot of attention.

C. Howard Crane, architect, of Detroit, who has designed all of the Kunsky theaters, has opened a New York office, with Percival R. Pereira as associate. Mr. Crane will divide his time between Detroit and the East, and will specialize in amusement enterprises, designing and letting all contracts.

Percy Smith, formerly assistant manager at the Garland and Majestic theaters, when those houses were operating, and lately treasurer of the Washington theater, has resigned to accept a position as assistant manager of the Grand Circus theater.

KANSAS GOSSIP AND NEWS.

By Kansas City Special Moving Picture World News Service.

J. N. Herr, superintendent of the Kansas State Industrial Reformatory for Boys at Hutchinson, Kan., has contracted for a series of films to be delivered once a week. The picture shows will be given in the chapel of the institution. This will provide a new field of amusement for the boys.

The Pictureland theater, at Fort Scott, Kansas, featured the Vitagraph film "Mr. Barnes of New York," with Maurice Costello in the leading role. Manager Blubaugh has secured many good features for his theater.

The De Luxe theater, at Hutchinson, one of the best picture houses in the whole state, last week featured the Kalem film "The Theft of the Crown Jewels." This picture is very popular in the state and the name of Alice Joyce, the Kalem actress, has become a household name.

The Orpheum theater, at Atchison, has nearly completed the "Million Dollar Mystery." The Orpheum has been showing only the highest class features since the opening.

Orpheum theater, at Leavenworth, recently gave their patrons one of the best pictures that has been released, "Cinderella," featuring Mary Pickford. While the book may have been intended for children, the play on the screen draws the admiration of the adults.

Lyceum theater, at Leavenworth, recently gave its patrons one of the Broncho comedies, "A Lucky Blow-Out." These comedies have attained a high degree of success and are favorites with the public.

"The Tear That Burned" is a two-reel Majestic drama that has proved popular on the Mutual programs in Kansas. It was recently shown at the Gem theater in El Dorado.

"The Girl I Left Behind," featuring Robert Edeson, is pleasing many moving picture patrons in Kansas. The picture has been very successful compared with the success it made on the stage several years ago. The picture was at the Iris theater in Topeka last week.

Chapter nine of Zudora is being shown at the Princess theater in Wichita this week.

The Elite theater at Great Bend has done some extensive advertising. Its slogan is "The House of Features" and last week it advertised "The Master Key" and Frances X. Bushman in "Ambushed."

The five-reel Shubert-Brady drama, featuring William Lackaye in "The Pit," was on the program of the Orpheum theater at Topeka last week. The Orpheum has been advertising as "A dollar show for a 'Jitney.'"

The Hip, Topeka's exclusive feature photoplay house, is charging admission according to the merits of the pictures. The management, thought George Cohan's "Officer 666" warranted the admission charge of 10 and 15 cents.

The Gem theater at El Dorado recently held a racing jubilee. "Checkers" and "Red Bird Wins," two of the leading race horse picture plays were on the program. It is needless to say that this program was well attended, for the public still cherishes a great enthusiasm for the banished horse races.

The Orpheum at Topeka had the three-reel Pathe drama, "It's a Long, Long Way To Tipperary." The picture enjoyed about the same degree of sensation as the song has. This firm has been extensively booked all through Kansas.

Edith Taliaferro, in the Paramount picture "Young Romance" entertained Topeka patrons at the Iris last week. Miss Taliaferro, by her superb acting in this picture, made many friends in Topeka.

The Crawford theater in Wichita is now showing the five reels of the "War in Europe" made by some of the most daring motion picture photographers.

King Baggot is still entertaining Kansas audiences in "Three Times and Out," which was shown at the Marple theater in Wichita last week.

KANSAS CITY NEWS LETTER.

By Kansas City Special Moving Picture World News Service.

ROBERT T. FURMAN, director of the Pathe Exchanges, was in Kansas City last week from New York on his Western tour of inspection. He spent only one day here, and was well pleased. He is en route for Salt Lake City, Denver and the Pacific coast.

The Willis Wood theater has been doing some very extensive advertising. Large sign boards have been painted in many parts of the city. The signs are painted in such a manner that the name of the picture and the schedule of the show can be changed each week without destroying the rest of the sign. On the left hand side of the signs is a very good reproduction of the theater in painting.

C. Lane Cobb, Jr., manager of the Ramo Film Company, spent two days in Kansas City last week. He expressed himself as well satisfied with the Kansas City office and the business that was being done here. Mr. Cobb returned to New York.

Nearly all of the best theaters in Kansas City have either shown or have engagements booked for the feature film, "Neptune's Daughter."

The Ramo Company received eight releases from their Minneapolis office. Although not new pictures, they are new to this territory.

C. S. Edwards, district manager of the Pathe Exchange, returned last week from a business trip to Omaha, Sioux City and Minneapolis. He reports excellent business throughout this section of the country, and he declares that he looks for big and rapid increase in the spring. He will leave for Dallas, Texas, and several southern cities early this week.

Howard E. Jameyson, representative of the Pathe Exchange, with headquarters at Wichita, Kan., is sending in very good reports. Mr. Jameyson is a new recruit in the ranks of the moving picture world, having recently been engaged in the newspaper business.

The Warwick theater, Main street and Westport avenue, secured for a feature engagement last week "The Life Of Our Savior," produced by the Pathe Exchange. This work is sometimes confused in the minds of patrons with the Passion Play.

The Grubel Brothers, of Kansas City, who own many moving picture theaters in the middle west, recently obtained an option on land at 128 Kirby Arcade, to erect a picture house at Springfield, Mo. The property includes the Grand Theater building and several other buildings.

Brookfield, Mo., saw the World Film Corporation's great Shubert play last week, "The Wishing Ring." The picture was well attended and pleased the Brookfield audience well.

"The Littlest Rebel," of the Photoplay Productions Co., was focused on the screen of the Colonial theater at St. Joseph, Mo., last week. Edward Peple's play has proved to be as attractive in moving pictures as it did on the stage.

The Shubert theater last week advertised the English success, "The Whip." It was necessary for them to paste across their advertisements the following: "Note: This is not a Moving Picture."

David Belasco's world-famed drama, "The Girl of The Golden West," the Jesse L. Lasky production, has been very popular. The Star theater at Hannibal, Mo., secured the picture for its feature attraction last week.

Mrs. Sydney Drew, who plays under the name of Jane Morrow, was instantly recognized last week, when a picture at the Star theater in Columbia, Mo., was shown. The folks of her home town recognized Mrs. Drew, as Miss Lucille McVey. When living in Columbia, Mrs. Drew was well known for many brilliant readings of child characters she gave. She married Mr. Sydney Drew in New York last fall at the "Little Church Around the Corner."

Endorses National Board

Indiana Legislature Now Considering a Bill to Make Rulings of National Board of Censorship Legally Binding in That State—Forbids Showing Pictures Not Approved by It—Provides for Fines of from $50 to $500.

By Moving Picture World's Indiana Special Trade News Service.

A BILL which provides against showing anywhere a moving picture film which does not bear the stamp of approval of the National Board of Censorship, and carrying a penalty, is in the hands of Representative Cleary, of Marion County, Indiana. The bill is designed to cut out immoral pictures from the theaters or private exhibitions. The bill sets out that for a violation of the act a fine of not less than $50 or more than $500, to which may be added a term in the county jail of from thirty to ninety days, may be assessed.

WANT LICENSE FEE REDUCED.

Alexandria, Ind., picture house owners have asked city council to reduce their licenses to $15 per year.

TO MR. AND MRS. BRANNEN—A GIRL.

A new picture fan was brought to the city of Evansville, Ind., recently, in the form of a nine and one-half pound baby girl. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. Russell Brannen. Mr. Brannen is the proprietor of the Criterion and Savoy theatoriums. The mother and child are both doing well.

AMATEUR PICTURE COMPANY IN TERRE HAUTE.

Manager Frank Holland, of the Orpheum, Terre Haute, has organized a company of amateurs and they have succeeded in making a capital film of "The Banks of the Wabash," Indiana's state song. They have also produced a film of the now popular song "Back, Back, Back to Indiana."

NEW PICTURES BY INDIANA AUTHORS.

Two new picture plots by Indiana authors have been accepted by producers. They are "An Ill Wind," written by Roy Perry, manager of the shipping department of the Mutual agency in Indianapolis, and "Their Worldly Goods," by Harry Feltis, Bloomington. The former will be produced by the Lubin forces and the latter by the Mutual Company.

SUNDAY OPENING LAW.

The law prohibiting theatrical performances on Sunday would indirectly be repealed by a bill prepared for introduction in the Indiana legislature. The bill would, however, place such a heavy tax on Sunday performances—one-half of the gross receipts to go to charity—that it is doubtful if many shows could afford to take advantage of it.

OTHER INDIANA ITEMS.

The little daughter of Morris Brenman, who manages the Liberty theater, at Indiana Harbor, Ind., fell asleep while witnessing a show and did not wake up until everyone had departed and the doors locked. The child had entered the theater unknown to her father. He did not miss her when he got home, as he thought she was in bed. The child's sobs were heard by a passerby, who notified the police and they in turn phoned Mr. Brenman, who hurried to the theater.

A real test of the claims of motion picture theater owners that they have a right to give performances for charity on Sunday will be made in Marion, Ind., in the cases of two picture show owners who were arrested when they opened their playhouses and took free will offerings.

The proprietor of a moving picture house at Harrisburgh, Ill., announced recently that eggs would be accepted as legal tender for admission to his theater, and in counting up the profits of the first day thereafter, it was discovered that sixty-five dozen eggs had been taken in at the door. There would seem to be crying need of a federal investigation into this possible monopoly that threatens to become very real.

The Phil-Bun theater at Hymera, Ind., was badly damaged when the entire roof of the building caved in. The roof was made of sheet metal, and the snow which accumulated during the recent storms became too heavy and caused the roof to give way. The cave-in occured at 2 o'clock in the afternoon, but luckily no one was in the building.

A four-thousand-dollar orchestral instrument has been installed in the Vaudette theater, at Connersville, Ind. Mr Robert Roberts, who has been taking special instructions in Cincinnati, will play it

The Lyric theater, Waterloo, Ind., which has been newly furnished, has opened under new management.

The proposition to make moving pic tures of Logansport, Ind., showing the various points of interest as well as the city's business houses is being favorably received by business men to whom Major G. C. Boult of the Community Film Co., is presenting the matter.

Poultry fanciers of Plymouth, Ind., are showing moving pictures of the different stages in the life of a chicken.

The Electro-Tech Club of the Ft. Wayne Electric works, Ft. Wayne, Ind., has bought a moving picture machine. They will show pictures for their own amusement.

After a moving picture show given at the Dream theater, Jeffersonville, Ind., a colored man entered the house and began shooting at the janitor. No one was injured and the crowd that was leaving soon quieted.

Fire of unknown origin caused $2,000 damage to the Fairy theater at Knox, Ind. The building was erected last summer by Welcome Miller of Plymouth. The house was being used for picture shows and all the equipment was destroyed.

Illinois street, between Market and Ohio streets, known as "Movie Row," in Indianapolis, is as busy and well-lighted at night "as Broadway" in New York. The picture houses are many and only a few doors apart, which makes competition very keen. The Keystone theater employs a yourg man who looks and dresses like Charley Chaplin, to walk up and down in front of the house. His make-up is excellent and he attracts the attention of every passerby. Charley Chaplin is a great favorite in this city, so the advertisement, naturally, gets results.

A company is being formed in Brazil, Ind., to erect a modern theater building to be used in showing high-class moving pictures. No vaudeville acts will be used, unless the promoters change their plans.

The new Paramount theater, which has just opened in Logansport, Ind., is one of the most elaborate in the state. It has a seating capacity of 462. A new $5,000 organ is being installed. W. H. Lindsay, who is also proprietor of the Ark, is the owner of the new house.

A. F. Brentlinger, F. J. English and C W. Mason, Terre Haute, have practically closed negotiations for the lease of a building which they will remodel into a moving picture house. The theater will probably have the largest seating capacity of any in the state, seating approximately 1,400. Messrs. Brentlinger and English were formerly proprietors of the Orpheum and lately have been in Ft. Wayne.

Peoria Exhibitor Victim

Swindler Put Up an Automobile to Be Voted For at Princess Theater and Netted Neat Sum—Decamped with Machine—Simple Method by Which He Bilked Proprietor and Contestants—Making Special Effort to Capture Him.

By Frank H. Madison, Special Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

A VOTING contest gone awry is detailed by the Peoria Star: "Herman Levy, the chap who put on an automobile contest at the Princess theater whereby he has victimized the management and a dozen or fifteen 'preferred' contestants out of an amount somewhere between $2,000 and $3,000 is still at large. His effective method of bilking his victims is so simple and effective that it is a wonder it has not been worked before. In the first place he was to get the first $1,000 taken in, and afterward split with the theater, he to furnish the automobile, rings, etc. On the last day he called in his victims, told each one how he loved him, and that he would surely win the automobile if he bought from $25 to $234 worth of tickets. Chief Rhoades is putting forth his best efforts to locate the man and the automobile, for the machine has also disappeared."

MEN SAVE SUNDAY SHOWS.

The men saved the Sunday shows for Rochelle when the matter was submitted to voters at a special election. Only 99 women voted for Sunday shows, while 226 were against them. Of the men 330 were for seven day shows and 168 against. There were 429 votes for and 394 against the proposition.

CRITICISES USE OF SCHOOL CHILDREN TO SELL TICKETS.

Exploitation of school children in selling tickets to moving picture shows was condemned by Rev. T. E. Nugent in a sermon at the Congregational Church in Kewanee. The minister was not condemning moving picture shows; he was explicit in his statement that photoplays "put us into possession of a very wonderful and very useful means of recreation, which also is a fine means of instruction." Regarding the sale of tickets he said: "I have heard parents complain that when their children refused to take part in selling the tickets, owing to the opposition of their family, they were made to feel that they were lacking in loyalty to the school and were ostracized by other children." The character of the Sunday evening vaudeville shows in Kewanee was severely criticised.

MANAGING THE SHOW.

Interesting Tips as to What Some Illinois Managers Are Doing.

That an Illinois exhibitor's life is not just one show after another is proved by the week's activities of some of the downstate managers. Manager R. C. Schroeder, of the Colonial, at Galesburg, got some blank state warrants, filled them out with the names of Galesburg citizens, and had a blue-coated man "pinch" them as "suspected of failing to plan to attend the Colonial." Schroeder also has been injecting local interest into the shows by amateur vaudeville nights. He set aside Feb. 8 as "Woodmen Day," when the local fraternalists could see the operation of the big head camp in films. This crowd-drawing Woodmen film was on the program of Dreamland at Warsaw for Feb. 11, the Warsaw Woodmen co-operating. The new Castle, at Havana, has been featuring photoplays written by Miss Nelle Browne Duff, of that city; the Varsity, at Havana, formerly had this attraction cinched. Slides made from local camera views, including the interior of a coal mine, composed a Princeville Day program at the A-Muse-U, at Princeville. Princeton firemen were the guests of the Eagle to see "The Locked Door," a fire picture. Manager W. O. Stevens, of the Eagle, at Princeton, also had a special children's matinee of "Buster Brown" on Saturday, charging only a penny for youngsters under ten. L. J. Barr, of the Lyric, as Marshall, has switched over to a one-special-feature-a-day policy. Manager Hodgson, of the Oak Park, at Oak Park, reserved free seats for clergymen for "The Sign of the Cross." Saunder's Motion Picture theater, at Harvard, resumed the publication of its weekly program and added orchestra music for the show. Ben J. Huff, Jr., of the Empress, at Galesburg, took over the Peerless service, which has been handled by the Gaiety there. The Lyric, at Lincoln, pinned its faith to "The Spoilers" for another return date.

EVANSTOWN CENSOR BOARD RUNS SMOOTHLY.

A better grade of moving pictures is being shown in Evanston as the result of censorship by a local board of thirty women, according to a local paper. No friction with local managers has been reported. Cut-outs are made by the women who happen to be assigned to reviewing the films. They are reported to the chief of police, who is supposed to see that only the censored film or remainder is shown.

HARVEY'S HEAVY LICENSE FEE.

Exhibitors in Harvey have submitted to the city council a long list of Illinois towns where the license fee for moving picture theaters is but $50 a year. This, they tell the officials, is an argument for reducing the fee in Harvey from $200 a year.

DISLIKE SUNDAY SHOWS.

"Without a dissenting vote" the members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union in Galesburg went on record as protesting against Sunday moving picture shows.

PICTURES HASTEN LEARNING.

The use of moving pictures in schools for study work will cut down the term of learning by three years, according to Dr. Henry S. Curtis in an address before the school teachers of Joliet.

OTHER ILLINOIS ITEMS.

As a prologue to the serial "Runaway June," the Barrison theater at Waukegan had a local feature, "Waukegan June," a mysterious young woman, conducted by the mayor, met all the prominent people in Waukegan. These meetings were filmed by R. H. Beazley, Universal camera man. Patrons were challenged to guess the identity of the young woman, who was a resident of Waukegan.

Eugene Hoermann and Benjamin Eberhart, of Manhattan, recently were in Chicago purchasing equipment for the new Hoermann theater, which has been under construction at Manhattan.

Frenk Hejna, whose Pastime theater, at Coal City, recently was destroyed by fire, and James Pavlis, have formed a partnership and have opened a moving picture show in the opera house at Coal City.

W. W. McCreery, of Benton, has been making arrangements to erect a one-story brick, steel and concrete theater building. It will seat, with gallery, between 1,200 and 1,500 persons. It will be opened about Aug. 1.

The Lyric theater, on Seventh street, in East Moline, has been opened by Carl Dick, of East Moline, and John Helble, of Davenport, Ia., as a feature moving picture theater.

Manager C. F. Windt, of the Dundee Opera House, at Dundee, has secured the Eggler Building, at Main and First streets, in Dundee, and has converted it into a moving picture theater.

Manager Cochran, of the Main theater, at Carmi, has been contemplating two feature nights instead of one, each week.

Manager David Boos has opened the new Star theater, at Oregon. He expects to play a great many of the multiple reel features.

The Maywood theater, at Maywood, has been taken over by A. Hendrickson, who was manager of the Rich theater, at that place.

The Plough, Conners & Koffman Co., of Chicago, has been incorporated with capital stock of $2,400, to do an amusement business. The incorporators are Claud R. Plough, John T. Conners and Harry D. Koffman.

Charles Costley, of Weldon, has purchased a moving picture show at Onarga.

R. L. Blake has sold his Rex moving picture theater at Chenoa to a firm from Effingham, Ill.

Dreamland theater, in the north end of Princeton, has closed.

The United States Motion Picture Company, of Chicago, has been incorporated with capital stock of $100,000, to do a general motion picture business. The incorporators are F. C. McLarahan, E. Veirs and J. S. McClure.

Monk Brothers have remodeled the opera house at Plymouth, in which their moving picture theater is located.

John Schon has succeeded William Hoffman as operator for the Majestic theater at Kewanee. Hoffman goes to take charge of the projection at W. J. West's new house in Galesburg.

Charles Pacini and William Trieb, of Kenosha, Wis., have rented the Carpenter Building at Harvard, started an addition to increase the room, and will operate a high-grade moving picture theater.

Two moving picture shows were too many for the population of Piper City, and the one at the Masonic Opera House has been discontinued.

Tyrone Power was the guest of the Evanston Drama Club, of Evanston, at a production of the film "Aristocracy," in which he appeared. It had been announced that he would speak from the stage, but he evidently had not been forewarned, as he stated that he had nothing to say.

The new art border used in the advertising of the Princess theater at Galesburg features the mirror screen used by that house.

Manager Denny of Dreamland theater at Roodhouse gave away a boy's auto to one of twelve contestants.

E. O. Laroche of Papineau has discontinued his moving picture show at Martinton.

Under a new policy the Playhouse at Oak Park will present one feature photoplay at each performance in connection with its vaudeville.

PLUMBERS PIQUED.

A paper published in the interests of the plumbers is objecting to film comedies which show the plumber going back after his tools or making a blunder which floods the basement. It takes these travesties quite as seriously as did the policeman-censors who cut out all scenes showing an officer helping himself from a peanut stand (ridiculing constituted authority?) and calls them a direct injustice.

Instead of producing films that will educate the public in practical sanitation, the paper says, "the moving picture folks are deliberately wasting thousands of dollars to miseducate the popular mind." It urges the passage of resolutions, condemning such pictures and their forwarding to the companies making such releases.

THE BIG SUFFRAGE PICTURE IN LOUISVILLE.

"Your Girl and Mine," the Selig suffrage production, which is owned by the National American Woman Suffrage Association, was shown to packed houses at the Alamo Theater on January 27, 28 and 29. The local suffrage association worked hard to stir up interest in the big production. During the days the film was on exhibit leaders of the local association were stationed in the lobby of the theater and distributed badges, literature, etc., on the subject of equal suffrage. Professor R. P. Halleck, one of the most brilliant local scholars, made an address at the theater on the subject of equal suffrage. He made a point of the fact that the film in no way exaggerated conditions, and stated that every law brought into the play is written on the statute books of many states. Leaders of the local body sold and distributed tickets from their headquarters and through workers, a special agreement on a percentage basis having been effected with the owners of the film and the theater proprietors. A number of large theater parties were given by leading society women of Louisville. Applause and even loud cheering were heard on several occasions, and many persons surrendered to the cause and are now warm suffragists. The pictures were the subject of more discussion, argument, etc., than any pictures ever before seen in the city and undoubtedly created new movie patrons. The Cavalier, a society department of the Louisville Herald, one of the leading daily papers, drew attention in many personal and other news notes to the big play.

AN ADVERTISING MAN'S FILM.

The Ideal, West Broadway and Broadway theaters, of Louisville, recently showed, through the courtesy of the True-Ad Club, of this city, the clever moving picture film entitled "Mr. Noad's Adless Day," a picture which shows a series of comic incidents and entanglements that would occur "If Nobody Ever Advertised." The pictures featured the adventures of Mr. Noad, a gentleman who did not believe in advertising. The pictures were also shown at a big dinner given by the True-Ad club at Watterson Hotel. Merle Sidener, chairman of the National Vigilance Committee, of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, and several other prominent speakers were present at the meeting. The film brought out strongly a number of the remarks of the speakers and was received with much merriment on the part of the 200 Louisville business men present at the dinner.

IN LOUISVILLE.

The Manring theater, of Middlesboro, Ky., recently showed "Neptune's Daughter," in which Annette Kellerman takes the leading role. This is one of the finest pictures ever seen at the big mountain town and the management was rather elated over getting the pictures.

"A Fool There Was," the big Box Office Attraction, made a wonderful appeal to the patrons of the Novelty Theater. D. Levenson, manager and proprietor of the theater, has had so many calls asking that the picture be shown again that he is trying to make arrangements to do so.

L. J. Dittmar, manager of the Majestic Amusement Company, has options on three pieces of property upon which he expects to erect airdomes in the spring. These airdomes, if built, will be in the suburbs and will show slides advertising the Majestic theatre.

The Owl Feature Film Company has moved its offices from the second to the third floor of the Wayne building and will occupy the entire floor, according to Manager LeCompte.

The S. & P. Film Supply Company has purchased the Virginia theatre, a suburban house at Indianapolis, and the Royal theatre, which is a downtown house. C. C. McDonald is in charge of the two houses and was in Louisville recently making arrangements with Fred Sheldon.

Enforces Old Sunday Law

Circuit Judge Charles Kerr, of Lexington, Ky., Instructs Grand Jury to Investigate Violations of Sunday Law by Motion Picture Shows and Ball Games—Sunday Opening an Indictable Offense, but Law Was Generally Considered Obsolete —May Be Repealed.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Special Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

IN accordance with instructions of Circuit Judge Charles Kerr, of Lexington, Ky., given at the opening of the criminal term of court several weeks ago, the grand jury is now investigating violations of the Sunday law in the operation of motion picture shows and baseball games. In his charge Judge Kerr took the ground that every time a motion picture theater was opened on Sunday an indictable offense was committed. He emphasized the fact that it was not in the province of the Grand Jury to pass on the wisdom of any law, and that the jurymen had no option but to indict under the statutes as they found them. It has been said that more people attend the picture shows on Sunday than are in the church pews. Judge Kerr also declared that baseball games on Sunday are likewise contrary to the law. A number of picture show employes were recently before the Grand Jury. The moving picture men are somewhat at a loss as to just what to do in the case. The Sunday closing laws are generally considered dead letter laws and are not enforced. It is possible that moving picture men of the state may make an attempt at the next meeting of the Kentucky Legislature to bring about a repeal of the old law. The matter will undoubtedly be brought up before the April meeting of the Moving Picture Exhibitors' League of Kentucky.

LOUISVILLE STREET CAR CARDS USED TO BOOST THEATER

Fred Dolle Uses Novel Advertising to Draw Spectators to Shows.

The latest development in moving picture circles of Louisville is advertising moving picture houses by street car cards. The idea is new and original and came from the big brain of Fred Dolle, of the Broadway Amusement Company, which operates a number of houses in Louisville. Several months ago Mr. Dolle made an attempt to get two cards in each car, one at the front of the car and one at the rear, so that people's eyes would be caught either on entering or leaving the car. Side cards in his opinion would not have half the advertising value of the front or rear card. He failed in getting the space he wanted for the Walnut street theater, but has just closed a deal whereby the Alamo theater gets three-eighths of the entire right-hand, front cards in the street cars of Louisville. These cards will be seen on the Second and Fourth street cars and on the big east and west carriers. The announcement on Monday, February 1, read: "Favorite Stars, in Famous Plays, watch this space for weekly announcements." Down each side of the card was a line reading "The Perfect Picture Theater." Mr. Dolle said he intended to carry the full week's announcements of plays to be shown at the Alamo Theater in this space and he was practically certain that the movement would show results. The uniqueness of the idea has struck a resounding note already in the minds of many "movie" patrons, according to rumor.

GROWTH AND CHANGE IN THE PICTURE BUSINESS.

A decided change has been worked in the moving picture business of Louisville during the past year. A few months ago it was customary to give four or possibly five reels for ten cents. Now, however, a number of the houses are giving six to eight reels for ten cents and the class of the productions is far superior to that shown last season. Good pictures, well advertised and in which the star is well known, draw good crowds. It has been noted lately that the crowds are following the stars and the advertisements closer than formerly and no one house is getting the best of the deal by any means. One house is packed one day and only half filled the next because the fellow in the next block is showing a star attraction. In fact the business is getting around more and more to the way in which regular legitimate theatrical productions are handled.

JULIUS STERN, THE GUEST OF COLONEL FRED LEVY.

Julius Stern, of New York, manager of the Imp and Victor film studios, was recently in Louisville visiting Col. Fred Levy, who is connected with the Keith interests. Mr. Stern is one of the prominent motion picture men in the country, and shows such stars as King Baggot, Ben Wilson, Violet Mersereau, Hobart Henley, Mary Fuller and William Garwood. He arranged for "Neptune's Daughter," "Traffic in Souls," and many other well-known pictures which have been seen in this city.

OTHER LOUISVILLE NOTES.

The Walnut theater issued a number of complimentary tickets for the great moving serial of "Runaway June." These tickets were good for one admission on the commencement day, which was Wednesday, Jan. 27. The Spencer Amusement Company is a firm believer in packing the house at all costs for the first picture of a serial. If a good crowd gets interested during the first installment of a serial it is practically an easy proposition to keep up interest by running the serial story in the local newspapers.

Saturday morning pictures at the Mary Anderson theater, for children, are being run regularly and will in all probability pick up considerably as soon as the weather improves. During the past two months cold weather, snow and slush has been encountered steadily and the little tots are kept under shelter. "How Motion Pictures Are Made" is one of the unusual films which was recently shown for the edification of the little ones. "The Sleeping Beauty," a three-reel fairy tale; "The Bud, the Leaf and the Flower," "Insects that Mimic," "Submarine Mysteries," and several interesting comedies have been shown lately.

J. G. Conner, representing the Thanhouser Film Corporation, of New York, was recently in Louisville from Indianapolis, in the interests of "Zudora," the big serial production. By special arrangement with the management of the Walnut theater a number of newspaper men, exhibitors and other moving picture interests were present at a private showing of the tenth installment of "Zudora." On the strength of the exhibition Mr. Conner closed deals with the Clifton theater, of Louisville, Victoria, of New Albany, and the Arista, of Lebanon, and said that a number of other moving picture men were about to close for the pictures.

R. D. Stamler, of Walton, Ky., recently purchased the Wonderland theater, of Falmouth, Ky., from C. W. Kellum. The theater is to be remodeled, a larger screen installed and also a new electric machine.

Edgar Duncan, owner of the Idle Hour theater, of Uniontown, Ky., and D. P. Curry, proprietor of the Star theater, have reached an agreement whereby the two houses have been merged and the business is now handled at the Idle Hour theater and the Star is dark.

Herbert Tischendorf, of Mt. Vernon, Ind., has taken the management of the Princess Theater, of Madisonville, Ky. Mr. Tischendorf is an experienced moving picture man and a real, live hustler.

Ball a Big Success

First Annual Ball of Boston Moving Picture Operators' Union a Brilliant Affair—Prominent Political and Artistic People Present—Hazel Dawn with President James E. Burk Leads Grand March—Committee in Charge of Floor.

By Edwin H. McCloskey, Special Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

REPRESENTATIVES of Governor David I. Walsh and Mayor James McCurley and actors and actresses playing in and around Boston were the guests of honor at the first annual ball of the Boston Moving Picture Operators' Union, which was held in Convention Hall, corner of St. Botolph and Garrison streets, Back Bay, last Friday evening. This initial social affair has been pronounced a tremendous success by the committee in charge.

Duty prevented the personal attendance of the governor and mayor. State Senator Edward C. R. Bagley represented the governor, while City Councillor William H. Woods conveyed the respects of Mayor Curley.

A feature of the affair was the continuous rattle of clappers, which had been given as favors to all. The noise of the rattle added to the merriment of the evening and made the hall sound like an immense telegraph room with a thousand keys in operation.

The grand march began at midnight and was led by James F. Burke, president of the organization, and Miss Hazel Dawn, who was playing in "The Debutante" at the Colonial theater.

President Burke acted as floor director and was ably assisted by John W. Spence of the Scenic Temple, Cambridge. Bernard McGaffihan of Winthrop Hall, Roxbury, was chief of aids, with the following corps of assistants: F. E. Parker, F. McCollum, J. J. Sullivan, P. Cowan, J. Hookailo, L. Westfield, H. Holbrook, William Gilbert, M. A. Kaitz, S. A. Chisholm, L. Freedman, A. MacKenzie, F. Calif, J. Rosen, O. Malcomb and F. Costello.

The ball committee deserves an immense amount of credit for the success of the affair. This committee comprised W. H. Benoit, of Congress Hall, South Boston, chairman; Joseph Cifre of Gordon's Olympia, Boston; Bernard McGaffigan of Winthrop Hall, Roxbury; J. Fullick of Keith's Bijou Dream, Boston; John W. Spence of the Scenic Temple, Cambridge; Morris Adelson of Tremont Temple, Boston; Morris Rothenberg of the Crescent Gardens theater, Revere; John B. Williams, business agent; James F. Burke of Gordon's theater, Chelsea, and Edward Hoyt of the National theater, Boston.

ASKS FOR LOCAL CENSORSHIP BOARD IN BOSTON.

At the regular monthly luncheon of the Massachusetts Federation of Progressive Women, which was held at the Hotel Brunswick, Boston, Miss May L. Hall, chairman of the legislative committee, urged the passage of a bill providing that a committee be appointed to censor moving picture films, shows, etc. The bill urged by Miss Hall will force Mayor Curley of Boston to select an unpaid committee of three members from a list of names submitted by the Chamber of Commerce, the trustees of the Boston Public Library and the school committee. The bill provides that each of these bodies may submit three names. If this committee decides that a film is obscene, indecent, immoral or tends to injure the morals of the community, the mayor will be forced to demand the elimination of the objectionable parts.

R. L. CUPPAIGE WINS PRIZE.

R. L. Cuppaige of No. 6 Crystal street, Worcester, Mass., has been declared the winner of the $25 prize offered by the Boston American for the best moving picture scenario. The title of the photoplay is "Saved by the Angelus." The scenes are laid in Normandy in the eighteenth century.

BIG BOWLING BY BAY STATE PICTURE MEN.

The Bowling team of the Massachusetts Motion Picture Exhibitors' League was defeated at Wakefield by a team captained by "Charlie" Hodgdon of the Princess theater. The score was 1,496 to 1,436. A return match will be run off at the Scollay square alleys, Boston, in the near future. The individual scores were as follows: Wakefield—Roach, 297; Sharp, 270; Ramsdell, 307; Stewart, 359, and Hodgdon, 263; making a total of 1,496. Exhibitors' League—Harry F. Campbell of the Box Office Attraction Company, 256; Manager Cohee of Gordon's theater, Lynn, 344, Samuel Grant of the Eastern Theaters Company, 287; Arthur Lord of the Scollay Square Olympia, 290, and Ernest H. Horstmann, president of the league, 258; totaling 1,336.

ROYAL TO OPEN IN WORCESTER.

One of the most up-to-date photoplay theaters in New England is scheduled to open in the near future. This is the Royal theater on Main street, near Chandler street, Worcester, Mass. The building was designed by Architect O. C. S. Ziroli, who has given theater construction considerable study. A large roomy entrance is topped by a three-story arch of ornamental design, which will be studded with electric lights bearing the name of the house in colored lamps. The floor has an unusual pitch, which enables the patrons to see the screen from any angle. Below the first floor on the west side of the building are two lounging rooms for patrons. Comfortable chairs are to be installed and the walls are now being tinted and decorated. It is planned to place a monster electric sign on the front of the building. Fred J. McAloon is the manager of the new house.

WOBURN TO HAVE NEW THEATER.

The city of Woburn, Mass., is to have a new moving picture theater, according to agreements that have been drawn up for the sale of a piece of land in the center of the city on Main and Union streets, to Hiram M. Rambach of Boston. The architect is A. J. Carpenter, Jr., of Boston. The building will be a modern two-story brick block, with accommodations for five stores in front and offices on the second floor. The entrance to the theater will be on the ground floor from Main street. The seating capacity of the house will exceed 1,000.

REAL PICTURES UNDER DIFFICULTIES.

"Dick" Sears, New England cameraman for the Hearst-Selig Pictorial Weekly, has made some excellent moving pictures of the Canadian Pacific Railroad bridge which was blown up at Macadam Junction, N. B. Pictures were also made of Captain Werner Horne, the dynamiter. The weather was 20 degrees below zero and Dick did not notice that his ears were frozen until railroad officials called it to his attention. Until his advent at the scene, no pictures had been made of the dynamited bridge, as all photographers feared to photograph the damage, as they were afraid that they would be arrested and held as prisoners of war. Dick realized that he could not make realistic picture on the Maine end of the bridge and ventured to the Canadian side. The officials were forced to push through snow, which was neck deep, in their efforts to reach him, but this did not trouble the cameraman, as he kept on grinding the machine. He rushed some of the scenes across the border and hid them. When he returned to his camera he was held up by the Canadian officials and detained, only to be released in a short time.

Charles Barolet has resigned as a roadman for the United Film Service. He contemplates a trip to California, where he will attend the Panama-Pacific Exposition.

A NEW SCENARIO CONTEST

Boston Evening Record Offers Two Small Sums for Suffrage Picture Scenarios.

A prize of $75 has been offered by the Boston Evening Record for the best scenario or sketch for a moving picture play, illustrating by dramatic action the justice, the need and the benefit of woman suffrage. A second prize of $50 is also offered. This contest is run by the paper in conjunction with the Massachusetts Women's Suffrage Association. All scripts must be restricted to one reel. The winning drama will be produced and released through the United Film Service. All scenarios must be submitted to the Women's Suffrage Scenario Contest Editor, Boston Evening Record, before March 2. When the scenario is submitted a sealed envelope should be enclosed, on the outside of which is written the title of the scenario and a number. The full name and adress of the author should be enclosed in this envelope. The judges, who will award the prizes, will be Frank R. Cushman, dramatic editor of the Record; Mrs. Gertrude Halliday Leonard, president of the Massachusetts Woman's Suffrage Association, and a third person to be chosen by these two.

NATION-WIDE TEMPERANCE CAMPAIGN TO BE STARTED

Anti-Saloon League Buys "John Barleycorn"—To Be Shown in Every City in the Land.

A nation-wide temperance campaign by moving pictures is to start in Massachusetts under the auspices of the Anti-Saloon League. It is said that this will be the forerunner of one of the greatest attacks ever delivered at the liquor traffic. It is the first time that an entire moving picture show has been installed to promote interest in a saloonless nation. The Massachusetts State League has secured the state rights to the picturized drama of Jack London's famous story, "John Barleycorn." It is planned to exhibit the film in every city and town in the state and a lecture will be given with each exhibition. It has not been announced where the first performance will be given.

In commenting on the new campaign, Superintendent Arthur J. Davis said: "The fight against liquor must be brought up to the minute. We have decided to use the motion picture method of bringing the temperance problem squarely to public attention and in the selection of John Barleycorn, we have a film, which the Personal Liberty League, consisting of supporters of a license system for intoxicating liquors, offered the Bosworth Film Company, in writing, $25,000 to keep it out of six states where prohibition was an issue until after the state elections last year. The purpose of the league at the present time is to provide an evening entertainment free of charge. The first performances will be among the churches."

OTHER NEW ENGLAND ITEMS.

Manager Edward J. Farrell of the New England office of the General Film Company has recovered from a severe attack of rheumatism.

Norman D. Merrill, who has been in charge of the Maine territory for the Box Office Attraction Company, has resigned in order that he might devote his entire time to a theater which he is building.

Several prominent moving picture houses have contracted with Manager

Harry F. Campbell for the features of the Box Office Aattraction Company, which have made such a hit in this territory. Among them are the Universal Theater, Fitchburg, Mass.; Casino theater, Taunton, Mass.; Empire theater, New London, Conn., and the Opera House at Belfast, Maine.

The Universal Theater Company of Fitchburg, Mass., has been incorporated for $9,000. The incorporators are Harry Roberts, Samuel V. Grand, Max Tuck and Max Rosenberg.

The Premier theater, on Merrimac street, Lowell, Mass., has been remodelled and renovated by the new owners, A. S. Wolf and M. H. P. Wolf. A new lobby has been installed and the seating capacity has been increased to 700. The house opened last week and will be known as Wolf's theater. It will be devoted exclusively to photoplays. All the best features wil be used.

D. S. Denault of the Plaza theater, Fall River, Mass., and Manager R. L. McIntyre of the Henderson Circuit of Vermont, were among the visitors to Manager Ed Farrell of the General Film Company during the week. Both claim that business is holding up fairly well, despite rumors from other sections that it is falling off. The greater part of the loss is attributed to the poor weather.

The Essanay productions, featuring that famous comedian, Charles Chaplin, are proving to be great favorites with New England exhibitors and photoplay fans. The first release, "His New Job," drew large audiences to the Scollay Square Olympia during the past week.

Manager Samuel Bernfield of the New England Pathe Exchange entertained several members of the legislature and a number of state officials at a private runoff of the Pathe News, showing pictures of the inaugural exercises of Governor David I. Walsh of Massachusetts. All expressed favorable comment on the work of Cameraman Hutchinson.

Manager J. A. Eslow of the New England Universal Exchange and Mrs. Eslow are planning a trip to California in March as the guests of President Carl Laemmle of the Universal Film Service. They intend to visit the exposition grounds and Universal City.

Samuel L. Webber is now directing the destinies of the Globe theater, Springfield, Mass.

Glassman Bros. have purchased the Princess theater at Manchester, N. H., from P. J. Sullivan of Hartford, Conn. They have also taken over Mr. Sullivan's contract with Manager Fred B. Murphy for the entire program of the United Film Service. The playhouse will hereafter be known as the Life theater.

Manager Al Somerbee of the Bowdoin Square theater, Boston, has announced that he will run the Humanology production, "The Price He Paid," during the entire week of March 1.

Louis Boas of Loew's Academy of Music at Fall River, Mass., has had the interior of his house thoroughly renovated and redecorated during the past week. Mr. Boas has contracted for the use of ten features released through the United Film Service, one to be run each week.

The Brookline (Mass.) Friendly Society, whose educational shows for children are proving to be a great success in New England's richest town, announce that their premier attraction for the performance on St. Valentine's Day will be the Warners' Feature picturized drama, "Hansel and Gretel."

Fred B. Murphy, proprietor of the New England office of the United Film Service, at No. 209 Pleasant street, Boston, intends to supply free service to any charitable society or institution contemplating a moving picture show on Washington's Birthday.

Several changes in managerial berths have been noted during the week. Joseph Roth has resigned as manager of the Park theater, Boston, to become special representative of the Famous Players Company of New England. He is succeeded by George K. Robinson, formerly of the Victoria theater, Lawrence, Mass. I. M. Mosher, who recently resigned as manager of the Franklin Park theater, Dorchester, succeeds Mr. Robinson at Lawrence. Prior to his connection with the Dorchester playhouse, a few months ago, Mr. Mosher was affiliated with the Keith interests.

Harry Harris, manager of the Crown theater, Hartford, Conn., spent two days in Boston last week, touring the exchanges and booking features for the Delaney Amusement Company.

William Hart has tendered his resignation as manager of the Mutual Film Service office at Springfield, Mass. He is now associated with the General Film Company, working under District Manager J. J. Unger.

George A. Hickey, road man from the New England office of the United Film Service, has returned from a trip through the Connecticut Valley and reports that business conditions are starting to improve with great rapidity.

New England exhibitors have missed the smiling countenance of Louis Mayer, New England manager of the American Feature Company. Mr. Mayer is in New York convalescing from an operation for appendicitis.

The Park theater, Taunton, Mass., which has always been devoted to stock productions, has joined the moving picture ranks. Manager Malley has arranged with Fred B. Murphy for the use of United Film Service.

Joseph Mack is now representing the World Film Corporation, being attached to their New England office. Mr. Mack is well known both to exhibitors and exchange men. He was recently connected with the Pathe Exchange.

No Sunday Opening Yet

Mayor of Waterville, Maine, Orders Theaters to Be Closed Sundays—Sentiment in City Thought to Be Predominantly in Favor of Broad-Minded Treatment of Question—Old Blue Law of the State Compelled City Official to Recognize Complaint of Intolerant Persons.

By John P. Flanagan, Special Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

DISPLAYED at the windows of moving picture theaters in Waterville last Sunday was this notice: "No pictures, by order of the Mayor." The stopping of the shows was the result of a protest by certain citizens. As the laws of the state at present forbid moving picture entertainments on Sunday, it was necessary for the mayor to heed the protest made.

As stated in the Moving Picture World a few weeks ago, Waterville had grown tolerant of Sunday moving pictures.

A few weeks ago, pending arrangements for starting its "Turn to the Right" meetings for a third season, the Y. M. C. A. got several Waterville Sunday schools together on the proposition of presenting the film "From the Manger to the Cross" at the opera house. This was done, about 1,000 Sunday school children witnessing the production. The expenses were borne by the respective Sunday schools.

Following this, J. J. Pray, an exhibitor, claiming that the giving of this program as well as the "Turn to the Right" meetings was an advertisement for the opera house, announced that he would open his theater the following Sunday and did so, putting on a regular program and taking a dime collection at the door "for Belgian relief." The result was that Frank D. Robinson opened his theater on the following Sunday, and so did Arthur J. Bonsant, on Water street. No tickets were sold, but the proprietor, or ticket seller, stood at the door and said, "collection a dime," to those who attempted to enter. The refusal of one proprietor to take two pennies offered by a small boy caused the lodging of the first formal complaint.

TRAVELING OPERATORS MUST PAY TAX.

F. Otis Gould, Collector of Internal Revenue, at Old Town, when asked by your correspondent in regard to the moving picture tax on traveling moving picture operators, stated that there is a blanket tax of $10 a year on each traveling operator. "Ignorance of the law," said Mr. Gould, "is no excuse, and it is up to the moving picture operators to promptly disclose their business to me at Old Town, and pay their taxes due. I do not know when the 50 per cent. penalty will go into effect, but it is liable to be imposed at any time now."

SMALL SON OF PICTURE MAN TRAVELS.

William Leader, the 13-year-old son of Daniel J. Leader, recently manager of the Empire Theater in Portland, and president of the Maine Theatrical Managers' Protective Association, the Maine moving picture association, was found sound asleep on the front steps of the banking house of J. Pierpont Morgan, in New York City, on a recent Sunday night. William had long wanted to see Wall Street, and his thirst for the sights of New York City was not to be denied. He borrowed $15 from his home savings bank, and without permission of his father started for the big city from Rumford. He tarried in Boston a few hours and reached New York on a Saturday.

From the moment William left the train he was astonished at the number of motion picture theaters and ice cream palaces in New York. Personal investigation of these prevented him from getting to Wall Street until Sunday night, when he was "broke" and tired and hungry. In the rain, shivering with the cold, and slipping on the ice, he stood alone under the eaves of the house of J. P. Morgan & Company, and as he looked at the great, dark and deserted structure, he pondered on how many millions of dollars were tucked away in the vaults. He was found by a policeman, and soon was at the station, with interested "cops" feeding him.

His father was notified, and William said he would be glad to go back home, now that he had seen Wall Street. Mr. Leader, who is one of the most prominent moving picture men in this state, rejoices that his prodigal son has returned.

OTHER MAINE NOTES.

A lease of the Pavilion at the corner of Temple and Federal streets, Portland, has been secured from the Greely Amusement Co. by Frank Wilcox, of Montpelier, Vermont, for the purpose of establishing a new moving picture theater. It is the intention of the new management to fit up the house as an Oriental garden and be ready for a grand opening in about a week. It will be called the "New Nickel."

The new opera house at Eastport promises to be well under way later in the season.

Tuesday, February 9, was benefit night at the Bijou Theater, in Skowhegan, for the girls' basketball team.

The Royal Theater at Waterville claims to have the only concert orchestra in Maine, playing to moving pictures.

C. W. Orr, of Limerick, has just adopted Universal service, and is running three nights a week.

W. R. Dillon, proprietor of the Majestic Theater, at Brownsville Junction, has just secured "The Trey o' Hearts" from Manager Charles Stern, of the Universal Exchange at Bangor.

R. S. Randel will be the operator for a moving picture theater to be started at Belfast in the near future.

A. L. Ehrgott, manager of the General Film Company branch at Bangor, has just returned from a trip to Aroostook County.

Organization Felt

Toronto Exhibitors' Protective Association, Recently Formed, at Once Wins Signal Victory—Persuades City Architect to Grant Withheld Licenses—Amendment to Building By-Laws Approved by Property Commission and Exhibitors—Permanent Organization Formed—Officers Elected.

By David K. Billings, Special Correspondent, Moving Picture World.

THE Toronto Exhibitors' Protective Association proved its worth within three days of its inception by winning a signal victory. Immediately after the organization meeting it was decided to retain counsel and wait on the City Architect and the Property Commission with the result that, after the lawyer, Louis Heyd, had laid the case of the exhibitors before the Board, it decided to grant immediately licenses for this year to all the theaters from which they had been withheld. A series of amendments to the Building By-laws were submitted by the City Architect and approved by both the exhibitors and the Commission. The proposition of the exhibitors that they be given a year in which to make the necessary changes to their buildings was met with favor.

The amendments to the by-laws which were passed upon are briefly, as follows: ,"No building not in actual use for theatrical purposes at the time of the passing of the by-law and no building hereafter erected shall be used for such purposes until it has been made to meet the requirements of the by-law. Reconstruction must not be carried out unless it meets the requirements of the by-law.

"All moving picture theaters shall be constructed with brick walls or other incombustible material all around the auditorium, except that at the front entrance the vestibule may be cut off from the auditorium by a frame wall.

"There shall be two or more emergency exits at the front and the same number at the rear or sides, each to be three feet six inches in width. Each exit must give free and easy exit to a thoroughfare and doors must open outward and be fitted with approved panic bolts. Width of aisles and cross aisles must conform to specifications.

"Difference of level between any portion of the floor of a moving picture house and the finished grade line shall be overcome by constructing ramps inside the building having a grade not exceeding two and one-half inches to the foot, and the surface must be covered with rubber.

"All seats in the main floor of the auditorium shall not be less than thirty inches from back to back and shall have not less than twenty inches clearance with the seats up and twelve inches with the seats down. All seats except those in the boxes must be firmly secured to the floor except where the seating is of a temporary nature, where the architect may use his discretion."

The quick victory that the new association has won has already placed it on a firm foundation by bringing many new members that had before refused to join, claiming that it would die the death of its predecessors.

With the result that the meeting, which was announced to take place in last week's column, was attended by about fifty theater managers in Toronto, representing some sixty theaters. It was decided to make the association purely local for the present at least. But it is intended to set on foot a movement for several other similar organizations throughout Ontario that ultimately will be united under one central office.

The election of officers resulted in choosing Leon F. Brick, of the Garden theater, Toronto, president; George Dodds vice-president; Thomas Graseman, of the Windsor theater, secretary; W. D. Appleton, of the Maple Leaf theater, treasurer, along with an executive committee of six members.

A deputation of landlords was present and asked that owners of theaters be allowed to join the association even if they leased their buildings. They declared that in the present instance owners were as much interested in fighting the building by-laws as were the managers. It was pointed out, however, that the present case was only a chance one and that within a short time it might be necessary for the exhibitors to ask concessions from the landlords, which they would not be able to do if they had a vote in the association.

Quite a bomb was thrown into the meeting by the remarks of the president when he blamed the exhibitors themselves for most of the harsh treatment at the hand of the authorities. He appealed to the exhibitors to give the public a square deal not only in pictures but in attention and treatment in the theaters. "The moving picture business has been spoiled by too many inexperienced men whose only object has been to make money," he said.

The matter of censorship was referred to, but it was generally felt that the exhibitors had no complaint to make whatever in that line at present. Not only was it decided to place the case of the exhibitors before the City Architect, but also counsel will be retained to look after their interests at the coming session of the Ontario legislature, when important laws governing moving picture theaters and the admission of children will be considered. A discussion of the "child question" revealed the fact that several of the exhibitors had no use whatever for children in their theaters. "The kid element has done a lot of harm to moving picture theaters, and has militated against the improved standard campaign that many have been trying to further," said one well-known exhibitor.

An initiation fee of five dollars was exacted from every exhibitor in Toronto to provide funds to carry out the program until a permanent fee is decided upon. This is the first organization of exhibitors in Canada that has received the general support of practically all the exhibitors and it came at a time when it was never more needed. While business in Toronto has considerably improved in the last few weeks, it has been very bad and there is hardly a theater in the city that has more than met expenses for the last three months, with the result that most of the managers could not afford to make the changes in their theaters demanded. The new organization is an indication of an improved spirit of willingness to work together which has been conspicuously absent in Toronto exhibitors until recently.

EXCHANGE MEN IN NEED OF ORGANIZATION

Feature Film Exchange May Affiliate—Hands Tied and Being Imposed Upon.

Another moving picture organization will probably sprout in Toronto very soon. It looks as if the feature film exchanges will have to get together in order to make certain demands from the exhibitor they cannot do at present. There are fourteen exchanges in Toronto handling feature films and they are working under distinct difficulties. While the three large licensed exchanges do not pay express charges on films and make exhibitors pay for lost and damaged "paper," the feature film exchanges have not only been compelled to pay these charges, but have found it in most cases impossible to obtain redress even for damaged films. If all the exchanges can be persuaded to join together these are the first demands that will be made from the exhibitors. There is no movement on foot to raise prices, as this is deemed impossible at the present time, but all the exchangemen are beginning to feel that they can no longer afford to work at loggerheads and that for this purpose, at least, they must join hands in order to successfully compete with their larger and more powerful rivals.

SUFFRAGE PICTURE IN CANADA.

The local suffrage associations are taking steps to boost the World Film suffrage picture "Your Girl and Mine" and are trying to arrange a special exhibition of the picture for club women, the proceeds of which will be given to the Canadian Patriotic Fund to provide for families of soldiers, as at present very little money is being spent in an effort to get the vote. It is hoped by making the performance a charitable one that many people not otherwise interested can be persuaded to attend. The picture has received the complete endorsement of all the local woman suffrage associations.

OTHER TORONTO ITEMS.

Clarence Robson, formerly manager of the Crystal theater, West Toronto, has been appointed as a special representative for All Feature limited. Mr. Robson is the oldest picture exhibitor in Toronto, he having shown the pictures of the Corbett-Fitzsimmons fight in 1897. For the last five years he has managed the Crystal theater, and previous to that was in charge of road shows in Australia and South Africa.

The new Photodrome has decided to show the first of the "Made in Canada" releases of the Conness Till Film Company, and will run "On the King's Highway" the next week.

Douglas Cooper, who has been withholding the release of the Kleine picture Julius Caesar, awaiting a favorable opportunity, gave a private exhibition of the picture at the Garden theater last Wednesday, which was attended by some 200 prominent people notwithstanding that one of the worst blizzards in years raged all day. The picture will be shown at the Garden theater for the first time in Canada all next week.

General Manager Feldstein of the United Film Service, who has just returned from a trip through western Ontario, says: "I found that in the large towns and smaller cities business is practically at a standstill. London, Windsor, Woodstock, Hamilton, Berlin and Galt are not doing anything at all, while the litte towns and vilages, with perhaps one or two theaters, are doing as big business as ever they did."

OHIO LEAGUE FOR REPEAL OF STATE CENSORSHIP

League Local of Cleveland Binds Large Delegation to Columbus Convention.

By D. J. Raridan, Special Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

AT the recent meeting of Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, Local No. 1, a resolution was adopted binding a strong delegation of exhibitors to attend the Columbus Convention and demand the unqualified repeal of the censorship law. Ben J. Sawyer, as chairman of a steering committee was named to lead the Cleveland showmen in affairs at the convention.

J. W. Binder, publicity representative of the National Board of Censorship, was present at the meeting. He presented a resolution drawn up by the Pennsylvania state convention congratulating the Ohio exhibitors for their fight against censorship.

BELL PRAISES PICTURES.

"Motion pictures," says Archie Bell, dramatic critic for the Cleveland Leader, magazine writer and recognized as one of the country's more able critics, "belong to the present and to the future. It is my belief—and that of many producers, actors and managers—that far from driving the people away from the so-called 'legitimate' theater, the movie palaces are creating a brand new theater-going clientele for other theaters, one that would otherwise not have found its way to theater doors.

"Undoubtedly things are now in something of a transition stage, not yet adjusted. The movies have drawn a clientele from the other theaters because many people preferred to see a picture of William Farnum for ten cents than to see Bill Jones or Mary Smith (in person) for $2. And is it not possible that during the past season the movie men have been just a little more awake to what people want than their brothers of Broadway, who have scored so many failures?"

Paul C. Mooney has taken charge of the Cleveland exchange for the Box Office Attraction Company, maintaining offices on the sixth floor of the Columbia building. The local territory includes Ohio, Michigan and Pennsylvania. H. Z. Harris, until recently Mr. Mooney's appointment manager of the local branch, has been promoted to western manager with offices in Chicago. Mr. Mooney has been connected with the photoplay department of the Cleveland Leader for more than a year and in this capacity established friendship with exhibtors throughout the state.

OTHER OHIO NOTES.

May Require Licenses

Buffalo Board of Aldermen Considering Advisability of Examining and Licensing Moving Picture Operators—Amendment to Ordinance Proposed by Alderman Sullivan—Probable Fee for Examination and License, $5—Three Examiners May Be Appointed by Mayor.

By Billy Bison, Special Correspondent of Moving Picture World, 23 Victoria Avenue, Buffalo, N. Y.

ALDERMAN SULLIVAN of Buffalo has introduced an amendment to the ordinances of that city, regulating the operation of moving picture machines. It provides that no person under 21 years of age be permitted to run a picture apparatus; that an annual license be issued by the mayor, costing $5, and that each applicant pass an examination prepared by a committee of three to be appointed by the mayor, two of which shall be experienced moving picture operators.

SCHEME TO CALL FREIGHT CREWS FROM SHOW.

The division superintendent of the Lehigh Valley Railroad at Sayre, Pa., has arranged with the moving picture theaters there by which freight crews, while patronizing the shows, can be called to work by having their names announced on the screens. The crew dispatcher notifies the theaters that certain men are wanted and up go their names on the screens. This means the men may amuse themselves when they are in Sayre without fear of being wanted for duty and not found by the company's call boys.

ROCHESTER EXHIBITORS TO CO-OPERATE WITH CITY BOARDS.

Rochester, N. Y., exhibitors have voted to co-operate with the Public Health Association and Board of Education of that city. Garrett Smith, executive secretary of the health association, appealed to the exhibitors to aim at higher things than melodrama and comedies. Manager John H. W. Fenyvessy of the Family theater, Rochester, suggested that a series of educational slides be prepared for use in moving picture houses.

LICENSED FILM STORIES

KALEM.

THE SECRET ROOM (Special—Two Parts—Feb. 22).—As the result of his study of the occult, Dr. Wayne's mind becomes slightly unbalanced. While in the park one evening, he sees Buford, a derelict, attempt suicide. Wayne interferes and then bargains with the man for his life. The physician gives the derelict enough money to enable him to spend three months in riotous living. At the end of that period Buford is to belong to Wayne, body and soul.

Three months later, Buford appears at Wayne's home. The doctor learns that it was an unrequited love that caused Buford's downfall. A day later, Edna, the doctor's niece, arrives on a visit. When the girl meets Buford, Wayne learns that it is she whom the boy loves.

A certain room in the doctor's house is kept constantly locked. All efforts of Buford and Ethel to learn what it contains are in vain. When the knowledge does come to Buford it fills him with terror.

Wayne informs Buford that his son, a hopeless imbecile, lives in the secret room. It is his intention to use Buford's soul in an effort to cure the child's diseased brain. To Wayne's unsound mind, the plan seems entirely feasible. Despite Buford's struggles, he is placed into an hypnotic trance by Wayne. The doctor then enters his son's room to prepare him for the experiment.

But he comes too late. The boy lies sprawled upon the floor, dead. The shock restores Wayne to his normal self and he realizes the impossibility of what he had proposed doing. Waking Buford, he gives him his freedom. The misunderstanding which had caused the quarrel between the young man and Ethel is cleared away and the two are married.

SHE WOULD BE A COWBOY (Feb. 23).—Anxious to be a cowboy, Helen dresses in suitable attire and lands a job with Joe, a rancher. The latter, deeply in love with Hazel, daughter of a neighboring rancher, has Helen carry messages to the girl.

But Hazel falls in love with Helen, never suspecting the latter's real sex. At the same time, Mason, Hazel's father, suspects Helen of making love to his daughter. His cowboys mischievously suggest that he fight a duel with Helen.

They capture the latter. The cowboys' plan fills Helen and Mason with terror. Both flee. Hazel pursues Helen and discovers the latter to be a girl. Joe appears upon the scene. He learns of his "cowboy's" identity. Hazel's sense of humor eases her broken heart. She listens to the pleas of the "cowboy" and Joe, and consents to be the rancher's wife.

TOMBOYS (On same reel as foregoing—Feb. 23).—Wheeling, Jordan, Morton and Jenks take their wives to the seashore on a picnic. While their husbands are out hunting, the ladies dress in their husbands' bathing suits for a lark, and go swimming.

Mistaking the tomboys for sea lions, the men shoot at them. In terror the ladies swim out to a reef some distance from shore. The incoming tide threatens to wash them from the rocks. Their cries for help are heard and the husbands come to the rescue. Much chastened in spirit, the tomboys are glad to return to shore and don their own clothes.

OLD ISAACSON'S DIAMONDS (A Two-Part Episode of The Girl Detective Series—Feb. 24).—Three thieves break into the home of old Isaacson, a diamond broker, and rob him of his gems. The butler sees what is taking place and notifies the police. As the result, two of the men are captured after a desperate fight on the housetops. The leader, Snake Henely, escapes by hiding in a water tank.

Ruth, the girl detective, and her assistant, Warrington, whose life she had once saved, tackle the job. Under the fire of Ruth's questions, one of the prisoners confesses that Snake has the jewels. Ruth dispatches Warrington and several policemen to Snake's home. Queenie, Snake's sweetheart, foils the police by hiding the gems in a bottle containing milk.

The girl detective disguises herself as a woman of the underworld. She cleverly manages to fascinate Snake and at the same time arouses Queenie's jealousy. Her protests falling upon deaf ears, Queenie finally betrays her fickle lover.

Thus the police learn that Snake has arranged to dispose of the gems through Machson, a fence. Warrington and a number of policemen descend upon Machson's place, but again their stupidity enables Snake to escape. Once more the girl detective saves the situation. Leading the officers to Snake's hiding place she brings about his capture.

But with the recovery of old Isaacson's diamonds, Ruth finds herself confronted by a mystery which promises to be more difficult than any she has hitherto encountered.

HAM AND THE JITNEY BUS (Feb. 26)—Hungry and broke, Ham and Bud sit themselves down on a curbstone, while pondering upon ways and means of landing a meal. Both see a wallet lying on the sidewalk. With one accord they make a grab for it. The wallet contains $20. About to buy a feed Bud sees an auto, of the vintage of 1492, on sale for $15. He and Ham buy the machine and decide to operate a five-cent 'bus.

But business is bad. An idea strikes Ham. He disguises himself in feminine clothes, hoping that his beauty and flirtatious habits will attract patrons. But men steer clear of the 'bus. In desperation, Ham bodily seizes several individuals and terrorizes them into patronizing his auto.

The bus service conducted by Ham and Bud is calculated to give gray hairs to every one of their passengers. The automobile does just as it pleases, backing up a hill at sixty miles an hour, or spinning like a pinwheel whenever it tires of running on a straight line. Despite Ham's efforts, the bus winds up by plowing through a sea of mud and dumping the passengers.

When the latter finally climb to dry ground they make a dash for Ham and Bud. The two try to speed up their machine, but it blows up. When they return from their trip skyward their enraged pursuers are just a few yards away. Ham and Bud take no chances. A well near by offers the only place of concealment. With one accord they dive head first into the icy water.

THE OPEN DRAWBRIDGE (16th Episode of the "Hazards of Helen" Railroad series—Feb. 27.)—Benton, railroad detective, is assigned to run down the crooks who have been breaking into freight cars near Hobart. Helen, the telegraph operator at Hobart, supplies Benton with his first clue. Later in the day, the two see Rand and his band of river pirates rifling a box car.

While Benton holds the crooks up, Helen disables the motor of their launch. A moment's carelessness causes Benton to be overpowered by the river pirates. The desperadoes fasten him to the side ladder of the freight car with his own handcuffs.

Helen discovers the detective's peril just as the freight train starts. Making a flying leap, the girl boards the train and succeeds in rescuing Benton. As the result of her work, Rand is later captured.

The leader of the river pirates is tried and sentenced to prison. The members of his band make a desperate effort to rescue him by raising the drawbridge which the train on which he and Benton are traveling, must cross. Helen, however, frustrates this plot, although it almost costs her life.

VITAGRAPH.

WHEN SAMUEL SKIDDED (Feb. 22)—While boarding a street car, Samuel Peckham, middle-aged and well-to-do, slips, and the car starting up suddenly, throws him to the street. The only injury he suffers is a ruined suit of clothes, but his wife, Maria, insists he ought to make some money out of the mishap. She accordingly keeps at him until he finally writes to the railroad company demanding $50,000 damages for serious injuries resulting from the company's carelessness. Maria then rehearses Samuel on walking lame and answering possible questions. The Company's Claim Agent pays them a visit and offers to settle for $100 cash. Samuel is about to jump at the chance, but his wife butts in and tells the agent, "$50,000 or we sue!" The agent, with an ironical grin, walks out. Shortly afterwards the company doctor examines Samuel, and although he can find nothing the matter, is greatly puzzled to discover that the slightest touch apparently causes the patient excruciating pain. He notifies the company he suspects crooked work and a young lady detective is set on the trail. She starts a flirtation with Samuel when he limps from the house to attend a poker party, and he follows her. They go to a tango restaurant and have several dances. Samuel stays so late he has to enter his home through his bedroom window by means of a ladder. The lady detective's report of all this convinces the company that the case is fraudulent, and a plot is laid to trap the pair. Suit is instituted and at the trial the company's lawyer makes Samuel walk up and down to show the court how badly he is crippled, then has him show how well he walked before the accident. Samuel, without thinking, steps out in a natural manner. That settles it, and after Samuel has paid the costs the judge orders the case thrown out of court. To cap the climax he is confronted by the lady detective and her remarks cause Maria to tell Samuel that if she were the judge she would send him to jail for 100 years and make it an indeterminate sentence.

THE STILL SMALL VOICE (Special—Two Parts—Feb 23).—The influence of Musa, a wildly beautiful dumb girl, upon every citizen of Gallows Gulch, a rough Western mining town, is almost uncanny. They fear, yet hate her, and claim she has "the evil eye." John Coen and Hapgood, miners, endeavor to make advances to her, but are repulsed. One day Mr. Stingo, a sky-pilot, reads to Musa a letter announcing that she has come into a large inheritance. Musa thinks lightly of it, but Hapgood tells John the girl is rich and he intends marrying her. John, however, has a few remarks on that order to make himself. They quarrel fiercely and Musa hearing the racket, opens the log cabin door and stands watching with a tigerish expression of delight the two men struggling. Thev see her and stop their fighting. She disappears and the two men agree that whoever wins the girl must divide the fortune with the other. John, pretending great love, asks her to be his wife. She seems about to consent when Hapgood appears and with a great show of jealousy, fakes up a quarrel. John apparently comes out victor and Musa consents to marry him. She discovers their deceit, however, when she overhears their conversation later, in which John is pointing out how easy it is going to be for them to secure the fortune. Filled with uncontrollable fury she seizes a knife and buries it in John's back; then disappears. Hapgood is found with the body and accused of murder. A hasty trial by "Judge Lynch" results in his being sentenced to hang at dawn next day. Musa, skulking around the building, hears the verdict and it awakens within her breast the still, small voice of Conscience. After a terrible mental struggle in which the voice of her guilty conscience predominates, she goes to the gallows tree before the dawn and leaving a note with the simple words, "I done it. Musa," hangs herself. On finding the body Hapgood and his guards realize that the "still, small voice" has taken Justice into its own hands.

THE YOUNG MAN WHO FIGGERED (Feb. 24).—Bobby Tucker, while strolling about the big P. & A. Railroad Station, spies Nan Tubbs, a charming young lady whom her father and mother are very anxious to marry off to some rich young man. While waiting for a train she smiles at Bobby and he smiles back. Papa catches them at it, and horrified, hustles her away, after delivering a severe lecture on the subject of flirting. A few minutes later Pa Tubbs happens to pick up a sheet of paper on which Bobby had been industriously "figgering," and finds written on it, "My profit —— $50,000." Deciding the young man must be a millionaire in disguise, Pa. Tubbs immediately makes amends by introducing his daughter to Bobby, who is rather bewildered, but tells them, "My father is Major-Gen. Tucker." This augments the young man's prestige, and he is invited to spend a week at the Tubb's home. During his visit Pa makes the unpleasant discovery that Bobby's father is a Major-General in the Salvation Army, and that the "figgers" on the sheet of paper represent Bobby's profits IF he wins a lottery ticket. After calling the young man a fraud, Papa angrily chases Bobby from the place. Next morning Tubbs learns from his newspaper that Bobby Tucker is the lucky winner of the $50,000 lottery prize. Papa and Mama now throw another kind of fit. They rush to Nan's room and find her gone! A note left on the table notifies them that Nan and Bobby have eloped. After a moment of dumb surprise they hear the young newlyweds returning. Pa's warm greeting almost takes Bobby off his feet. Bobby, as yet unaware that he has won the lottery, is tremendously puzzled by it all, but simply smiles.

THE WORTHIER MAN (Feb. 25).—Bob Hall, a reckless, happy-go-lucky cowman, defends Echo, an Indian maid from the undesirable attentions of a tenderfoot suffering from too much fire-water. In the resultant mix-up the tenderfoot is wounded and but for the arrival of Jack, the sheriff and a friend of Bob, summary vengeance would have been meted out to Bob. In due time the tenderfoot recovers from his wound and readily exonerates Bob from all blame. The sheriff writes Bob, who is in hiding, to that effect. In the meantime Bob has become infatuated with Echo, and taken her to his cabin. He soon tires of her, however, and the sheriff's letter breaks the last thread binding him to the Indian girl. He abandons her. At the ranch of Rutter, a friend, Bob finds the sheriff and is introduced to Mary, a niece of Rutter's. He falls in love with her, proposes and, attracted by the handsome cowboy, she accepts him. Although Jack is in love with Mary himself he manfully congratulates the two. Exultant at his success Bob gets drunk, calls on Mary in this state and makes a scene. Next day, humbly repentant, he calls on Mary for forgiveness. He is told she is out and he finds her upon the brow of a high bluff. She accepts his apology and leaves him. Echo, who has been a witness of the meeting, steps up to him and begs him to come back to her. He spurns her, they struggle and he is shot, falling backwards over the cliff. Mary is suspected of having something to do with Bob's death, but in an almost supernatural manner, Echo's part in the crime is revealed. The little Indian confesses a.., and plunges to her death in the lake. On learning of Bob's relations with the little Indian girl, Mary is dumfounded at his perfidy, realizes that Jack is the worthier man, and when, a few months later he asks her to be his wife, she gladly consents.

A MAN OF PARTS (Feb. 26).—When Eb applies at Joshua Hicks' store for a job he makes an instantaneous hit with Emmy, the proprietor's daughter, and at the same time a deadly enemy of Bill Swiggles, the town bully, who is in love with Emmy. He gets the job, largely through the girl's influence. Eb joins the local Dramatic Society, where, to Bill's huge disgust, his unusual ability gains him the election to Manager of the Annual Play, which is held in Hicks' barn. Eb chooses himself and Emmy for the principals in the cast, but strong objections force him to draw lots. The lucky ones prove to be a couple of old maids, Bill Swiggles and a farmhand. At the rehearsals, Eb proves such a drastic manager, the players, led by Bill, plot to ruin the performance. On the night of the play they all fail to show up, and Bill hides overhead in the hayloft to watch the result. Eb is in a frenzy for a while, but the sight of the impatient audience stirs him to action. He desperately seizes Hank, the stagehand, and orders him to put on the hero's clothes, then gets into the heroine's clothes himself. With a small boy as curtain-raiser, Hank and Eb step out onto the stage. The two carry out their parts in the play then each makes a getaway behind the scenes, changing quickly to suit the next character, and appearing on the stage again, play that part. Thus the two successfully play every character in the piece, although Hank is rather coy on the love-making business. It all ends beautifully amid tremendous applause. Bill, green with rage and envy, sees Eb and Hank almost mobbed by the congratulatory audience. He gets excited, steps on a loose board, and is precipitated with a big pile of hay into the midst of the people below. Eb accuses him of trying to bust up the show, and as the crowd hustles Bill off to the town pump for a ducking, Eb and Emmy clasp each other in a real lover's embrace.

A DAUGHTER'S STRANGE INHERITANCE (Broadway Star Feature—Three Parts—Feb. 27).—Through his friend, Dr. Adams, William Randolph secures an introduction to Mlle. Lucille, a vaudeville tight-wire performer, whom he greatly admires. He is warned that Lucille is a slave to drink, but unheeding, falls in love with the actress and proposes. She refuses him, preferring her work to married life. Later, while under the influence of liquor, she is injured in a fall and forced to give up her profession. Randolph again proposes and is accepted. Adams warns him that his children will inherit a tendency to drink, but Randolph assures the doctor he will cure Lucille, and marries her. The craving for liquor returns shortly after her daughter's birth and Lucille, after consuming more than her weakened constitution can stand, dies in her husband's arms. Sixteen years later Margaret is dismissed from Wyomossing Seminary because—as the principal explains it—she seems possessed of a double personality. At times she is perfectly normal, and at others reckless and exhibits a vicious temper. Randolph, greatly worried, watches the girl closely. He is heartbroken to find that she is taking liquor on the sly. Adams arrives on a visit, is told of Margaret's peculiar mental condition, and in company with her father, takes Margaret to the huge sanitarium of which he is now the head. Her father returns home and she attempts to go back with him but is told she must stay. The first clash of wills results in victory for Adams. He uses hypnotic influences on the girl, then shows her by the power of terrible examples, the results of giving way to weaknesses. Margaret returns home cured, and the sight of the derelicts still fresh in her mind, she begs her father to stop when she sees him raise a glass of wine to his lips. He does so, with a silent prayer of thankfulness for his daughter's complete recovery from the curse of her strange inheritance.

SELIG.

THE RED BLOOD OF COURAGE (Special—Two Parts—Feb. 22).—Professor Duane, an Ethnologist, and his assistant, Roscoe Harding, plan a journey into the wilds of Hindustan. Harding is in love with Lydia, the daughter of Professor Duane, and they are engaged to be married. Lieutenant Tavish, a British army officer, is attracted to Lydia and plans to take her away from Harding by fair means or foul. Tavish plans to ruin Harding by making him appear to be guilty of a crime, feeling sure that in such case Lydia will renounce him, and then he can advance his suit with her. Lieutenant Tavish asks the Professor to permit him to accompany the expedition which the ethnologist is forming for a trip to the interior and despite the objections of Harding, who is suspicious of the Englishman, the plan is so arranged.

Gunga Din, a wild Hindu Prince, sees Lydia in company with Harding and falls in love with her at first sight. He plots and plans to accomplish his purpose, and the wily Hindu excites the interest of Professor Duane by telling him a glowing description of a wonderful buried city in the interior, the whereabouts of which is known only to the natives. He offers to lead the Professor to this mysterious city of the past, and the route of the expedition is changed accordingly.

Prince Gunga Din acquaints his followers with the plot. The expedition is just about to start when Tavish arranges with Naio, a native adventuress, to help him accomplish his designs.

The plot is carried out in such a manner as to create an impression of truthfulness. Lydia and Harding are walking in the garden when the adventuress, Naio, appears garbed as a mendicant and carrying a baby in her arms. She throws herself at Harding's feet and begs him not to abandon her longer. Professor Duane and Lieutenant Tavish appear on the scene and father and daughter are convinced that Harding has mistreated the native woman and that he is the father of the child.

Lydia, broken-hearted, demands that Harding shall leave her presence immediately. Professor Duane is indignant and dismisses Harding from his position.

Harding realizes that Lieutenant Tavish is at the bottom of the plot. He realizes also that Gunga Din has a plot to incarcerate Lydia in his harem, while Tavish plans to get her for himself. He determines to follow the expedition and endeavor to protect them from Gunga Din and Tavish.

The expedition leaves for Gunga Din's wild country. Harding and two natives follow. During the journey Tavish attempts to win Lydia's love, but he is balked to a certain extent by the espionage of Gunga Din, who spies upon his every movement.

The night of the "moonlight and silent death" comes. Gunga Din and his men seize the attendants of Professor Duane as they sleep and execute them. Gunga Din hastens to the sleeping quarters of Lydia and a violent struggle follows. Professor Duane rushes to her assistance, but is mercilessly slain, while the Lieutenant, who, although a scoundrel, is bold in fighting, is wounded and taken prisoner. Gunga Din carries his lovely captive on toward his desert stronghold.

Harding and his two natives arrive upon the scene of the slaughter a few hours later. He is horrified to discover that the Professor has been murdered and hastens along on the trail of Gunga Din. He is determined to rescue Lydia at all cost. His two native followers become frightened at the evidence of slaughter and desert Harding, taking away his rifle. He is undaunted by the handicaps thrown upon him and proceeds to follow the murderers.

Harding creeps into Gunga Din's camp unobserved, and making his way silently to the tent where Lydia is confined a prisoner he covers the sentry with his revolver and compels him to assist in freeing her from her bonds. They then free Lieutenant Tavish. Harding has formed a fierce hatred for the Englishman, but he will not leave him to become a prey to the bloody practices of the Hindus.

As they are fleeing from the camp, Gunga Din is aroused and with his men pursues the fleeing party across the swaying bridge which leads to safety. In a sanguinary conflict which follows the little party comes off safe. Tavish confesses to Harding the despicable plot in which he had been involved after which they shake hands and enter into a bond of friendship. Harding is vindicated and Lydia becomes his bride.

SLIM HIGGINS (Feb 23).—Slim Higgins bears the reputation of a hard character out in the West. He is placarded as a desperate fighter, who is quick in drawing his six-shooter. The citizens are warned against him.

An old settler and his pretty daughter are driving across the desert in their prairie schooner, exhausted and weary for lack of water and rest. They do not dare to stop because to stop would mean death among the sand hills; so they drive on in the hope of finding water.

Pete Lawson, a disreputable, semi-bandit, has discovered a pre-empted water hole. He will not permit anybody to take water unless they pay for it. He attacks the settler and his daughter. "Slim" witnesses the episode and rights the wrong by force of arms. He falls in love with the settler's daughter and decides to reform.

SCARS (Feb. 24).—Mobile is a picturesque, yet rather disreputable habitue of the mining camp. His reputation is that of a jolly, pleasing fellow except when in his "cups." Whiskey makes him an entirely different man. Frenchy, an elderly miner, receives word from his two daughters, Angele and Celeste, that they are coming to join him in his mountain cabin.

Mobile meets the girls at the station and flirts with them. Celeste is smitten with the handsome young fellow. His companionship with Celeste in the mountains creates a scandal in the camp and old Frenchy orders his disgraced daughter from his door. Mobile pretends to have married Celeste and they live together in a secluded mountain cabin. But one day she learns from a traveler that he has another wife living. The fickle and deceptive Mobile shows attention to another girl and Celeste takes her revenge in typical mining camp style.

THE MILLIONAIRE CABBY (Feb. 26).—Harry Page, a rich, young idler, falls in love with Doris Wilson, a society belle. Jarvis wilson, Doris' father, likes the handsome young aristocrat, but withholds his consent to their wedding until Harry shall have earned a thousand dollars.

Harry declares that he can take a decrepit old cab outfit and earn many times the amount with it, than the old cab driver can. Wilson accepts the wager and Harry makes a deal with the old cabman to turn over his outfit. The old cabman is dressed as an English lord and is sent to the swell society ball of the season with a special note of introduction written by Harry.

Clarence Forbes, Harry's rival, tries to win Doris. He persuades her to elope with him, but on the evening set for the elopment two burglars hold up Harry in his cab and invade the Wilson home. Harry defeats the burglars, stops the elopment and wins Doris.

HEARTS OF THE JUNGLE (Feb. 27).—Tom Knox, a young Englishman, has established a home on a farm in South Africa. His family consists of his wife Edith, and a four-year-old boy. John Moore is his assistant. One day while Tom and Moore are in the jungle they discover the lair of a leopardess, in which two cubs are sleeping. Tom decides to take one of the cubs home to raise as a pet for his boy.

When the mother leopard returns from her hunt she discovers that one of her cubs is missing. She follows Tom's trail to the cabin. The mother leopard confronts the frantic mother by the crib in which the baby is sleeping and where the leopard cub is lying. Edith seizes a rifle from the wall, aims it at the leopardess and pulls the trigger, but there is no explosion. With great presence of mind the anguished mother seizes the leopard cub and tosses it to the mother beast, who sniffs it and then seizing it in her mouth trots away contented.

PROTECTING BIG GAME (Produced under the auspices of the Board of Panama-Pacific Managers for the State of Idaho—Feb. 22).—The State of Idaho is noted for its elk and so cognizant is it of the fact that thousands of those graceful and handsome animals abide there that the authorities have caused to be enacted an unusually drastic statute providing for the preservation of the elk.

The poacher pitches his tent and after getting a few tips as to how to hunt elk in the snow starts out on skiis. It is not long before he brings down a fine specimen. The game warden traces the poacher's marks in the snow to the camp. Not finding the law breaker there he starts out to find him and comes upon the skinned carcass of the elk. The warden then retraces his steps and arrests the poacher in his camp.

Much of the picture is taken up with views of herds of elk. With the advent of the very cold weather which brings with it deep snow, the elk herd come down from the mountains into the valleys where the ground is to a more or less degree windswept and there is a better chance to get food. The animals remain together and huddle up almost like sheep. They are very timid despite their starving condition.

ONE WAY TO ADVERTISE (On Same Reel as Foregoing—Feb. 22).—Like many a disgruntled wife has resolved to do when her petition for money is met with a flat refusal by her husband, Mrs. Brown has a plan by which she is sure she can reap enough to make her at least more independent of her husband. Accordingly, when he leaves for the office with the unsavory epithets of his incensed wife still ringing in his ears, she paints a sign to the effect that she will do laundering and that samples of her work will appear in the front window Tuesday and Wednesday at 9 o'clock. The sign is attached to the blinds so that half is on either side.

A painter passes the blinds, ornate with the "attractive" sign, and one of the ladders gets caught in a blind. An effort is required to dislodge it, with the result that the blind is swung back, leaving only the one side of the sign in view. It is so arranged that the following part of the sign is left: "Notice: I undress in this window on Tuesday at 9 o'clock. Mrs. C. Brown." The scandal mongers immediately got their heads together and the result is that a crowd gathers in front of the window, principally men. Mr. Brown is telephoned for and after much excitement the other blind is swung back in place and Mrs. Brown gets the money she originally asked for.

FROM A LIFE OF CRIME (Feb. 23).—In her dying moments. Mary Bowers writes a portion of a letter addressed to her parents. Her daughter, Marcia, a child, is at the bedside, and takes the unfinished epistle, together with a locket which the dying woman has tried vainly to put around the child's neck. The few lines of the letter were an appeal to Mary Bowers' parents to forgive her and to care for the child, Marcia. When Marcia is unable to awaken her mother she invokes the assistance of Phineas and Sarah Craft, a couple of underworld characters, who live next door.

The Crafts see in Marcia a tractable pupil and destroying the letter adopt Marcia. The girl grows up steeped in vice and is used as an assistant in the robbing of the home of a minister. Sarah Craft feigns illness and while the minister is giving her attention and some money Marcia picks his pocket. She is caught redhanded, and after the minister severely flayed the maker of thieves, Marcia consents to remain in his household and be reformed. With him she does mission work.

Marcia, overhearing a remark of the minister's sister to the effect that when one is a thief he is always a thief, leaves the house and returns to her erstwhile haunts. She is welcomed by the Crafts who immediately plan another robbery with Marcia as the central figure. She answers an advertisement and gets a place as a domestic in the home of Mr. and Mrs. John Fletcher, Mary Bowers' parents. She has dropped the key of the house out of the window to her associates when she sees a portrait which she recognizes as that of her mother. The likeness in the locket corresponds with the large portrait. Marcia is overcome but the key has been dropped and it is too late. The Crafts are trapped when they enter, Marcia having told her grandparents, the Fletchers, of the contemplated burglary. The minister, a visitor at the Fletcher home, reclaims Marcia.

MANUFACTURE OF BIG GUNS FOR THE NATION'S DEFENCE (Produced by Permission of the U. S. War Department—Feb. 24).—The scenes in this very interesting picture show fourteen and sixteen-inch guns principally because, with the exception of the death-dealing machine guns, they are practically the only types now wanted. The United States has a new sixteen-inch monster but the fourteen-inch guns have been the largest up to a short time ago.

The first scene shows the rough turning of the fourteen-inch tube. The milling tools scrape off pieces of steel as if they were wooden shavings. The following scene shows the motor-driven gearing on a big lathe for turning the fourteen-inch guns. A general view of a fourteen-inch tube, to be made into a 45-calibre gun forty-five feet long, with a bore of fourteen inches, prefaces scenes showing the huge piece of steel turning over and over while it is being trued up. The placing of the hoops or jackets on the tube is shown, followed by a view of a furnace and a steamhammer where the "tray" for the breech end of the gun is hammered into shape. Boring the gun must be done so accurately that one one-thousandth of an inch variation will be detected.

The shrinking of the jacket onto the tube of a four-inch gun is especially interesting. The jacket is heated for eleven hours to 800 degrees Fahrenheit. It is then lifted out of the furnace and lowered over the tube. It is then cooled by a water spray which contracts the jacket. Sixteen tons of wire are wound around a fourteen-inch gun and there is a tension of about fifty thousand pounds on the wire during the winding. Twining the tunnions, boring powder chamber, preparing the breech block, gauging and opening the breech-block of a sixteen-inch gun are only a few of the additional scenes. The weight of a sixteen-inch gun is one hundred and thirty tons. The scenes were taken at the United States arsenal at Watervliet, N. Y. This sixteen-inch gun shown has just been rebuilt and is to be shipped to Panama.

THE PEST OF THE NEIGHBORHOOD (On Same Reel as Foregoing—Feb. 24).—Billy is seen at the summit of a hill, surveying the clotheslines and dumping grounds in the vicinage. His attention is suddenly attracted by a man's legs sticking through a fence. It is the leg of an impostor who is on the other side of the fence begging. Persons going by pity him because he has only one leg and drop money in his outstretched hat. Billy rather relishes the leg and continues to eat it. The beggar is afraid to pull his leg out as a policeman is standing nearby. Finally the pain is so great that he withdraws the leg and runs down the street without his crutches.

The vengeful beggar in hot pursuit of Billy, the goat, lams the butcher's boy instead of the goat and trouble starts for him. Off on his pestiferous career again Billy butts the grocer who objects to his browsing on choice vegetables, steals the bottle from baby in a carriage and sends the baby and carriage off on a mad plunge which presents a loving pair with a baby before it is wanted. Pesky boys unhitch a dog and tie Billy to the leash of a man who was seen to ask the bartender what his address was. This dog-loving, harmless man takes Billy home, unknowingly, and Billy certainly gets the hubby in bad with the wife. By this time there is a fine collection of respectable but irate citizens in pursuit of Billy, the pest, and things do mix themselves up till Billy, with Mistress Souse, resists the charges in the familiar fortifications of his shanty home.

THE LIFE OF ABRAHAM LINCOLN (Special—Two Parts—Feb. 26).—There is not an American living who does not relish the story of the life of Abraham Lincoln, the martyr President, considered by the majority of writers and men nationally prominent as the greatest American. The sympathy and passions that are stirred up within us by reading of Lincoln are accentuated by the witnessing of the adaptation on the screen. Lincoln's every mannerism, trait and eccentricity are pictured and while looking at it anyone with a drop of American blood in his veins is carried along by the current of innate patriotism and swallowed up at the confluence of many emotions.

From the scene in front of the log cabin to the assassination at Ford's Theatre in Washington, one is gripped. Lincoln's courtship culminated in his marriage with Mary Todd. He struggles along in abject poverty until he is

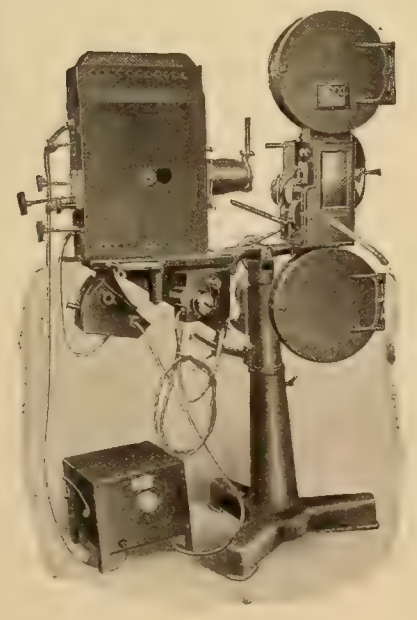
39,420,000 Revolutions

Simplex

A Western exhibitor, who, more than three years ago, bought one of the first Simplex machines manufactured, has written us as follows:

"Guess I had better send in my mechanism to be overhauled. It is running satisfactorily, but I have had it so long that I think it wise to give it a rest and have it looked over."

This exhibitor has been running his Simplex machine ten hours per day for this period of time; or, to be more exact, his mechanism has been running at the rate of 13,140,000 revolutions per year, which equals 39,420,000 revolutions for the three years' service.



This unsolicited testimonial surely is convincing proof our our claim that the upkeep of the Simplex is practically nil.

Think, Mr. Exhibitor, how much you would save in a year's time were you using the Simplex machine.

Is this true of the machine you are now operating?

Send for catalog "A" and we will give you further proof of our claim.

There isn't any reason in this great big wide world why you should have to roam about day after day, week in and week out, trying to find the right pictures to give you the properly balanced program. Now, imagine you finding all these pictures in one place, no more roaming, no more worry, NO MORE SHOPPING.

You claim that the pictures you show are your stock in trade and that you must purchase them with discretion. That's just it, do you purchase with discretion? Or do you let trivial things outside of the actual picture itself influence you and set that down as discretion? Your theatre is your stock in trade. If you are continually shopping for pictures you are neglecting the theatre itself. Think it over and see if you hadn't better STOP SHOPPING.

Now isn't it good business management to see that each avenue of your business is given attention? Isn't it also good judgment to have a program of pictures that you can depend on tomorrow just as well as you can today? A set of pictures that will give you well-known players, splendid scenic settings, snappy stories, and plenty of good situations. Pictures that will go over every time. The kind that cause an audience to leave your theatre feeling that they don't care about going any further to look for good pictures. In fact they themselves have decided to STOP SHOPPING.

There is an awful lot of work connected with getting this kind of photoplays. We can help you toward that end if you will let us tell you a word about Kriterion. You see it has come into the field decidedly distinctive. It has come with a distinctive mission, a purpose that embodies those necessary essentials in making up a complete service. It contains a variety of well-known photoplayers, and a lay-out that is properly balanced. Well, take it all in all it is a program that just sort of fits in anywhere, one that, the more you see of it the stronger you will demand it. It is really a great big reason why you should STOP SHOPPING.

Today in the motion picture business is a time of clean, quick decisive decision. Your judgment must be broad. You must grasp the bigger things without hesitation. Kriterion is one of those big things. It is one of those arguments that is clinching. Our pictures, our players and the men back of them comprise a bigness that is evidenced in every photoplay released by the Kriterion. Can't you see it is time that you STOP SHOPPING?

You see, Kriterion Service is designed for the motion picture business, not for the show business. You understand, there is a vast difference, with a distinction. When you go into the show business, you offer one big show. We know that over 60% of those in the show business are operating at a loss. Whereas those in the motion picture business are counting their profits every week. This is surely a real reason to STOP SHOPPING!

nominated for United States Senator. He opposes Stephen Douglas, and it was in his debate that he proved himself not only a rhetorician but a man of wholesome and broadminded ideas. He was defeated but in 1860 was elected President. What happened subsequently is familiar to all Americans. Lincoln's Gettysburg address, succinct but powerful, is considered one of the gems of oratory.

THE EXPERIMENT (Feb. 27).—Max Weldon, college chum of George Foster, is somewhat of an hypnotist and during his stay at the Foster home over the holidays is asked to experiment on Grace, George's sister. In full view of the family he subjugates the mind of Grace and while she is in the hypnotic state directs that at midnight she shall rise from bed, walk downstairs and get a knife from the table in the living room and carry it back to George's room. She asks to be told what Max had directed, upon being awakened, but they withhold it from her.

In order that he may see his daughter actually following the directions of the hypnotist, Mr. Foster remains up. He dozes, however, and fearing that he will miss the experiment, places his hand on the knife so as to be aroused when Grace takes it. The boys await the result of the experiment upstairs with much avidity. In the interim a burglar enters the living room and in a struggle with the intruder Mr. Foster is hurt, only superficially, however, the shock rendering him unconscious.

At midnight Grace wakes up and guided by her subconscious mind, puts on her kimona and slippers and proceeds downstairs. She takes the knife which has blood upon it as the result of the fracas, and returns upstairs. She gives the blood-spattered knife to Max, who immediately wakens her and shows her what she has done. Grace, of course, is puzzled. The three hasten to the room where Mr. Foster is lying unconscious in a chair beside the table. The police had been notified of the trouble at the Foster home when a central office operator became alarmed at hearing what seemed like a tussle, over the phone, which had been knocked from the table. Upon the arrival of the police it is seen that a window is open and one of the officers goes to investigate. The burglar had fallen behind a sofa, weakened from a wound received in the struggle, and he was hauled to his feet by the officers. Mr. Foster regains consciousness and identiues him as his assailant. Thus the experiment worked but not as disastrously as at first thought.

"PATSY BOLIVAR" SERIES NO. 9, "Patsy's Elopement (Feb. 22).—Believing that he loves her, when in reality his attentions to Tilly are merely to spite his enemy Sykesy, Patsy continues to urge his suit with her instead of with Jane. Sykesy attacks Patsy on the veranda of the hotel and is thrown over the railing to the roadway, severely injured. A warrant is sworn out and after an exciting chase he becomes mired in a swamp and is captured. But the vengeful Sykesy, preferring to take the law into his own hands, refuses to prosecute his rival, who is discharged by the magistrate, while Jane locks Sykesy in his room to prevent his threatened murderous attack on her beloved Patsy. Sykesy climbs from his window, armed with a club. Jane discovers him and warns Patsy to flee. This he does, taking the compliant Tilly with him, instead of rewarding Jane for her persistent love of him. The runaways hurry away on a motorcycle. They are pursued by Uncle Grace and the constables in an automobile.

Finding themselves in danger of capture, they leave the motorcycle, take to the river in a canoe and are capsized. They obtain dry clothes from a farmer. Still resolved to carry out the purpose of their thoughtless elopement, the two set out in their uncouth and ill-fitting raiment borrowed from the farmer's wife, and believing that there is something suspicious about their behavior, both clergymen and justice of the peace refuse to marry them. So they take refuge in a country hotel in separate rooms, Tilly assuring Patsy that their escapades are a foolish mistake, and that she has quite repented of her desire to marry him.

Meanwhile the pursuit of the fugitives has been much alive, and seeing that they are certain to be captured, the faithful Jane, mounts a horse, sets out for the hotel where their whereabouts has been located by the constables, warns Patsy, places him on her horse, and he eludes pursuit by concealing himself in a cornfield while the repentant Tilly is taken home convinced that Patsy was never intended to be her mate.

"POET AND PEASANT" (Feb. 23).—Artemis Long is a poet, but he finds the returns from poem-writing such that although his minds inhabits mansions, his corporeal person exists in a third floor back, lighted by one window, close to the wall of an untenanted mansion on the adjoining street. Arty has another trouble; his verses disappear from his desk miraculously. Arty doesn't guess that they are taken by Lotta Luks, the little emigrant slavey who bothers him by dusting his room and washing his window. Lotta loves Arty, and she treasures the little stolen poems.

Then something happens. The window in the wall opposite his room opens and discloses a beautiful girl. She places some potted plants on the sill, and Arty, who has been reading the "Flower Flirtation," thinks he reads a message in them. The same day his friend, Howe S. Tricks, calls and Arty tells of his "Goddess in the Window." Howe tells him that the divinity is Dixie Firebran, a young Southern girl, who has just come to live in the mansion. But when he sees the flowers he "beats it." About this time Lotta suddenly inherits a wad of money from her brother in the old country, but keeps it a secret. She spends some of it for little delicacies for Arty, but he thinks they come from the girl in the window. One day he mentions to Lotta that his verses, if published, would bring him wealth. Lotta pays for publishing the verses, unknown to Arty. He is overjoyed, but attributes the kindness to Howe.

Arty inscribes a volume and throws it through the window to his divinity. But when he next looks out, expecting to find her enraptured, he gets a shock. She is laughing over the book with a man. It is his false friend, Howe S. Tricks. This is too much. Arty will end it all with a rope, but his own ceiling is too low to allow him to hang himself. Then he thinks of the attic. It has a peaked roof. Everything is arranged, and Arty in a hemp necktie, is standing on a chair reciting his favorite poem preparatory to his leap into infinity, when the door opens and a ravishing vision of womanhood appears. It is Lotta, dressed up like a real human being. Just as he is taking her in his arms the landlady comes with a letter. It is a check. The entire edition of his books is sold. Arty is happy and he hardly notices the arrival of draymen with loads of books. Lotta has bought the edition herself. One thing Arty doesn't know is that the flowers on the window sill were a signal to Howe S. Tricks that father would be away and it would be safe to call on Dixie.

THE LOVE OF WOMEN (Special, Three Parts, Feb. 24).—Alan Baird, younger son of Jason Baird, paymaster-general of the army, is engaged to Muriel Phillips. Alan, a famous portrait painter, gladly agrees to paint the picture of Laura Carew, a famous actress. Alan becomes infatuated with Laura, due in part to her desire to make a conquest of every prominent young man she meets. This arouses the jealousy of Guy Manners, Laura's leading man, who seeks revenge and also financial gain by luring Alan into many card games. The young man soon loses the respect of his friends and after wasting his own money and all that he can obtain from his parents he is given up as hopeless by his father, and thrown upon his own resources. Guy Manners, in the furtherance of his scheme, has Alan put up at his club.

David Baird, Alan's brother, a paymaster in the army, returns from a distant post to obtain large funds for his district. To him Muriel confides her sorrow. David seeks Alan and finds him with the actress. He upbraids the boy for his conduct and the indignant Laura plans to add David also to her list of victims. But Laura finds herself entrapped. She sees in David the first man whom she can really love, and David in turn, discovers Laura to be his ideal of womanly beauty. Laura sees that David really cares for her, and viewing her own life for the first time through his eyes, she admits to herself that he is the stronger, and that she cannot sacrifice him. She determines to help him in his efforts to save Alan. In a flashy cafe she acts the part of a wicked and degenerate woman. Her purpose fails. Though David suffers acutely at her shamelessness, Alan is more than ever determined to win her. Indignant at his brother's interference he turns to Guy Manners. Alan is sorely in need of funds and at Guy's suggestion, he enters his father's home and steals from the safe the government funds which David has placed there. He returns to the club, where he enters a game of cards with Guy.

The next morning he finds himself again penniless, discarded by Laura, an outcast and a thief. Sobered at last, he determines to take his life, and goes to his old studio for that purpose. Meanwhile, David has discovered the theft of the money, and guessing the truth, goes to Laura in search of Alan. There, the actress breaking down, confesses her love for David. In the midst of the scene Guy enters, and David quickly conceals himself. Guy pleads that Laura go with him, confessing that he has induced Alan to rob the safe, and has won the money from him. David plunges upon Guy and in a sharp fight, recovers the money. Then he and Laura start in search of Alan. Meanwhile, Muriel has followed Alan to his studio and finds him just about to take his life. She is pleading with him when his father enters, having discovered the robbery, and demands that Alan clear his name by carrying out his purpose of self-murder. At this point David and Laura burst into the studio. Seeing the situation, David calmly tells the General that it was he who took the money from the safe, that he and Laura are to be married at once, and that he removed the money because they are starting immediately for his post in the West. Alan is reinstated in his father's heart, and finds ready forgiveness from Muriel. David and Laura start upon a life of happiness together.

"BENEATH THE SEA" (Special, Two Parts, Feb. 25).—Ned Ellis, draftsman in the employ of the Submarine Construction Company, is in love and loved by Alice Herring, the daughter of the president. Her father desires that she marry Richard Mason, secretary of the company. Ned has invented an underwater exhaust for submarine engines which the company is considering installing in new submarines for the government. Mason is jealous of Ned and not only tries to keep the invention from being adopted, but contrives for its failure when demonstrated.

Mason exacts from Mr. Herring the promise of Alice's hand in marriage, but Alice scorns the idea. She is forced finally to acknowledge an engagement, but will not consider it binding. Mason decides to crush his rival and, taking advantage of ill feeling aroused in Dan Harris by a reprimand from Ned, Mason discharges Harris, laying the blame for the act on Ned. Harris drinks to excess, mistreats his wife and fails to support her and their baby. Alice comes in touch with Nora, Harris' wife, and being drawn to her by sympathy and her own trouble, they become friends. Mason gets Harris to tamper with the machinery of the new invention so that when it is tried it will fail to work properly.

Ned goes with the submarine when it makes the trial trip. When they sink to the bottom the engine fails to work, and he discovers that the air is out of the tanks and that it is impossible for them to rise to the surface. No help can reach them and as the air in the submarine will last but a few moments, Ned insists on their shooting him up through the torpedo tube. This is done and Ned reaches the Lucero, the president's yacht, in time to secure aid and face Mason, who has been the cause of all his trouble.

As a result of the failure of the engine to demonstrate properly, the invention is rejected and Ned is about to be discharged. Harris, after being the tool of Mason, goes on a spree. His child becomes desperately sick and its life is saved by the timely arrival of a physician who has been called by Alice. When Harris returns from his spree and learns that his baby almost died, he is filled with remorse and resolves never to touch drink again. He discovers Alice crying and on asking the cause is again filled with remorse for the trouble he has caused her. He immediately goes to the company and explains what he has done and tells them it was at the instigation of Mason. Mason is denounced and Ned is reinstated in his place in the company and Mr. Herring readily gives his consent for the marriage of his daughter to Ned.

"THE HUMAN INVESTMENT" (Feb. 26).—Delicia Twombley is in love with John Hastings, a young farmer with little or no prospects. Delicia has an inherent love of luxury and comfort, which causes the moderate circumstances in which she lives to deeply rankle and act as the clinching argument against marrying John. John learns from her own lips why she won't marry him, but doesn't learn that she has succeeded in getting her father to invest his savings in her instead of the securities he had in mind.

Delicia goes to the city to visit Hilda Travers, a girl chum who has married wealth, and invests her father's savings in gowns. She meets men of wealth, but when Hilda and her husband sail for Europe, leaving her to live alone in the city, only one, Herbert Wentworth, takes the trouble to call on her. She misunderstands his attentions at first, but soon learns that his protestations of affections are not from worthy motives and she dismisses him. Her funds fall low and fearful of returning home and admitting defeat she enters the chorus, the only work open to her. There the same thing happens—the wealthy men who pay attention to her are not the marrying kind.

At a party given two men in the rooms occupied by another chorus girl and herself she can stand it no longer, and breaking away from the maudlin attempts of her companion to caress her, runs into the other room and locks the door. There she breaks down. At this moment there is a knock at the door and she opens it to admit John. She finds a heaven in his arms and admits she is ready to return and face any poverty if he will only get her away. They leave at once. Back home, however, she discovers that John has struck oil on his property and therefore has no sacrifice to demand of her.

"THE MILLINERY MAN" (Feb. 27).—With a number of fashionables, Dick Devlin visits his fiancee in the small, exclusive town where her family is prominent. Ernestine, the girl, is self-willed and cruel in her exactions. At a church bazaar Ernestine shines, being the prettiest and wealthiest girl present. Nora Lyman, the little milliner of the town, goes to the bazaar to study the hats of the women, hoping to copy them. One of those hat-trimming matches is scheduled. The men are made to trim for a prize. Ernestine insists that Dick enter the contest and he good-naturedly enlists. By some accident Dick trims a hat that really looks like something. It takes the prize.

Ernestine, to be perverse, demands that Dick set up a shop. If he really loves her he will actually become a milliner for a year and give his earnings to her pet scheme, a cemetery for dogs. Dick, dared by all, and really loving the girl, consents. The shop is established. Dick goes into the venture thoroughly. He has assistants, of course, but he is proprietor. Ernestine, to show her power, makes her women friends insist that Dick himself trim the hats they purchase. Dick does so, with laughable results. But the shop prospers so well that Nora Lyman is gradually reduced to failure. She hates the society shop and still more does she hate the man in charge of it. Nora goes to see what it is that makes the man milliner's hat sell. She mingles with the gay crowd and has only contempt for a man who could be a mere milliner.

Alfred Ayres, a spineless poet, Ernestine's satellite, makes a slurring remark about Dick. Dick knocks him down and the calm of the little shop is shaken by wild confusion. Ernestine denounces Dick for his vulgar outburst and tears his ring from her finger. Nora doesn't hate him so much. The crowd overturn some of the most perishable hats and Nora saves them from destruction. She finds Dick looking at her. He thanks her for her service and she goes away. Nora's affairs are becoming serious. Her creditors are dunning for money, and she sees her customers drifting away. Her brave effort to be independent has failed. The postman delivers to Dick a stack of bills. The address on one envelope is blurred, but Dick gets others from the same firm. Dick reads a sharp letter to Nora Lyman threatening recourse to the law if a large bill for millinery supplies is not paid. He realizes that perhaps he has driven a woman out of business. Dick goes to the address and finds the little shop in charge of Nora. Dick realizes that his obedience to Ernestine's whim has harmed the little milliner and he tries to make amends. Nora will not accept money. Dick suggests that they go into business partnership. Nora consents and they pledge the success of the venture at tea in Nora's workroom. Nora, prettily dressed, is seen managing the shop, with Dick merely a silent partner. When Dick's father wires him to end his idling and come home to take his place in the firm, the question of leaving Nora comes up. Dick finds he can't leave her and Nora solves the difficulty by consenting to go with him—always.

"AINT IT THE TRUTH?" (Feb. 22).—When Donald Wellington is ordered from the house by his sweetheart's father, they decide to elope. He calls for her next day in his speedster, but before they can make their escape the father is seen coming down the street. The elopement is then abandoned. Donald sees him fishing some time later and has a plan to bring him around. He walks up the pier and starts a conversation and accidentally knocks his bait into the water. The father becomes angry, but Donald tells him that he has a bait which will catch twice as many fish. He hands him a box of bait, then goes to a fisherman's hut where he buys a basketful of fish and rents a boat. He rows down to the pier and from underneath fastens fish to the father's hook. That night he decides that any man who can produce bait like that can marry his daughter.

"THE SURPRISE OF MY LIFE" (Feb. 23).—A house party is in progress at the country home of John Radcliffe, the wealthy uncle of Jack Davis. A series of petty thefts have taken place, all indications pointing to the fact that the thief is evidently one of the guests. As a climax, the gold loving cup which was to be awarded to the winner of the golf tourney, disappears one night. Next morning Joseph Pryor, a detective, is sent for. Upon his arrivel he is received as a guest. The following day the new loving cup arrives. Pryor places it in the large hall clock, and to the door attaches an alarm. That night the alarm raises the entire household, and Jack Davis awakens to find himself in front of the clock. Pryor then explains how Jack had undoubtedly been acting out, unconsciously, the book he had been reading. Merely a case of subconscious mind reaction.

"THE FABLE OF THE BACHELOR AND THE BACK PEDAL" (Feb. 24).—Once there was a bachelor who lived in a furnished room. He loved his Juliet and wanted to pay her board for life, so by rigid economy in six months he saved $28.00. He drew out the whole sum and told himself there was nothing too good for honey. He blew $25.00 for a ring and $3.00 for posies, then started up to the house to propose. Before he could pop the question her friend Isabelle dropped in. His Juliet then began bragging to Isabelle about some recent bargains. She brought out a coat which she said only cost $450.00, just like finding it; also a hat for $65.00 that was worth all of $75.00. She then produced a dozen articles and the price tags brought tears to the eyes of the bachelor. When the girls went out to take a peek at some articles that could not be brought into the parlor, the bachelor beat it, realizing that he would never have enough to keep her supplied in talcum powder.

"SOPHIE CHANGES HER MIND" (Feb. 25).—Sophie breaks her engagement to Slippery Slim, having decided that she loves Mustang Pete. Slim, determined to foil his rival, agrees to pay two men $40.00 if they will deliver Sophie Clutts at a certain bridge at a certain time. Mustang overhears the plot, and rushing to Sophie's home tells her the danger she is about to encounter. He then disguises himself as Sophie, and soon the kidnappers arrive, throwing a bag over his head. Thinking they have Sophie, they take him to the bridge where Slim is waiting with the minister. The ceremony is performed, then Slim, thinking it now safe, orders the bag removed. He is speechless when he sees Mustang, and starts to escape, but is captured by Sophie and her friends, who have been watching the performance.

"BRONCHO BILLY'S BROTHER" (Feb. 27).—Broncho's brother has a quarrel with a greaser. In the fight that follows the greaser is bested, but swears to be avenged. Broncho's brother then goes home and while under the influence of liquor, strikes his mother. Broncho, hearing her screams, rushes into the room, but by this time his brother has departed. He finds him outside and when he refuses to repent, Broncho gives him a sound beating. The greaser, who has followed, now sees his chance, so fires. Broncho's brother falls dead in his arms. The greaser then goes to the sheriff and tells him he saw Broncho kill his brother. The sheriff and his men arrive to arrest Broncho at his home, but he escapes. Later they find him in the saloon where he is accusing the greaser. Upon being questioned, the greaser confesses to the sheriff.

"STARS THEIR COURSES CHANGE" (Special, Three Parts, Feb. 26).—Robert Cameron, a young author, after ten years of hard work in seclusion, has written a book called "The Lip You Press." It proves to be a great success, so Cameron decides to leave his cabin in the woods and return to civilization. He is invited to the home of his old friend, Howard Chandler. Here he meets Olivia Staunton, a friend of Edith Chandler, Howard's sister. Olivia has read Cameron's book, "The Lip You Press," and does not particularly care for it. When Howard tells her that Cameron has conquered all, but never fallen in love, she boasts that he can't conquer her, and furthermore she will make him love her in less than three weeks.

She leads Cameron on, and before the end of the week he has proposed to her, but she only laughs at him, telling him that on a wager she had made him propose to her. He is really in love, and kisses her, telling her that the memory of that kiss will linger and some day bring her to him. As time goes on his statement proves true. Meanwhile Cameron has assumed an air of indifference, and her second attempt at leading him to propose proves a failure. He tells her he does not love her. Thinking she will spite him, she announces her engagement to Arthur Therril, knowing at the time that Cameron is the only man she loves. Upon reading the engagement, Cameron is completely broken up, and after writing a note to her admitting his love, he returns to his cabin in the woods to try to forget.

In the days that follow, Olivia discovers that Therril is not the man she thought he was, and after writing a note to the effect that she intends to find Cameron, she disappears. Therril, with a revolver, goes to Cameron's cabin and orders the author to give her up. Cameron takes this as an insult, and while the two are struggling, a priest enters the scene carrying Olivia. He had found her half frozen and taken her to shelter. When she revived, she tells Cameron of her love, and they are married by the priest

MINA.

LOVE AND LIMBO (March 4).—Jimmy and Johnny are twin brothers and they are so much alike that even their papa cannot distinguish one from the other. Jimmy, however, is pugnaciously inclined while Johnny is an ardent peace advocate, and the latter is often obliged to go to war in order to protect himself from the attacks of Scrappy Jimmy, who crows after each victory. Years roll by but the brothers go on quarreling and fighting; they finally decide to leave home and go their separate ways. Jimmy's scrappiness eventually lands him in jail, and John's peaceful nature leads him into the blessed state of matrimony.

Jim yearns for freedom. He finds a lucky charm and, with its aid, manages to escape from prison. The guards are quick to give chase. Meanwhile, John discovers that married life has its drawbacks and is compelled to flee from his strenuous better half. Jim successfully eludes his pursuers, changes clothes and buries the convict's costume in the woods. This act is seen by John, who quickly disinters the striped garment and, upon investigation, finds the lucky charm. His joy is short-lived, for the guards pounce upon him and rush him to prison. John protests in vain; his captors are sure he is Jim, the jail-breaker.

Jim congratulates himself on his clever escape, and, the scrappy spirit still strong within him, he wends his way in the direction of Scrapville. Here he falls into the rustic hands of two constables who drag him to John's home where the lady of the house, holding a dangerous looking weapon in her hands, is waiting the return of her runaway spouse. Jim's protestations are of no avail and he bows to the inevitable. Once inside of the house, Mrs. John starts to lay violent hands upon Jim, whom she believes to be her fugitive John. Jim meets his waterloo and, like his brother, bolts for the door and makes a mad dash for safety. A hasty glance over his shoulder convinces him that safety lies ahead, way ahead, back into the prison he had deserted. Breaking all speed records, he rushes into the arms of the astonished wardens. The twins are brought face to face and exclaiming: "My long lost brother!" they clasp each other in a warm fraternal embrace.

THE PRAYER OF A HORSE (Two Parts—Feb. 25).—Dobbin is a horse raised in the mountains of Kentucky and he is supposed to tell the following story:

Tom Collins, the owner of the horse, is in love with Dolly Gray. There is a feud between the Grays and Collins families. The horse sees the father of Dolly approaching and tries to warn his master of his danger as he sits on a fallen log making love to the girl. The horse's warning consists of a little trick Tom has taught him, viz.: taking the handkerchief out of the pocket of his master. The warning is too late. Gray appears and is about to kill Tom, when Tom's father appears behind him and makes him drop his rifle. Gray disowns his daughter and tells her never to return to his home again. Gray is fairly wealthy. The Collins family are poor. Hard times come upon Tom, who is now married to Dolly. Tom is forced to sell the horse to a livery stable keeper named Tucker.

We follow the carrer of the horse. He has many adventures; is forced to drag an undertaker's wagon and finally in later years is seen decrepit and cold, dragging a cart of an Italian peddler. One day in the city street, Dobbin stops dead still from exhaustion. A little girl, out with her nurse for a walk, sees the horse and angrily scolds the Italian peddler for beating him. The father of the girl sees the argument from the window; he goes down into the street to learn the trouble. Father and daughter turn out to be Tom Collins, who is now wealthy through a legacy of his dead uncle. Dolly, the mother, has died giving birth to the child. Tom Collins does not recognize the old horse but on the pleading of his daughter he buys him from the Italian peddler for ten dollars.

Later her grandfather, Gray, invites her and her father up to his farm for the summer holidays. The child requests that the horse be taken along. Dobbin finally arrives back on the old farm where he was raised. He eventually succeeds in making his master recognize him by the old trick of taking out the handkerchief. The story ends happily for the horse as he hears his master remark that he will never part with him again.

NESTOR.

NELLIE, THE PRIDE OF THE FIRE HOUSE (Feb. 23).—Nellie, who works in a shirtwaist factory, is the sweetheart of the chief of the Fire Department and the darling of the fire boys. A fire breaks out in the shirtwaist factory, and the firemen rush to the scene. The chief learns that his sweetheart is still in the factory and has not been saved.

A homely old maid leans out of a window and calls to be rescued. The firemen are looking only for pretty girls to rescue, and so are loath to ascend to the burning building. The inspector, who is also upon the scene, asks the fireboys to assist the lady and upon their refusal decides to do it himself. He ascends the ladder and is about to take her from the building when a girl in a nearby window, with a beautiful face appears. It is none other than Nellie.

The inspector at once turns his attention to the pretty girl, throwing the old woman back into the burning building. The chief has seen his sweetheart by this time and also ascends the ladder to rescue her. He succeeds to the chagrin of the inspector, but the inspector is, nevertheless, in earnest in the pursuit of the beautiful lady. He hires a couple of thugs to abduct her and makes her a prisoner in a garret. Not to be beaten, the handsome fire chief rescues her and then follows an exciting chase over the house tops, the inspector and his thugs in pursuit.

The inspector recaptures the girl and compels her to enter his decrepit 1902 auto and proceeds to make way with her. Securing the aid of the assistant fire chief and the rest of the fireboys, the chief at last rescues her from the villainous clutches of the inspector.

TAKING HER MEASURE (Feb. 26).—Wife insists upon a new dress but Newlywed cannot see their way clear to get what will fulfill her wishes. Wife sees an ad wherein Rudolph Cutter offers to supply $75.00 gowns for only $25.00. She finally persuades her husband to take her to Cutter's establishment. Hubby, however, does not like the way in which Cutter takes his wife's measurements and objects. Cutter assures him it is all in regular form but Hubby, nevertheless, takes his wife away.

Wife, intent on getting one of the new gowns offered at such a bargain, again communicates with Cutter, who calls at her house that evening with samples and his "ever ready" tape measure. Hubby, coming home, meets the obnoxious ladies' tailor again in his wife's company and throws him bodily from the house, together with his numerous samples. Later, wife goes down to Cutter's establishment for the first try-on of the new gown. Hubby learns of where she has gone and, greatly enraged because he has forbidden his wife to have anything to do with the tailor, he rushes down to the place.

Wife, meanwhile, has slipped off her regular dress in a dressing room and is waiting for the woman assistant to bring her unfinished gown to her. By an unlucky mistake she finds herself locked out of the dressing room, which closes with a snap lock. Fearing to be seen in her state of negligee, she rushes away in an attempt to conceal herself. The only door open is the door to Cutter's private office. She rushes in and closes the door behind her. Her husband, breathless, rushes into the Cutter office and inquires about his wife. Cutter denies her presence. Wife, hearing her husband's voice, answers him and comes to the door and hubby, incensed at finding his wife in a strange man's office in such unconventional attire, gets excited and, drawing his gun, gives Cutter a merry chase. Matters are finally settled, however, when Cutter's assistant explains to him that Cutter has been with her all the time and has not yet seen Mrs. Newlywed. This explanation proves satisfactory to the irate husband.

ALL OVER HIS BISCUITS (Feb. 2)—Newlywed loves his wife, but not her cooking. One day she bakes some biscuits and offers them to her husband, who rebels. A quarrel ensues and Mrs. Newlywed packs up to go back to her mother. On the way, however, she decides to go to one of the hotels in town. Newlywed decides to do the same.

They obtain rooms in the same hotel, next to each other. Neither knows of the other's presence. Newlywed hears singing in the next room. He is smitten and plans to meet the singer. Mrs. Newlywed, in the next room, hears Newlywed's voice and, taking him for a dashing young fellow, decides to see more of him.

The Newlyweds come face to face and a quarrel follows. Mrs. Newlywed goes to her room. Newlywed goes to another room. A young married couple takes Newlywed's old room. Mrs. Newlywed hears their lovemaking and suspects her husband is implicated.

Mrs. Newlywed can stand it no longer. She enters the room, which she believes is occupied by her husband, and finds the newly married couple there. Newlywed comes up at this time, sees his wife enter his old room and thinks that she is having an affair with another man. He enters and an explanation follows. The Newlyweds make up.

GOLD SEAL.

HAUNTED HEARTS (Two Parts—Feb. 23).—Rose Lane, Jack Devore, a college boy, and Nathan White, a wealthy young banker, and a party of friends are on Nathan's yacht, cruising around in the South Seas. They sight a small island of rock coral and are looking at it through the glasses, when Rose sees a beautiful flower growing on the face of the cliff, near the top. She expresses a wish for it and both Nathan and Jack, being in love with her, vow to get the flower for her, each wagering against the other. The captain says it is impossible to land on the island with a boat and they decide to swim in. Jack reaches the island first and climbs the rock from the opposite side. Just as he gets the flower in his hand he slips and falls to the bottom of the cliff, breaking his leg. During this time a sudden tropical storm has arisen and the wind and rain blot the island from the sight of those on board the yacht.

Nathan reaches the island just after Jack has fallen and, seeing him lying on the ground, runs to him. He sees that Jack has the flower and is helpless. Knowing Rose's preference for Jack, Nathan is tempted to leave Jack there and take the flower to Rose. He yields, and, ignoring Jack's pleading for help, he takes the flower in his teeth and swims out to the boat which the captain has ordered out to look for the boys. He tells them Jack was drowned. A year later finds Rose and Nathan married, both pale and nervous, haunted by the memory of Jack. He is in Rose's thoughts continually. Nathan, loving Rose deeply, knows that she is mourning for Jack and the vision of Jack as he last saw him, haunts him wherever he turns.

Jack, grown well and strong, is living on the island, subsisting on fish and vegetation. Rose lives in his thoughts and comes to him often in visions. Finally, Nathan, crazed with remorse and unable to work, decides to go in search of Jack. He sends a note to Rose, saying that he has sinned and is going away, maybe forever, and leaves suddenly in his private yacht with a crew of two men. Rose, after reading the note, faints and falls into the arm of the old family physician, Dr. Gordon. Soon after, a son is born to her.

Nathan reaches the island and he and one of the sailors put off from the yacht in a small boat. The rough waters capsize it, drowning the sailor and washing Nathan ashore. Jack pulls him in, unconscious and barely alive. Jack sees the yacht and, remembering how Nathan deserted him, is tempted to repay him in like manner, but he is touched by Nathan's helplessness and finds he cannot. Putting the unconscious Nathan into the boat, which has washed ashore, he tows him to the yacht, where the remaining sailor helps him aboard with Nathan. They drift about the seas for days and when almost starved are finally picked up by a transport and carried to South America. There Jack is successful and in four years has made his fortune. During this time he has cared for Nathan, who has never recovered his health and remembers nothing of the past. Jack decides to take him back to New York to an expert surgeon to be operated on in an effort to restore his mind and health. After arriving in New York, he consults the surgeon, who assures him that an operation will be successful.

In the meantime the fortune Nathan left Rose has been swept away by unscrupulous investors and Rose is compelled to earn a living for herself and little son, Nathan, now four years old. Dr. Gordon has helped her to secure training as a nurse and she is head nurse at the hospital at the time when Jack brings Nathan there. She and Jack meet and the old love is renewed, he, not knowing that she is Nathan's wife and she thinking that Nathan is long since dead. In their new-found happiness they do not speak of past troubles. He calls on her that evening and Jack, unable to speak, leaves the house blindly, broken-hearted, resolving, after he has seen the outcome of the operation, to go to South America.

Rose, thinking Jack does not want her on account of the child, is also heart-broken, but resolves to try and forget him in her work. She is to assist in the operation which Jack does not know, and when she enters the room and recognizes Nathan, she is almost overcome. However, she brings all her professional will power to her aid and goes through with it. The operation is successful in that it restores Nathan's memory, but leaves him too weak to live. He recognizes Rose, remembers all and tells her the whole story, then asks forgiveness. She does not answer. Nathan asks for Jack and when Jack enters, he sees that Nathan has confessed. He tells Rose to forgive and, putting her hand in Nathan's, starts to leave the room. Nathan calls him back and, taking his hand, joins it with Rose's and passes peacefully away.

THE GIRL OF THE SECRET SERVICE (Two parts—Feb. 2)—The Japanese spy, Kawakami, desiring to learn the whereabouts of Fred Langford, an inventor who is perfecting a marvelous device for the defense of his country, and who has suddenly dropped out of sight, kidnaps Langford's wife upon her arrival in San Francisco. He forces from her the secret of her husband's hiding place. He then sends a note to Langford, ostensibly from blackmailers, demanding that he bring a certain sum of money to a certain place in Chinatown, hoping in this way to get the inventor in his power and to force from him the secret of his latest device. A member of the secret service has witnessed the kidnapping, however, and, the plan of the Japanese being suspected, Francis Gordon is put on the case. He is assisted by a female operative, Barbara Ward, who is also his sweetheart.

Barbara disguises as a Japanese and obtains admittance to Kawakami's house, where she finds Rose Langford. She succeeds in spiriting Rose out of the place, but is herself caught by the Japanese spies. Gordon, sending the car containing Rose Langford speeding away to safety, forces an entrance into the house and rescues Barbara. Barbara, however, dies from wounds she receives in the struggle.

THE ANSWER (Two Parts—Feb. 24).—Jim Foster with his wife and little girl live happily in a small western town. He gets in an argument with Morgan at the local saloon and they part enemies. Shortly afterwards Morgan is met by a man to whom he owes money and in a quarrel he is killed. Hearing the struggle, Foster runs to the scene and is found bending over the body of his enemy. He is dragged from his wife and child and on circumstantial evidence is given twenty years. Some time later, John Dunlap, millionaire, is held up by a band of outlaws and left on the desert with his automobile disabled. He wanders for two days and two nights and when he is nearly dead, sees a light in the distance.

Dragging himself over the intervening space, he comes to a little house and, looking through the window, sees Foster's wife and little girl, Clara. Believing him to be a tramp, the woman gives him food and, going to the closet, takes one of her convict husband's coats and places it around him. She gives him shelter for the night and the next morning after the unknown millionaire has poured out his thanks for saving his life, directs him to the nearest town, where he telegraphs his bank. He returns to his home, and once there forgets the two

Ince Philosophy In Motion Pictures

Tact, discernment, an almost supernatural gift for analyzing the foibles and frailties with which the great human family is interlinked;—add to these experience, unremitting energy and an unwavering policy and you have a correct appraisal as to the value of Thomas H. Ince to the world of motion pictures.

Out of the great crucible of life Ince, the artificer, has forged film-studies which are distinctly Incian—and typical. Ince pictures will live because each conveys a lesson, each is peculiarly interwoven with our every-day lives.

Anybody can fashion a motion picture but it requires an inherent genius for moulding good motion pictures.

It may be said unreservedly that Thomas H. Ince was the first who kicked the beams from under the old order of things and launched a new era in picture-producing—known in film history as the Ince Dynasty.

The moonshine days of the motion picture are over. The empirical days of film-production are past. The days of jockeying the public are forever gone. Successful pictures nowadays are those that have successfully withstood the acid test.

It is an incontestable fact that many—too many—of the motion pictures of today have been left unfinished—unseparated from the chaff. Excellent plots and delicate effects they may have but they have not been given their final coat of paint. They have not been made shipshape.

Too many motion pictures are out of joint somewhere, nevertheless they are shunted on to the screen, holus bolus, to rise or fall according to the public barometer.

Rembrandt became world-famous because of his characteristic contrast of high lights and deep shadows. As a genius he was a Triton among the minnows—the supreme master.

Art was at its zenith when Rembrandt lived. The art of motion pictures is approaching the meridian of perfection with Thomas H. Ince as the great, modern film-painter of the picture producing world.

There is a subtle distinction about an Ince picture which speaks consistency and faultless technique. Ince pictures are all of them arch-productions—all of them brimful of world wisdom and a hundred and one other features which go to make up Ince filmology.

The work of Thomas H. Ince looms up today as conspicuous as a modern campanile in the great empire of moving pictures. By every ingenious method that the human mind can by possibility devise Ince has raised the standard of pictures to their present high level.

people, who have saved his life in the desert. Meanwhile Foster breaks jail. He is closely pursued and, after many miles of weary chase, finds himself in the wealthy section of a neighboring town. The Dunlaps have just finished dinner and the millionaire is telling his guests of the time he was lost in the desert. He goes to the closet to show his guests the coat the woman gave him, and finds crouching there Jim Foster, the escaped convict, who has entered by an open window. He begs Dunlap to hide him but the good citizen is about to give him up when the hunted man sees the coat and recognizing it, grabs it.

Hurriedly he tells Dunlap the coat is his and his wife and child are waiting for him to come back. Dunlap's heart is deeply touched, and, remembering the debt he owes to the family of the unfortunate man, Dunlap hides Foster and sends his pursuers on a false scent. After the hue and cry has died down, Dunlap gives the man employment, and, changing his name, Foster sends for his wife and child. There is a happy reunion. Sometime later the sheriff, caught on the desert, takes refuge in a deserted cabin and finds the skeleton of a man with a note written in blood, long dead, telling of his having killed Morgan. Foster is then exonerated.

TERROR (Two Parts—Feb. 10).—Jim Garrison lives with his wife on a western ranch. He is a great, hulking fellow, and has two sons. From their childhood Carson strives to make them men without fear. The elder is strong physically, and Carson takes pride in his strength. The younger is frail and delicate—a weakling.

They grow to be young men. The elder is the bully of the Gulch. When he returns home, his clothes torn from a fight, and his face cut, his father watches him with fierce pride. The younger stands in mortal fear of his brother. The younger has spent long nights reading books of learning. There is a girl who to the younger lad seems the epitome of everything beautiful. They meet every day at the bend of the hill. The bully sees them and is jealous of his brother.

Bad feeling is aroused between Carson and Danny Morgan, the girl's father, over the right to a strip of land. Trouble has been brewing for some time and things are ripe for a fight. Morgan has been drinking and forbids his girl to meet young Carson. There are words between the man and the boy. Later, as Morgan returns home, he meets the bully, Carson, who orders him to keep his sheep off Carson land. Morgan replies, and the bully, according to his code, "settles" the dispute with his fists. The fallen man does not rise and the bully discovers that old Danny Morgan is dead. Terror-stricken, bully Carson looks at the dead man and then turns to face the accusing eyes of his younger brother. In a moment the bully has the throat of his brother in a vise. "Keep your damn mouth shut," he hisses at him. The younger son gasps for breath, and then, with a deft twist, he frees himself from his brother's hold and runs to the hills.

The body of Dan Morgan is found and the girl remembers the quarrel between her father and the boy. The sheriff sets out toward the hills and finds him there, half-witted by a dull apathy of fear. His guilt seems indicated by every movement. They decide to hang him in the morning, but that night the bully helps him to escape. The bully marries the girl and they have a son. The bully watches the child for signs of strength. At the other side of the desert the younger son gets a job as a doctor's assistant.

"The Terror," a deadly plague, breaks out in several towns in the southwest. The doctor is stricken down and his young assistant takes his bag and goes forth alone among the sick to fight the terror. The fury of the plague abates and the other town sends a messenger to the young man to come to their aid. Across the desert he comes and they see the boy they would have hung. The bully crouches by the fire and is taunted by some of those he had fought and who now touch him with their plague-stricken bodies. He flees as the mob follows him. The younger lad is led back to his home by the crowd, by his side the girl holding the baby. From the window the girl sees the mob stoning her husband, the bully. The bully, already suspected of the crime, admits he killed Danny Morgan. In fear he runs toward the hill, the mob after him. In a wild dash for freedom he falls over the chasm to the rocks below and is killed. The young doctor cares for his brother's wife and later marries her.

A BIT O' HEAVEN (Feb. 28).—Faith and her little sister were products of a large city. Their father was doing time and their mother was a victim of drink. Faith sold papers at the corner of the street so sometimes they ate. One day she came home tired and used to hearing her mother's shrill voice cursing, she wondered at the silence. She found her little sister crying in a tumbled heap on the floor while her mother lay dead.

The children were alone. Faith led her little sister by the hand and together they stood at the corner selling papers. To the alley one day came the charity worker and to the children's room she came on her rounds. The charity worker moved by the case, intended reporting it to the authorities. Faith got some water and a bit of rag and after well scrubbing the face of her little sister scrubbed her own till it was sore, for the charity worker told them they must be clean to have God love them.

Mr. Marbury's little girl was looking forward to her birthday. She was to be ten and preparations for her birthday were in progress. Out with her nurse, she insisted on running across the street. A great truck bore down on her and a moment later they pick her up, a twisted and mangled bit of humanity. To her father they took her and as he looked down on her the heart of him was heavy.

Faith and her sister—their papers under their arms, determined to find God. Entering a large house, they see a crowd of well-satisfied men and women entering for a ball. Farther on they went and when they became tired sat down on the stoop of a mansion. Sleep overcome the tired little things, and Faith dreamed of a table spread with good things. Her mother was there but not a bit like she had been before, but very clean and quiet. Marbury was standing over the bed of his little girl. The child was dead.

Marbury went downstairs and looked at the birthday party all ready for the little soul that had gone. Putting on his great coat he left the house. He came upon the two children huddled together asleep on the steps. He took Faith by the hand. She looked at him sleepily. He led them both into the room where the party is spread. Rubbing her eyes with her two hands, Faith looked at him long and said, "You'se God and them's the eats you give." He put them up to the table and watched them eat. From Faith he got their story and, calling his housekeeper, he bade her make a room ready for his two new little girls. Later the two children were tucked up in a warm bed.

JOKER.

THE BANK NOTE (Feb. 1)—Tom warns Betty's dad that he and Betty intend to elope and be married. Dad is infuriated. He immediately hustles Betty away. Tom follows.

Dad runs afoul of Miss Priscilla Prim, who is aching to experience matrimony. Dad looks good to her. Tom and Betty have arranged a secret method of communication by means of invisible ink. He writes telling her to come at once, heavily veiled, and they will get married. Also that she will find him disguised as a fisherman.

This note falls into Dad's hands, but he can make nothing of it, it being blank paper. He throws it away and it falls at Miss Prim's door. She thinks Dad left it for her. She finds the paper blank. She starts to burn it up. The heat causes the letter to appear. She reads the message with joy, thinking it is meant for her. Tom learns from his messenger of the miscarriage of his note. He telephones to Betty. But Dad is on the job and overhears the whole conversation. Dad determines to teach Betty a good lesson. He disguises himself as a fisherman. When Miss Prim appears, heavily veiled, Dad thinks she is Betty. The minister performs the ceremony. When Dad finds himself bound for life to Priscilla Prim he throws up his hands and consents to Tom's and Betty's marriage on the spot and goes off on a honeymoon of his own.

SAVED BY A SHOWER (Feb. 27).—Gum-foot-Gus is warned to arrest Bunko Bill and Light-fingered Lil. A reward is offered for their apprehension. He spots this notorious pair sizing up Hiram and Arabella. The latter pair come to the city to see the sights. Gus arrests the crooks and hurries them away to get the reward.

Hiram and Arabella, his wife, put up at a hotel. In the meantime Gus meets his sweetheart. The two are joyous for the expected reward money is enough to unite them at last in blissful marriage. But quite unexpectedly the crooks escape. Gus is led a merry chase. The crooks hide in the same hotel wherein Hiram and Arabella have taken a suite. Gus is thrown off the scent. He is in despair.

The crooks spot Hiram and remember the size of the bank roll he carries. They disguise themselves, Bill as a bell hop, and Lil as a maid. They endeavor to secure Hiram's roll without success. But Lil starts a flirtation with Hiram, much to the indignation of Arabella. When Hiram rushes after Bill, who has stolen his pants, the pockets of which contain his bank roll, he finds himself in an empty suite. Here he also finds Lil nonchalantly dusting. He does not know that Bill is hiding in the locked closet. He forgets his troubles in the presence of Lil, however.

Arabella, peeking through the keyhole, discovers him with "That awful maid." Her suspicions are confirmed. Hiram bolts out the window when he hears Arabella coming. He hides on the balcony. And it is raining great guns. Arabella is a demon of fury. Lil is worried sick when the infuriated woman starts smashing in the closet door, thinking her hubby is therein. Bill also feels squirmish.

But Hiram is getting his shivering dreadfully in the cold rain. In his excitement he knocks the flower pots off the balcony. They land on the head of Gum-foot-Gus. The latter rushes upstairs indignant. He intends to chastise Hiram. But imagine his joy when he bumps into Lil and Bunko Bill once again. He loses no time in securing them.

Then Arabella discovers her unfaithful hubby in his plight on the balcony. Does she let him in out of the miserable cold and rain? Not she.

THE RUNAWAY CLOSET (Feb. 25).—Dot, who is Mrs. Jones' maid, has an infatuation for brass buttons and flirts with all the policemen in the neighborhood. Charles learns of her preference for a uniform and determines to borrow or steal one at the first opportunity. He soon finds one belonging to a police sergeant and exchanges his clothes for the uniform coat and helmet and returns to see Dot. Dot is entertaining Ernest, her policeman admirer, when Charley appears, and Ernest takes him for his own sergeant and runs away, leaving his rival a fair field.

The imitation policeman's wooing is interrupted, however, and he is forced to take refuge in a clothes closet. On the arrival of the sergeant, looking for his uniform, Mrs. Jones mistakes Charley for a burglar. Mr. Jones' sudden plunge into the situation and the policeman's mad desire for vengeance, makes it too hot for Charley. He cannot leave the wardrobe, so he takes it with him, and in the chase that follows the wardrobe leaves the house, with Charley's feet protruding from the bottom. It continues a zig-zag course till at length it falls blindly over a cliff, leaving Charley a much shattered but wiser man, with a determination to forswear brass buttons and uniforms in the future.

THE UNKNOWN BROTHER (Feb. 27).—Robert and Gordon Staples, brothers, walking along the seashore, see Captain Weatherby, an old sea dog, repairing his fish net. Tales of the sea interest the boys, aged seven and nine. Tattooed on chest and arms, the old seaman greatly interests the boys, who fancy a star mark on the old man's arm. They, too, want one. Agreed, the old man tattooes a star on each boy's arm.

Separate paths for twenty years finds Robert, the older brother, the sheriff of Shasta County, California, and Gordon, whose whereabouts are unknown to Robert, working in the same county on a mining claim that has given up no pay dirt. In a little cabin far on the mountain top, Gordon's wife and two little children live a daily existence, hoping their father and husband will strike it. In the city, Robert, the sheriff, lives with his wife and baby. From French Gulch the stage travels thirty miles, carrying bullion. Four road agents, plotting to make a clean up, need a fifth man for their work. The failure of Gordon's mine make him an easy prey for the bandits. He consents to help them, telling his wife of his plan. She pleads in vain but Gordon goes.

Along the mountain road, the stage carrying the express box, passes. Gordon, about to carry out his agreement with the bandits, turns to see his wife and baby in the open door of his cabin, far on the mountain above him. His betterself is his master and he sinks to his knees; the stage passing on, only to fall into the hands of the bandits, three of whom are killed by Sheriff Staples and his posse. One bandit is taken prisoner. By a great mistake, Gordon is also shot, taken to his cabin, and the mask found upon his body. Here Robert, the older brother, in an effort to dress the wound of Gordon temporarily, discovers the twin star on his arm, identifying the two as brothers. The prisoner bandit tells of Gordon's failure to keep his agreement to hold up the stage coach and is taken away. United, the brothers show the big love between men.

THE AVENGING DENTIST (Two Parts—Feb. 28).—Each flirt was contented with his girl until he saw the other flirts' girls. This led rapidly to events which resulted in the stout flirt getting his face in the way of the other flirt's foot. The contact resulted in lost teeth on the former's part and also a fervent desire to meet the other that he might kill him. Once home, his battered jaw did not improve and he consented to meet his daughter's sweetheart, who had just called only after persuasion. The introduction was not cordial, as the young man turned out to be the same person who had kicked out father's teeth. Therefore he left rather hurriedly, but not without mixing with father and knocking out his few remaining molars. This last experience induced father to go straight to the dentist. Instead of relief, he found in the dentist the same young man who had knocked out his teeth twice previously. This tooth destroyer was a dentist all the time and neither father nor daughter were aware of it. How father attempted to cut loose rebounded to his sorrow, as he had to be taken home on a truck and the two dentists fell down a manhole.

THE GIRL WHO COULDN'T GO WRONG (Two Parts—Feb. 28).—Nan De Vere is a member of the chorus and, like the others, has her ups and downs. She has lived straight, but at last decides that it does not pay.

She is pursued by a Mr. Lany, a wealthy hunter of the stage door, and at last decides to accept his money and attentions, which he has been offering her for some time. Nan is notified by Marie, a fellow member of the chorus, that Lany is waiting for her in the wings. She prepares to play her part of the game. Lany has a wife, a true and devoted woman, who has stuck with him through thick and thin, but who has been unable to keep pace with his progress in the social world.

In a last attempt to rescue her husband from the wiles of the show girl, Mrs. Lany calls upon Nan De Vere to release her husband. Nan is at first contemptuous, but when Mrs. Lany tells her tearful story of her husband's and her own terrible struggle up from poverty, of his lucky mining strike and succeeding affluence, and finally his growing indifference and coldness for the wife who has enabled him to reach his present position, Nan's heart is touched and she resolves to give the unthinking husband a lesson.

She hides Mrs. Lany behind a curtain and sends word to Mr. Lany that she will see him. Lany enters and takes her in his arms, when by a previously arranged plan with Joe, one of the men of the theater, hears Nan's screams. Joe comes in flourishing a revolver and claims her husband, Lany, concludes he is the victim of a "badger game" and the woman he married is the only true-hearted woman in the world. He leaves the dressing room willingly.

THE CURSE OF THE DESERT (Two Parts—Feb. 27).—The Colonel and the men at the English barracks receive news of the uprising in Lucknow, and immediately set out in force to aid their unfortunate comrades. Nan, the Colonel's daughter, is left behind with her mother.

A native spy in the garrison of the English leaves for Lucknow to inform Nana, the native leader, of the sending of reinforcements to the English. He arrives at Nan's palace, delivers his message and Nana plans to outwit the oncoming English by sending a number of his Sepoys to attack the defenseless barracks. The barracks are attacked, the Colonel's wife is killed and his daughter, Nan, taken prisoner by Nana. He makes her a captive in his palace. The Colonel learns of the massacre and returns to the barracks with his men to find his wife and his daughter missing. He immediately plans to revenge himself on Nana, but he receives a message from the native chieftain informing him that if the English try to attack him he would kill the girl. Back at the barracks Tom and Jim, two patriotic young fellows, inform the captain that they will leave immediately for Nana's palace in Lucknow and will rescue Nan. The Colonel endeavors to dissuade them, but they are only the more determined to accomplish their object.

They tell the captain to have his men ready and when he sees a light upon the castle dome to charge in full force. They then leave.

Stealthily approaching one of the small gates of the castle, they overpower the two guards on duty and enter. They secure some native clothes as disguises and proceed to the palace. Again they overpower the guards of one of the small entrances and make their way into the interior of the palace. Nana is about to overpower the defenseless Nan, when the boys entering the apartment attack Nana and the guard who is on duty and overpower the two by their superior strength. They barricade the door against the natives who are rushing to the assistance of their leader. Having dispatched the two natives and hiding Nana's clothes and admitting the infuriated natives, one of the young men impersonates Nana and directs them toward the gates of the city, where he claims the English have escaped. The natives rush out and the two boys go up to the dome of the castle and make a signal fire. The English under the command of the Colonel hastily attack. A cannon is mounted on the roof of the castle and, aiming at the principal gate, the boys set it off and demolish the portal, thus giving the English troops entry into the city. The natives are finally subdued and happy reunion follows between father and daughter.

THE GRATITUDE OF CONDUCTOR 786 (Feb. 14).—When Conductor 786 is fired because a woman, through her own carelessness, has fallen off the car, Jack, the superintendent's son, who has witnessed the accident, persuades his father to reinstate the old man. A little later Jack fails in an attempt to elope with Mary, and appeals to Conductor 786 in his trouble. The grateful conductor borrows for him the high powered line auto. Together they succeed in getting Mary away from the house on the top of the auto. But her father is roused, and he and his chauffeur give chase. The young couple have no time to stop at the parson's, so they drive up to his window and he boards the auto. Discovering that a female

"A MAN OF IRON" (Two parts—Feb. 16).—Caleb Masters, president of a big manufacturing company, realizing that luxury is slowly ruining his children, refuses the offer of a millionaire, who wishes him to go into partnership, and permits the refusal to force him into bankruptcy. He then takes a position as manager of a large quarry where Ben, his son, works with him. Belle, his daughter, becoming housekeeper for her father and brother. Not for a minute does Masters regret his step, for he sees his children, through plenty of wholesome, hard work, becoming thoroughly industrious and dependable. He is satisfied that he has saved them in the nick of time from moral disgrace. The only other person, who realizes the situation is Mrs. Travers, a wealthy widow. She keeps in touch with the family and is loyal to them during their so-called "misfortune." Later, she is the means of Masters' reinstatement in the business world. And after Ben and Belle have married worthily, Mrs. Travers and their father also celebrate their wedding.

"HER SISTER'S KIDDIES" (Feb. 21).—Samuel Bender, a wealthy bachelor, offers to stay with his sister's children, while she takes a fortnight's rest and vacation. He writes her that nothing could possibly give him more pleasure than to be with his small nephew and niece, whom he has made sole heirs to his estate. He buys all kinds of toys and games—enough to make his life miserable for a month—and departs for the country. In two days his sister receives a telegram, stating that Samuel has been called back to New York on very urgent business. Once aboard the train, he experiences some relief. But he loses no time in destroying his will and making a new one in which he leaves his property, real and personal, to the orphan dogs of Gotham.

RELIANCE.

"THE STUDIO OF LIFE" (Feb. 8).—Marian MacDonald, wrapped up in her art studies, is heedless of the advances of John Darby, who is rich and sympathetic. Twice she refuses his proposals of marriage. But her teacher, Matthew Bowden, realizes, that though she has an excellent technique, her work is lacking in feeling. He sees that Darby is in love with Marian and hopes that through this channel the soul of the young artist may be roused. However, when Marian at last accepts Darby, she is prompted by sudden jealousy, when he feigns interest in another girl. Buried in her new life as wife and mother, she has no time for her painting. When Marian's little girl, Bess, is three years old, Bowden comes to visit his old friend and former pupil. He encourages Marian to take up her art studies again. Soon she presents him with a picture in which he recognizes the spirit which formerly all her attempts lacked. But Bess, the little girl, also has artistic if misdirected, instincts. She gets hold of the canvas and daubs it beyond recognition. Bowden's and Darby's consternation is great. But Marian herself, hugging the teary and penitent child, tells them that her dearest interests in life are her home, her husband and Bess.

"THE DEATH DICE" (Two Parts—Feb. 13).—Baptismo, a ranch hand, and Sellers, a cowboy, quarrel over a card game. Baptismo gets the worst of it and determines to kill Sellers. Sellers and Bass, a newcomer, are rivals for the hand of Florence Steel, daughter of a neighboring rancher. On her account they have a violent disagreement, and Florence, fearing results, compels Bass to surrender his knife to her. As he moves off, Sellers tries to kiss Florence. She menaces him with the knife. Then, as he strolls away, whistling "The Dying Cowboy," she drops the blade in horror and runs into the house. Baptismo finds the knife and steals after Sellers. When, an hour later, Sellers is found, stabbed in the back, suspicion falls upon Bass, the owner of the knife discovered by the dead man's side. Believing that Florence has killed Sellers in defending herself from his advances, Bass does not deny the charge against himself. Lafe Johnson, ex-sheriff, observes the effect upon Baptismo of "The Dying Cowboy," which he happens to be humming in the Mexican's hearing. This rouses his suspicions. He watches Baptismo and finally arrests him. Popular opinion, however, is against Bass and the idea that Baptismo is the guilty man is jeered at. Johnson, in desperation, suggests that the two men's lives be staked upon the dice. By a clever trick the ex-sheriff makes fate decide against Baptismo, who then confesses. Florences asks Bass's forgiveness for misjudging him, and later they are married.

"THE OTHER MAN" (Feb. 15).—Arthur Matthews, a successful writer, and a man of broad sympathies, singles out of the breadline Kerwood, an unkempt wreck of a man, whom yet he discerns to be a person of good breeding. He takes him to his home, and learning that he was formerly on a newspaper, makes him his secretary. On introducing Kerwood to his wife, Matthews fails to notice the startled look of recognition, which flashes between them. The servants become aware of clandestine meetings between their mistress and the stranger. Matthews overhears some of the servants' gossip, and soon after surprises his wife and secretary together. That same night Kerwood and Mrs. Matthews meet ready to leave the house, each carrying a suitcase. The butler sees them and warns Matthews, who, infuriated, snatches up a pistol and rushes into the library. A struggle ensues, and Matthews is on the point of shooting Kerwood, when his wife manages to attract his attention to a note she has left on the table. Then he learns that his secretary is the wife's reprobate brother, whose identity she has not dared to disclose. She had planned secretly to take him home to her father to beg for his forgiveness.

THE DEPUTY'S CHANCE THAT WON (Feb. 17).—Mollie Owens, affianced to Dick Calvert, deputy sheriff, is taken captive by Monk Turgis, an outlaw, and imprisoned in "death cabin." Turgis and his pal try to frighten money out of Mollie's mother. Dick Calvert is put on the trail of the bandits. He happens to see one of them going into the cabin, shunned by everybody on account of two mysterious murders once perpetrated in the shack, and immediately investigates. He is seized by the outlaws, who truss him up. While they are forcing Mollie to write another threatening note to her mother, Calvert manages to slip a scrawled line into the pocket of one of the bandits, who later drops it in the town gambling room. The clue is taken to the Sheriff, who rides post haste to "death cabin," captures the outlaws and rescues the lovers.

THE FATAL BLACK BEAN (Feb. 19).—Anita, a Mexican girl, falls in love with John Gordon, an American mine superintendent, hated by her brother, Pedro. Later, Pedro plans Gordon's assassination. Anita conceals in her clothing a black bean, and feigning that Gordon has done her a wrong, goes to her brother and begs to be allowed to kill the American. As she has expected, Pedro tells her that the assassin will be chosen by lot—and then he passes round a hat full of beans, all of which are white save one, which is black. Anita surreptitiously takes the black bean out of her waist and the duty of planting the bomb, which is to destroy her lover is accorded to her. After she has disguised herself as a man and ridden off, her brother discovers the black bean left in the hat. Suspicious of Anita, he follows her on horseback. She does her best to evade him, but is caught and forced to plant the bomb. Secretly, however, she has removed the fuse. Meanwhile Gordon finds the unexploded bomb, and looking for its thrower, he descries Anita struggling with Pedro in the distance. Gordon arrives just in time to save the girl's life; and the brother and his horse, falling over the cliff, are killed.

PRINCESS.

ACROSS THE WAY (Feb. 12).—Sparks learns, upon visiting his fiancee, Bianca, an art student, that his friend, Tom Brown, a writer, is living across the court. He soon sees that Bianca and Brown are mutually attracted and plans to play a joke upon his friend, which shall make the latter doubt his own sanity. He persuades Bianca to enact a scene with him before the drawn window curtain in which she is attacked by a man with a pistol and, drawing a dagger from her bosom, defends herself, killing her assailant. Brown, seeing all this in silhouette on the shade, rushes to Bianca's assistance. He finds her reading peacefully, and is told that the incident must have been an hallucination of his own brain. A few evenings after this Bianca actually is attacked by a burglar. Brown, who now is "on" to the fact that in the former instance his friend Sparks had designs upon him, at first thinks this also is another of Sparks' "jokes." However, he goes stealthily to investigate—and is just in time to save the girl, who breaks her engagement to Sparks and marries Brown.

MAJESTIC.

A MAN AND HIS WORK (Feb. 16).—Connolly enjoys a good breakfast with his wife, Mary, and his children, who are very dear to him. He then reports at police headquarters as usual. He is detailed on the job of catching a man, who the night before has committed a safe robbery and all but murdered a night watchman. The watchman is able to identity the thief's picture in the rogues' gallery, and Connolly, taking his life in his hands, sets out on his trail. He knows Smitty's hang-out, and disguising himself as a yeggman, succeeds in finding him and a pal. A fierce fight ensues, in which the thieves make their getaway and lead the detective a chase to Smitty's tenement. Connolly finally outwits the crooks, however, and turns them over to the authorities. He then dresses the wounds he has received, changes his clothes and goes home to supper. Not a word of the perils he has undergone passes his lips to Mary and the children.

THE LOST LORD LOVELL (Two Parts—Feb. 21).—Molly, a slavey in a New York boarding house, is in love with Herbert, the butler at the house next door. They are engaged to be married. Molly is a sort of Cinderella, whom everybody in the boarding house picks on—especially Beth, an actress in search of a rich husband. A mysterious man comes to the place, and both Molly and Beth, because of his resemblance to a picture they have seen in the paper of the lost Lord Lovell, believe him to be none other than this titled Englishman, whom the trustees of his estate are seeking. Beth gets the stranger a place in her company, and the manager makes money featuring "the lost Lord Lovell." Meanwhile, Molly and the butler have been married. To celebrate their honeymoon they go to the theater. Coming out, they read in the paper about the hit Lord Lovell is making on Broadway and the story of his disappearance from England. The butler is slightly surprised at this—for he is in fact the true Lord Lovell. He proves his identity, much to the chagrin of the actress and the disgrace of the impostor. And Molly, the poor little slavey, who has in her the makings of a great lady, is rather surprised to find herself the wife of a real English lord.

KOMIC.

MUSIC HATH CHARMS (Feb. 14).—Jim and Jed, rivals for the hand of Nell, both ask her father's consent. She is in love with the latter, who performs brilliantly upon the piano. But her father favors Jim, who aspires to become a great singer. It is decided to let the matter rest six months, and then try out the suitors on the strength of their musical abilities. Jim learns only too soon that never will he become a Caruso. Chancing upon an Italian laborer, however, who has the voice of an opera singer, he arranges for Tony to act as his proxy in the forthcoming tryout. On the evening of the contest, the Italian, concealed behind a curtain, sings while Jim goes through the motions in dumb show—and the pianist is eclipsed. All is well, until Tony is attracted to the kitchen by the maid. There he partakes of punch and is moved to sing on his own account. The sounds penetrate to the parlor. Jim's ruse is laid bare. And Nell starts in taking lessons on the piano from Jed.

ETHEL GETS CONSENT (Chapter 17 of the Famous "Bill" Series—Feb. 21).—Ed, Ethel's beau, going out in the morning, accidentally leaves behind him a note from Ethel asking him to take her to luncheon that day. Ed's mother finds the note and thinking it is intended for Ed's father proceeds to look into matters. Meanwhile, Ed has called on his father to announce his intentions of marrying the fascinating stenographer. But father cannot see it at all. Ed calls for Ethel and they go to luncheon. A few minutes later, his father enters Hadley's office meaning to talk Ethel out of the match. Seeing a client of the lawyer's leaving the place, he follows her, believing her to be Ethel. She chances to enter the same restaurant where Ed and Ethel are. Ed, seeing his father coming, slips under the table, and is delighted to hear father entering into animated conversation with Ethel, who evidently is making a hit. Meanwhile, Ed's mother has traced her husband to Hadley's office. Learning that Ethel has gone out to luncheon with a gentleman, she hastens on to the cafe. At her approach, it is father's turn to get under the table, where he and Ed are brought unexpectedly face to face. Ed Sr. gives his consent to the match, and in return Ed Jr. squares things for father with mother.

BEAUTY.

THE HAPPIER MAN (Feb. 16).—Mary Fuller, a young reporter, envies William Summer, a rich bachelor mine owner—until she learns his story. She is sent to interview him and he confides to her the history of his youth. He and Harry Warden both had loved Lucille Page. Then they went west to prospect for gold, and his own eyes were blinded by dreams of wealth. When the opportunity presented itself for Summer to work a rich claim, which fate brought into his hands, he willingly came to an understanding with Warden, that he should resign to him all claims upon Lucille Page, if his friend cared to go back East to her. For his own part, he would stay and dig a fortune out of the earth. Years later Summer returns a millionaire—to find his former partner happily married to the sweetheart of their youth. In contrast to Warden's, his own life is empty. Mary Fuller learns that there are some joys which great wealth cannot buy.

AMERICAN.

IN THE TWILIGHT (Two Parts—Feb. 15).—Ellen and Mary, two sisters, are courted by George and Sam, who are brothers. At evening when the girls' mother plays to them the twilight song, she tells them that just as they are happy now in the twilight of the day, so must they watch to keep their love and happiness also in the twilight hour of life. They laugh, never doubting the future. Mary and Sam are married, and their hopes are fulfilled. George, however, goes to the city, where he goes rapidly down hill. He marries Doris Grant, and Ellen is left on the farm, broken-hearted. Years later, George, released from penitentiary, his wife dead, seeks the home of his boyhood. He finds that Sam and Mary have adopted his little girl—and faithful Ellen still is awaiting. Thus, in the twilight of life, the lovers, whose early dreams were frustrated, find their happiness together.

SAINTS AND SINNERS (Feb. 17).—"The Saint" of the village is a rich woman, who lives in a big house and plays Lady Bountiful. She professes herself a Christian and has a great deal to say about the force of her example in the community. "The Sinner" is a young man who does not pose as godly. He even plays cards, and it is whispered about that he is an atheist. To this village comes a broken-hearted girl with her nameless child. "The Saint" hears her story and turns her away. But "The Sinner" takes her in and cares for her and the baby. Her presence in his house creates consternation among the villagers, and their feeling is intensified, when on Sunday "The Sinner" and the strange woman appear at church. Fortunately, the minister of the town is no hypocrite. And through his efforts, the outcast at length is made one of the community.

BRONCHO.

SHORTY'S SECRET (Two Parts—Feb. 17).—Shorty's pal, Bill Forbes, is in love with Nell Compton, the banker's daughter, and she with him. Judge Tuttle, who also aspires to the girl's hand, has the support of the father. Shorty and the cowboys go into town and Shorty gets "soused." He is arrested and discovers a rich mine in the cellar of the jail. He is bailed out and goes home. Meanwhile Forbes has been informed by the banker that unless he can raise $5,000 he cannot pay attention to his daughter. Shorty discovers this and arranges to get arrested again. He does so, and passes out to Simms through the bars enough money to give Forbes $5,000, and also buy the jail property. Shorty is given six months but Simms has bought the jail property. The sheriff is ousted and Shorty is supplied with all the delicacies of the season in his cell, where he intends to spend six months. The story ends with the reunion of Bill Forbes and Nell.

KAY-BEE.

MR. SILENT HASKINS (Two Parts—Feb. 9).—Priscilla Miller, the village milliner, and a leader in the uplift work of the village, is a young and pretty girl. She receives a letter from Lon Haskins, at Gunning, Arizona, informing her that her uncle has died and left her his business. Priscilla decides to go to Arizona and run the business herself.

Upon her arrival there she discovers the business to be a big saloon, and gambling and dance hall. She is much shocked and orders Lon to close the whole works. This angers the townspeople and Jim Black, a profesional gambler, suggests that he marry Priscilla and take over the business. He goes to her room to put his plan in force but there he runs into Lon, who orders him out. He and Black meet outside the saloon and Lon informs him that he also is offering his services in the marrying line. The men decide that Lon and Black gamble for Priscilla, the first man who goes broke to leave the town and give up the girl. Lon, by means of a trick seal ring, wins but, thinking Priscilla does not care for him, he says nothing to her about it. Priscilla decides to go back home and writes a note to Lon telling him he is welcome to her uncle's place, as he would have been to the owner, had he cared. Lon mounts his horse and overtakes the stage, grabs Priscilla and they ride to the minister.

THE SECRET OF THE DEAD (Two Parts—Feb. 18).—Donna Carrillo and her daughter, Maria, are the descendents of an old Spanish family and have sunk to comparative poverty. Their notes are held by a Don in the neighborhood, who insists upon the payment of the interest or the hand of Maria Carillo in marriage. This condition is hateful to both the daughter and the mother.

On the estate of the Carrillos, a party from an Eastern University is excavating for Indian relics. They find a petrified Indian which proves very valuable. The University makes Donna Carrillo an offer which she accepts and with this money intends to pay off the interest. Don Jose discovers this and shoots the petrified Indian, destroying it. Imbedded in the breast of the Indian is a parchment which reveals the hiding place of immense treasure. Tom, the son of the professor in charge, heads an expedition to recover the petrified Indian. Tom is particularly desirous of recovering it because of the love which exists between himself and Maria.

Meanwhile, Don Jose, learning of this, incites the Indians to waylay the expedition. They do so, desperate fighting results, the expedition being rescued by Mexican rurales. Don Jose returns, informs the Carrillos that the party has been massacred and insists on the payment of the interest or Maria's hand in marriage. The party arrive in opportune time and everything ends happily for Maria and Tom, while Don Jose is killed by the Indian chieftain, whom he failed to assist at the crucial moment with his peons, thus resulting in the extermination of the tribe.

KEYSTONE.

MABEL, FATTY AND THE LAW (Jan. 28).—In a small city park where strict vigilance is maintained against flirting, Mabel, a young and pretty wife with a bore of a husband innocently amuses herself with the harmless attentions of Fatty. Fatty relishes the situation all the more because this is one of those rare occasions, when he has succeeded in escaping from the jailor-like watchfulness of his wife. Meanwhile, Fatty's wife and Mabel's husband are carrying on a similar game. They are discovered by the police and a sensational arrest ensues. Both couples appear in court, where numerous complications make a reelful of fun.

THE HOMEBREAKERS (Two parts—Feb. 1.)—A bank president in a small town bestows attentions and gifts upon the wife of his cashier. The cashier, meanwhile, is lavishing compliments and gifts upon the wife of the president. The deception on both sides is successfully perpetrated until the wives put in an appearance on the same day at their husbands' place of business. A slight slip on the part of the janitor plunges everybody in disaster, and the married couples earnestly repent their folly.

FEATURE FILM STORIES

PATHE EXCHANGE, INC.

THE ACID TEST (Balboa—Three Parts).—Ted Miller, the son of a railway general manager, toils not, neither does he spin. In fact, the only work he enjoys is trying to fill a straight flush in a poker game, or driving his fast racer. He is at length prevailed upon by his father to accept a position in the office. The dull routine of office work palls on him, however, and he longs for excitement. This he gets when a couple of chorus girls calls on him at the office. His father remonstrates with him and threatens to cut off his allowance. Pressed for money Ted sells his racing machine and proceeds to "burn up" the proceeds. Broke at length he accepts a position with the railway construction gang. Strange to say, he labors honestly, Spurred on by the scornful smile of a saucy telegraph girl, Ted plugs along realizing that he has fallen in love with her. Put on his mettle Ted's ability asserts itself and he is promoted to assistant traffic engineer. Following a terrific storm the railroad is tied up by a flood. By stint of hard work and Herculean efforts Ted at last sees success crown his efforts, and the road is finally cleared. Traffic is again resumed. David Miller, the general manager, on a tour of inspection, demands to see the man who is responsible for the good work. His surprise may be judged when he learns that his own son is the man. Explanations and forgiveness follow, but the "girl with the saucy smile" must needs be included in the happy reunion.

THE EXPLOITS OF ELAINE (Eleventh Episode—Two parts—"The Hour of Three").—Perry Bennet decides upon a wrist-watch as a suitable birthday gift for Elaine, and in company with her and Susie Martin, a selection is made and the timepiece left to be regulated. Another purchaser then moves to the counter and demands a watch identical with the one just sold Bennett. He is served, and exits with the watch in his possession. Craig Kennedy in his laboratory, explains to his assistant Jameson that his new telegraphone will record everything spoken over the wire. He has it attached to the switchboard of an apartment house, wherein dwells a desperate woman, one of the chief accomplices of the Clutching Hand. The purchaser of the second watch makes his way quickly to the abode of the master criminal, to whom he delivers the time-piece. That subtle scoundrel immediately begins his vile machinations upon it. He affixes a small needle, treated with a most virulent poison, and so governed by the works of the watch that at any designated time it will shoot forth and prove the doom of its wearer. Kennedy's examination of his telegraphone shows that his suspect called a certain number the day before, and was told that "the trick would be pulled off at three o'clock." The phone number is traced, and proves to be the liar of the Clutching Hand. Disguised as that criminal, Kennedy enters his rooms. When the Clutching Hand himself arrives, he is confronted by the detective, who calls the game up. Kennedy's triumph is short-lived, however, when he is informed that in twenty minutes Elaine Dodge will be no more. He grants the criminal temporary immunity to learn how Elaine's life will be attempted. When the full horror of the fiendish craft is disclosed, he rushes madly off, and arriving with just two minutes to spare, tears the watch from the wrist of the unsuspecting girl. As he rushed from the presence of the Clutching Hand, Kennedy removed his hat from the table where it covered a selenium cell, an electrical contrivance that allows the electricity to pass through it only when exposed to the light. The current rings a bell in an adjoining lot, where Jameson and a squad of policemen await the signal to raid the headquarters of the nefarious crook, He, seeing the wires, and scenting an attack, vanishes into a secret passageway through his desk, and, a short while later, under the very noses of his pursuers, saunters urbanely from an adjoining apartment, a bewhiskered and distinguished foreigner.

THE POLICE DOG (2nd Episode—An Animated Cartoon Comedy).—Officer Piffle, of the "White Lights" squad, seeks relaxation from his labors by taking a plunge in the harbor. A hungry shark, on the lookout for eats, makes a play for the cop, and a merry chase follows. The Pinkerton Pup decides to teach Piffle a lesson, and makes off with the officer's pants. He carries them to a nearby pawnbroker, and endeavors to sell them to him for three "beans." The pawnbroker can't see it, so the pup decides to try the butcher, who trades a large juicy steak for Piffle's pants. Meanwhile the shark and Officer Piffle fight it out to a finish. The shark is glad to get rid of his tormentor, who looks in vain for his trousers. Piffle substitutes a barrel for his missing garment. The barrel is a tight fit which fact is noted by "Billy" Goat, who, with a well-directed butt, sends Piffle rolling toward the station house where he finally lands on top of the Captain. Charged with assault and conduct unbecoming to an officer, Piffle is left to languish and soliloquize in a cell.

A TRIP TO MADEIRA.—Many interesting views are shown of the Madeiras, a group of islands belonging to Portugal, which lie off the northwest coast of Africa. Entering the Harbor of Funchal, a magnificent panorama of the city is seen. An interesting diversion for the incoming passengers is to throw coins into the water which are recovered by the young natives, who are skillful divers. Many interesting scenes are depicted, which clearly show the typical life of these islands. One of the interesting places to the traveller is the ancient residence that once sheltered the late Empress Elizabeth, of Austria. A host of tourists make a rendezvous of Reid's palace, which is famed for its cuisine and the delightful views to be had from its verandas. The spectator is afforded a journey by rail starting from Bombal, which is one unending series of beautiful and charming views.

WILD BIRDS (Scotland—In the same reel as foregoing).—To get an intimate view of the life of wild birds, will be readily conceded to be a difficult matter for the ordinary student of bird life. In this film, however, all difficulty is removed, for many and interesting are the views here shown, which give one an opportunity to study at close hand the habits of our feathered friends. Among the birds which are introduced to the spectator are the Merlins, the Snipe, the Plover, the Black Duck, and others.

"THE EXPLOITS OF ELAINE" (Tenth Episode, Two Parts, "The Life Current").—The Clutching Hand, realizing the futility of trying to match wits with Craig Kennedy, decides upon a novel scheme to discredit the scientific detective in the eyes of his sweetheart, Elaine Dodge. Through his friend Jameson, a newspaper reporter, Kennedy becomes interested in the puzzling "poisoned kiss," which has created a furore among the New York women. The Clutching Hand gives instructions to an attractive, though corrupt young woman, and to her husband, who agree to take an active part in his attempt to make Elaine doubt her lover. The woman calls Jameson on the 'phone, and through him interests Kennedy in the evil "poisoned kiss" which, she claims, has been perpetrated on her. She and her husband contrive a camera attachment to a mounted deer's head, and the husband clicks the camera twice while his pretty wife demonstrates to Kennedy the manner in which the "poisoned kiss" was imprinted on her lips. The pictures are taken to Elaine by the woman, who begs Elaine to give up Craig Kennedy, saying she is his affianced bride. When Kennedy arrives at the Dodge home Elaine refuses the diamond engagement ring he has so confidently brought. His explanations are discredited, and he finally leaves in a huff. Elaine, lured to the woman's home, is there overpowered by the husband and dragged into an unusued sewer, where she is left to die. Kennedy's love, stronger than his wrath, draws him again to the Dodge home, where he learns of Elaine's visit. Quickly suspicious, he gets Jameson to accompany him, and enlisting the aid of a policeman, arrives at the woman's home just in time to see the husband of the "poisoned kiss" faker come up through the cellar, from the asphyxiating sewer. Kennedy, fearing treachery, fixes the man's oxygen helmet to his head and descending, returns with Elaine, who is so overcome that the doctors, hastily called, pronounce her dead. Kennedy's knowledge of ultra-modern science, however, enables him to apply the famous Professor Leduc's method of electrical resuscitation and Elaine once again finds herself indebted for her life to science—and love.

PARAMOUNT.

IT'S NO LAUGHING MATTER (Bosworth).—Hi Judd, poet, postmaster and philosopher, is the sunshine of the village, a veritable doctor of happiness. His right arm the little world of the village leans on, the kind words he scatters broadcast reap their harvest of love for the old postmaster and the verses he writes (sometimes when he should be working) proclaims him the wit of the village. And because of the verse writing Mrs. Judd is often discouraged. Hi confides in his daughter, Bess, that he often stands in awe of Mrs. Judd when she catches him pencil in hand, with the woodpile untouched and the chores not done. But Bess is consoling and when Hi is not around she makes a collection of the verses and sends them on to a great newspaper.

Theirs is a peaceful life that must have its dramatic climax and it all descends upon them at once. Jim Skinner, an unscrupulous, grasping old miser, holds the mortgage on the house and also has designs upon Hi's position as postmaster. Then the bank fails and shadows hang low.

In the meantime drama is stirring within their home. Bess who had thought she cared for Hal, the station master is under the spell of Sam who has come from the city to be the new ticket agent. Hi, dubious of his character and regretting his daughter's change of heart, before it is too late, finds a picture of Sam, his wife and their baby. Hi recognized in the wife, Belle, the long missing daughter of Mother Wilkins, a widow of the village whose home has burned and who would have suffered privation had it not been for the generosity of Hi. He sends for Belle, making her believe the money and message come from Sam and when Sam is confronted with the wife and baby he sees there is nothing to be done but face the unexpected situation.

The mortgage is due. Heartbroken, they are preparing to leave the little home when word comes from the newspaper—"Verses accepted, send them as fast as you can write them."

Thus ends the story. Hi, with his $500 check from the newspaper pays off the mortgage, the future holds its promise—Mother Wilkins is happy with her daughter and the little baby—and Hal and Bess are engaged to be married.

RUNAWAY JUNE (Episode No. 5—"A Woman in Trouble"—Two Parts).—In the preceding installment June, the runaway bride, was sent to a mysterious house by an employment agency, and followed by Gilbert Blye, the man with the black Vandyke.

June is shown into what was apparently once the parlor of a gambling house, but is now fitted up as an office. Blye and the keeper of the house peer smilingly at her through the hall door. Then the keeper enters, and after a short chat with June, hires her.

Aunt Debby, the Moore's cook, goes marketing, and meets Marie June's maid, who is also marketing. There is a scene in the market, Marie denying that she knows Aunt Debby. But the old servant will not easily be put off, and she wrestles with Marie, knocks her down, and sits on her. Several policemen, hearing the commotion, enter, and arrest Aunt Debby. The patrol is summoned, but the policemen, to their great chagrin, find that the door of the wagon is not of ample size to permit of the free passage of Aunt Debby's corpulent frame. Marie does not like to see Aunt Debby arrested, and when Officer Dowd, Marie's friend, appears, she whispers to him, and he gets the other officers to let Aunt Debby go free. Aunt Debby hurries to Ned, the deserted husband of June, and he, summoning his detectives, rushes to the market to endeavor to take up Marie's trial, but to no avail.

June is instructed in her duties by the keeper, and is horrified when it dawns upon her that the place is a gambling establishment. Mrs. Gwen Perry, a patron of the place, finds herself hopelessly in debt, and her husband will not give her any money over her allowance. The keeper duns her for her debt, but Mrs. Perry cannot pay. The keeper then calls up Mr. Perry, but he, furious, threatens to raid the place. The keeper informs Blye of the threat, and one of the girl employees is sent to the basement to be in readiness to start a fire, if a raid takes place. Mr. Perry enters, and has an argument with the keeper, at length telling him to call Mrs. Perry. It is evident that he is through with his wife, but June, summoning her courage, takes an active interest in this new phase of the eternal money question which caused her to leave Ned, and pleads with Mr. Perry. He at length relents, but Mrs. Perry, entering the room and seeing him, is seized with sudden panic, flees, and is about to shoot herself, when June intervenes. Mr. Perry takes her into his arms, and there is a happy reconciliation. At this moment some policemen appear at the door, and the fire is started. A mad rush from the house follows, June escaping with the rest in the confusion. But Blye picks up her trail, and follows her through the streets. Ned, on a street car, sees June running along, and Blye pursuing her, and he hastily alights from the car and pursues.

A DAUGHTER OF THE PEOPLE (Dyreda—Five Parts).—Arthur Stillman, the senior member of the firm of Stillman and Thornton, cotton goods manufacturers of Rockton, Mass., has closed his mills under the pretense that he cannot obtain cotton to operate, but really because he has conceived the plan of secretly buying cotton and storing it for the rise in price that he knows will come. The town of Rockton is entirely dependent upon the mills for its existence and the closing of the mills causes great suffering and even starvation. Dell Hamilton, daughter of an old mill dyer and a favorite with her people by reason of her sweet character and true sympathy with them, is probably the one in Rockton who suffers most. Her lover, Sam Lloyd, in despair at his inability to provide for his mother and sick sister, receives a note from a friend suggesting that if he can get to Springdale, a town nine miles distant, that he may get a job as fireman in a certain mill. On his way home, he accidentally comes upon a large warehouse which he learns is filled with cotton bales, and upon careful inquiry he finds that the cotton is being stored there by Stillman and Thornton. In a flash the true state of affairs is recognized by him and spurred on by bitter anger he makes his way back to Rockton, where he meets some of his mates and makes known his discovery. The news spreads throughout the town and groups of mill hands gather here and there voicing their indignation. Bill Slinger, a great strapping big-hearted fellow and a favorite among them is selected as a leader to get them either justice or revenge.

Dell, in horror, goes to Stillman's house to warn him of his danger. She pleads with Stillman to open the mills and give work to the people and tries to soften his heart with her stories of the condition of the people. Stillman, whose passion for the girl has been growing stronger day by day, finally tells her that he will open the mills upon one condition, that is that she marry him. Stillman hastily arranges an illegal marriage with Dell. The girl believes she is to become his lawful wife, but Stillman has no such intention. The ceremony is performed and they repair to Stillman's home in the country. Dell writes her father of her marriage to Stillman, but he intercepts the letter and substitutes one supposed to come from a certain friend saying that Dell will not be home that night because she is going to watch by the body of the dead boy, Bennie.

In the meantime Stillman's love for the girl is growing genuine and she becomes the one thing in the world that he desires and his one fear is that she may learn the secret of the illegal life. Dell returns to the mill and is indignantly repulsed by her former friends. Her father in a bitter scene renounces her and in utter dejection she finds her way to the boiler room of the mill seeking Sam, from whom she at least expects sympathy. She meets with the same treatment at Sam's hands and in fact is informed by this that he has entirely forgotten her and is to be married to another. Dell has heard the conversation between Stillman and Sam and a revelation comes to her. She realizes the true condition. She knows that Stillman is the real love and slowly and sadly she walks to him as she asks him to take her back.

UNIVERSAL SPECIAL RELEASE.

THE MASTER KEY (Episode 12—Two parts—Released Week of Feb. 1)—It will be remembered that in the eleventh episode of "The Master Key" that a Hindu peddler, visiting a pawnshop to sell his wares, consisting of a few Oriental rugs, sees the idol, recognizes it as one which was stolen from him in India years before, and immediately purchases it. The idol has a long history, of which Dore and Ruth know nothing. Upon tracing it to the pawnshop, however, they learn that the Hindu has forestalled them, and that the idol is gone. Wilkerson, also searching for the valuable little idol, which he has permitted to slip through his fingers, trails Ruth and Dore. The pawnbroker tells Ruth and Dore of the strange Hindu to whom he sold it. Dore decides that the oriental is likely to return to India with it, and through the captain of the steamer he traces the Hindu to a ship bound for the Orient. Everett again assists them with money for the voyage. Sir Donald Faversham, learning that Ruth is in

Deagan's Lobby Chimes

A set of "Deagan" Electrical Cathedral Chimes

(To be mounted in lobby as shown in cut)

A most unique lobby attraction—as different from the usual kind of bally-hoo as church chimes are from brass cymbals.

However, the Deagan Lobby Chimes serve the purpose of a bally-hoo. The beautiful chords from the chimes stop the passing crowds.

This is a real novelty—something so different. It gives a certain air of distinction and refinement to a theatre.

Many exhibitors ring these chimes during intermission to call attention to a new show. It is a good way to announce each new picture, and especially the first reel of a feature production. There are so many different ways an enterprising exhibitor can use these chimes to great advantage—both to himself and to his patrons.

We furnish these lobby chimes in a set of 4 units to be mounted as shown in the cut, or all together. They are made of the finest bell metal, highly polished, triple nickel plated and correctly tuned.

A real ornament to your lobby

These chimes are electrically operated and played from a keyboard which can be placed in the orchestra pit, operating booth or box office, wherever the most convenient.

Of course anybody can play this instrument. Takes about half an hour to install it and is run on ordinary dry cells.

We will send this outfit, complete, ready to install, for the REMARKABLY LOW PRICE OF $25.00

Will be sent for 10 days' trial on deposit of $5.00, C. O. D. for remainder.

J. C. DEAGAN

1776 Berteau Avenue CHICAGO, ILL.

Los Angeles, calls on her to renew their friendship, and, learning that they are going to the Orient, he offers his services, he having been previously stationed in India as a British officer.

In passing through the streets Ruth's sympathy is aroused in the interest of a poor beggar who is being tormented by the natives, and she goes to his rescue. Later this native proves his gratitude to her.

A former servant of Sir Donald is engaged to assist them, and in the guise of natives they visit the temple, after having found where the sacred image has been hidden. In attempting to steal it Dore is captured. Sir Donald returns to Ruth with the news. She begs him to assist Dore to escape, and the Englishman offers to do so on condition that Ruth will promise to marry him if he succeeds.

Torn between conflicting emotions, Ruth forces herself to accept the proposition. Sir Donald thereupon secures the services of other former troopers, and with his old servant he rescues Dore after a desperate struggle, in which Hindus and soldiers take part.

THE MASTER KEY (Episode 13—Two Parts—Released Week of Feb. 8).—Episode Thirteen opens with the same balcony scene which closed Episode Twelve. Ruth and Sir Donald are seen together. Sir Donald makes it plain that he feels much satisfaction at having rescued Dore and forces things to a point where Ruth must live up to her promise to marry him. Dore sees the exchange of glances between Sir Donald and Ruth and is much perplexed.

Meanwhile there is much confusion in the temple. The high priest, angered at the desecration of the Temple by Sir Donald's Hindus, calls for vengeance. They start out to make a tour of the European hotels in their efforts to find Dore and Sir Donald. Ruth is bathing Dore's wound and Sir Donald is outside smoking when the Hindus come up the street. Wilkerson and Drake see the mob approaching the square yelling excitedly. The native police are quite unable to quiet the mob.

Sir Donald is warned by a Hindu servant of his danger. He goes into the room where Ruth is attending to Dore and seizes her by the wrist. Ruth breaks from him and flees with Dore, who straps on his revolver. The mob arrives as they descend and bombards the hotel with stones. The porter of the hotel, fearing the vengeance of the high priests, opens the gates and permits the mob to enter.

Meanwhile Dore, Ruth and Sir Donald, guided by a servant, dart into a side passage, which leads into a walled court. Ruth recognizes among the crowd of beggars in the court-yard the one she befriended some time previously. While the mob is besieging the front gates the beggar tells Ruth to get into a basket nearby. The beggar then closes the lid and opens a door leading down into a cellar. Dore and Sir Donald follow into the cellar and the beggar closes the door upon them.

The mob then surges into the court. The beggar leads them into a blind passage. Meanwhile he hurries Ruth, Dore and Sir Donald into vegetable carts and covers them with rugs. Other beggars then run off with the two-wheeled carts through another passage just as the mob, seeing that they have been tricked, runs back into the court. The mob searches the cellar thoroughly but fails to find the Europeans. Ruth, Dore and Sir Donald are meanwhile wheeled off in safety while the police scatter the mob.

His vengeance frustrated, the high priest decides to send the idol to a distant temple for safe keeping. The idol is wrapped up and the high priest with his acolytes engage eight donkeys and start inland with the precious idol. Ruth, Dore and Sir Donald are well taken care of by the beggars meanwhile.

Through the English papers Wilkerson, Mrs. Darnell and Drake learn of the riot among the natives in Calcutta and of the attempted stealing of an idol. Drake suggests bribing their guide to find out where the idol is being taken by the priests of the temple. The scheme works and the bribed guide returns with the information regarding the destination of the priests and the idol.

Wilkerson follows the high priests, with the Hindu for a guide, and engages a number of English sailors and roustabouts to waylay the party and to secure the idol. They surround the camp of the priests. The sailors and roughs kill all the priests in a hand to hand fight. When they have finished Wilkerson and Drake search the mule packs. The idol is soon found. When the eye of the idol is removed the plan of "The Master Key" mine is seen to be within. Wilkerson withdraws and examines them carefully. He then secretes the plans in his bosom. The last scene of the episode shows Ruth snuggled closely against Dore waiting for the dawn to come. Ruth is uneasy, although she does not know why, and seems to sense that something has gone wrong.

THE $20,000,000 MYSTERY (Episode Thirteen—Reels 25 and 26—"The Secret of Dr. Munn's Sanatorium").—The incarceration of Howard, the mine superintendent, and Zudora in the sanatorium, as set forth in Episode Twelve, and their subsequent release made Madame Duval still more eager to accomplish her evil ends. This the more so as it is decided to send Jim Baird to South Africa to examine the Zudora mine properties and, if possible, reclaim them for the rightful owner. But Baird has hardly left New York, before Zudora and Howard, the latter a very ill man after his rough treatment at the hands of Dr. Munn, suddenly disappear again. Tom Hunt and John Storm are at their wits' ends, and fruitlessly search everywhere for the missing pair, never suspecting that the subtle mind of Madame Duval has arranged for their imprisonment in the sanatorium again, as she realizes that this is practically the last place where Hunt and Storm would expect to find them.

In the meantime Baird has arrived in South Africa. Nor is Bruce, Madame Duval's able lieutenant, far behind him, for a few days later he, too, reaches the mine. He does not know that Baird has recognized him and that he is watching his every move. It happens that a short time later one of the Kaffir miners unearths a sixty carat diamond—a gem of purest water as expert examination proves, and Bruce, homesick for the joys of Broadway, cables Madame Duval and Captain Radcliffe of the find, announcing that he will bring the diamond to New York in person. That night, as Bruce smokes his cigar, Baird is watching the waste-basket, where he has hidden the treasure trove. As soon as Bruce falls asleep Baird climbs in at the window, obtains the diamond, and escapes into the darkness, but not before Bruce, awakening, fires at him with a shotgun.

Unfortunately, Bruce has recognized him, and so when Baird takes ship for New York, almost the first person he encounters on board is that worthy. Together they are fellow-passengers during the long voyage. As Baird already has notified Hunt and Storm that he has the gem and knows they will meet him at the pier, he has scant fears that the band will be able to trap him. He little realizes the desperate character of Madame Duval and her aids.

Meanwhile Storm and Tom Hunt have been able to gain no trace of Zudora, nor the vanished Howard, and it is with downcast faces that they meet Jim Baird at the steamshop dock. In the confusion, Bruce deftly snatches Baird's satchel, which contains the precious diamond, and dashes through the crowd. He springs into a taxi, which is driven by one of the gang, and dashes off at top speed. But he is not to escape so easily, for Hunt, Storm and Baird leap into another machine and start in pursuit.

Then follows a mad race between the two machines. Soon the city is left behind and Bruce's vehicle turns into a road, which the trio behind recognize. A minute later it stops at the driveway of the sanatorium and Bruce dashes into the house. But his pursuers are too close behind to enable him to escape without a struggle, and the same thought has struck them all. Perhaps Zudora is within these wicked walls? Baird flings aside the attendants, who would stop him at the door, while Storm and Hunt force their way in through a window. Hurriedly they make a search of the building, finding Zudora and Howard imprisoned in an inner room, and while Storm carries her half-fainting form to the limousine, Baird and Hunt continue their quest for Bruce, who has disappeared in the melee. At last, however, they are compelled to acknowledge defeat. Bruce has got clean away with the diamond.

KRITERION SERVICE.

(The following are synopses of the pictures to be released on the Kriterion Program during the week of Monday, February 15, to Saturday, February 20, inclusive).

BIG-HEARTED JOHN (Two Parts—Alhambra).—John Mason, a good, whole-hearted cowboy, is in love with Mary. Tom West is a rival of John and tries in every way to disillusion Mary of John's faithfulness. Jim Burton is a drunkard and abuses his wife and little son. While he is in one of these fits of anger, John stops him and advises the wife and child to go away. Burton, who is drunk at the time, starts to lash Mason over the back with a cowhide whip. Mason stands there and laughs in derision of Burton.

From a distance Mary sees this and assumes that John is a coward to stand for such treatment. Tom West, who also witnesses the same thing, runs to Mary and taunts her on her cowardly lover. John does not know why Mary sends his ring back and is brokenhearted. Jim Burton's wife receives a letter from her sister, telling her to leave her husband and use the money that is enclosed in her letter and come to her with her boy. Jim sees her open the letter and he takes the money away from her. Mason appears on the scene and learns from Mrs. Burton the cause of her trouble. He gives her money enough to go to her sister and drives her to the station with her little boy. Tom West sees this and tells Mary about it. They immediately follow. Jim, who has been thrust out of a saloon, passes by the station and sees his wife getting out of the carriage and forthwith starts trouble. John, who will stand Burton's fury no longer, shows his superior strength by putting Jim out of the way. Mary observes that John's manhood has asserted itself, and perceiving that he is no coward, goes to him.

THE WESTERN BORDER (Two Parts—Monty).—Mona Darkfeather, daughter of the Indian Chief, War Cloud, is in love with Waco, a half-breed, but her father, who disapproves of him, has already chosen Eagle Mate for his daughter. That evening, Waco returns to Mona's tent and induces her to go away with him. Later, Waco discovers the "Lost Mine" and filling a bag with gold nuggets, he goes to a nearby village to spend some of his newfound gold. There he meets Joe Barker, a dopefiend, in whom he confides his discovery of the "Lost Mine." The following day, Joe secretly sends out a prospecting party to search for the mine.

In the meantime, Joe gets a craving for the "dope" and goes to a hop joint run by a Chinese laundryman. Joe is "broke" and cannot pay for it, whereupon the Chinaman refuses to supply him. In his rage, Joe picks up a flatiron and hurls it through a door, killing the Chinaman's sick child in the room beyond.

The party of prospectors sent out by Joe returns and reports their unsuccessful attempt to locate the mine. Joe and his pal Bill then frame up a plan whereby they ensnare Waco to the hopjoint. They put him under the influence of the dope and remove his bag of gold nuggets from him. They plan to get the secret of the mine from him, then murder him and get rid of his body in a barrel. The Chinaman, concealed under the bed, overhears everything and decides to save the half-breed. A quarrel ensues about the gold wherein Bill is choked to death, and as soon as Joe leaves the room the Chinaman creeps out from his hiding place and frees Waco. He then places Bill's body in the barrel meant for the half-breed and it is later removed by Joe's pals.

Not being able to overcome his desire for the drug, Joe again returns to the Chinaman's shanty and while he is under the effects of it, the Chinaman ties him to the bunk on which he is lying, then placing a barrel of gunpowder nearby, he put a lighted candle on it. Gathering up his few belongings he leaves his shanty, and joins Mona and Waco, to whom he returns the bag of nuggets left behind him. On waking the dope-fiend is terrified at the position he finds himself in and makes many frenzied attempts to blw out the candle. It is just beyond his reach, and all his efforts to release himself from his fate failing, he is doomed to perish in the forsaken shanty.

CATCHING A SPEEDER (Punchinello).—After a little spat with his son-in-law (Billy), Mr. Wilson decides to go out in his automobile in order to divert his mind. Before he goes, his daughter reminds him of the warning he has received to refrain from speeding. He seats himself beside his chauffeur and everything is going along smoothly, until a flashy flirt crosses the road, at the same time giving them a dazzling smile. This so upsets the chauffeur that he narrowly escapes running her over. Before Mr. Wilson can get over the shock the car suddenly runs into Billy, who has gone out for a walk. The chauffeur deserts the car and Pa, not daring to look back, keeps on running until he reaches the water's edge, where he hides himself in a bale of hay that has been placed on the dock. Pa is afraid to return, fearing arrest, and passes the night on the dock. In the morning Billy and Betty read an account of the chauffeur and Pa having committed suicide. Pa's hat and coat having been found on the dock. However, Billy knows better, and he and Betty start out in search of him.

Pa finally leaves his hiding place and strolls along the shore. The flirt is just getting ready for her morning plunge and as she gets into the water, Pa steals her dress and hat and dresses up as a woman. Just then Billy comes along, Betty following close by. Billy and Pa are just starting a little flirtation, when the flirt suddenly appears and angrily demands Pa to take off her clothes. Pa quickly complies and she walks off very indignantly. They all have a good laugh at Pa's adventures, and Billy and Pa give each other "the glad sign" and agree to be friendly ever after.

A MASK, A RING, A PAIR OF HANDCUFFS (Two Parts—Navajo).—Bill Chambers, a nearby neighbor, is a sort of desperado, who does not stop at any crooked work. He learns from one of his gang that the express company intends sending $10,000 in a strong box on the stage to Eagle Rock. Madge Warren and her brother, Bob, happen to be on this stage, visiting an uncle. When the stage is held up by Chambers and his cowboy bandits, and the $10,000 strong box robbed, Madge surprises the masked Chambers by coquettishly offering him her ring as a souvenir. Chambers has made it a rule never to carry any incriminating evidence about him, but he becomes infatuated with the girl and accepts the ring.

The sheriff with the aid of Chambers and his cowboy bandits fails to locate the thieves and returns to town "baffled," but Bob Warren is bound on finding them. He is made captive by the bandits and threatened with his life unless he agrees to be one of them. Bob's father later appeals to Tom Hawley, United States Marshal of another town, to search for his son. Hawley falls in love with Madge. Chambers, haunted by the vision of the girl, returns and calls on her. At first she cannot recollect where she has seen him before, but suddenly she remembers the masked bandit and knows Chambers is the one.

Later Chambers, who has fallen in love with Madge, proposes and is accepted. He tells her he has no ring just now to which Madge replies that he may use the one she gave him. Unsuspectingly he places the ring on her finger, and the next moment she has him covered with his own revolver. Hawley returns, having succeeded in liberating Bob, and he soon has Chambers and his cowboy bandits rounded up. Hawley claims the $5,000 reward, but the bandit was rightfully caught by Madge. The matter is finally settled by their agreeing to form a partnership for life.

IN WRITING TO ADVERTISERS KINDLY MENTION MOVING PICTURE WORLD.

THE WITNESS (Two Parts—Paragon).—Billy Rand, a wealthy young Easterner in the West, wanders into a gambling hall and becomes entangled in the meshes of one "Bull" Dawson, owner of the place and a notorious bad man. Billy, however, proves a hard victim to handle, and a fight results, during which Pepita, Bull's girl, comes to Billy's aid and smuggles him safely out of the room. Bull and his gang pursue Billy, but a passing freight train proves his salvation. Bull returns to the dive and blames Pepita for betraying him. He casts her off, and orders her to leave him at once.

Two years later, Bull has reaped a rich harvest and sells out his place. He leaves for the East with a forged letter of introduction to a prominent financier, in the hopes of interesting him in some mining schemes. The capitalist, Robert Dale, is the father of Dick Dale, Billy's classmate and chum, and of Helen Dale, Billy's sweetheart. Billy recognizes Bull when he calls on Dale, and warns Dick against him. Bull, in turn, plans to get Dick out of the way, not knowing there is anyone else in the city who knows his identity.

Meanwhile Pepita, forced to earn her living, has obtained a position in the city and sees Bull shortly after he has called on Dale. She begs Bull to aid her, but he laughs at her and again casts her off. Bull returns to the Dale home that evening after the family has retired in the hopes of "getting" Dick. Billy, who has been calling, leaves the house just as Bull enters and hears the shot that Bull fires. Billy rushes back into the house in time to find Dick lying dead upon the floor, the telephone and bricabrac from the table lying beside him upon the floor. As he kneels over him, Dale, Sr., and Helen enter. Billy is placed in a compromising position and accused of the crime. He is placed under arrest.

The next morning, Pepita buys an early edition of the paper and reads of the crime and Billy's arrest. The newspaper story clears the mystery of the night before to her. She hastens to the Dale home and convinces Dale and Helen that she can clear Billy and returns with them to the police court, where the case is to be brought to trial. There she tells her story.

The picture fades back into the night before. Pepita, seated at her desk at the switchboard, hears a call; the phone has fallen from the library table at the Dale home. She listens but receives no answer for a moment, then she hears a voice accuse Bull Dawson of the crime. Her evidence exonerates Billy. Dale, in appreciation of Pepita's testimony, offers her a home with them.

the city parks. Their theft arouses the entire town, and as a result, the Boob determines to become a detective and hunt down the daring criminals. Accordingly, he purchases a manual which gives instructions in the art of detecting and sets out upon the case. His first clue leads to the arrest of a burro.

Meantime Fred and Rena have carried away the safe of the National Bank. The Boob runs across them but they turn the tables on him, making him a captive and tie him to the safe with a stick of dynamite underneath. The safe blows up. Fred and Rena rush to examine its contents, but the blast has only freed the Boob and he makes them prisoners, just as the city detective arrives and takes them in charge.

SUCH A WAR (Pyramid).—Herr Dill and Monsieur Pomme, veterans of the Franco-Prussian War, had been great friends for a number of years, but at the breaking out of the European war, they immediately became bitter enemies, as did their respective wives. Dill's son and Pomme's daughter, however, were too much in love to allow the war to interfere with their happiness, so are married on the quiet. In the meantime their fathers are engaging in many heated arguments about the war, and are sending each other newspapers containing vivid accounts of the victories won by their respective countries.

To get the German's "goat," Monsieur Pomme attires himself in his old soldier uniform and struts up and down in front of the German's store, shouting "Vive La France!" This proves too much for Dill, who appears at an upper window with a barrel of sauerkraut which he empties upon the Frenchman's head. Later, he also dons his uniform and parades past Pomme's door, yelling "Hoch der Kaiser!" whereupon the Frenchman squirts the contents of a bottle of selzer in the German's face. They then decide upon a duel, the weapons to be a dill pickel for the German and a loaf of French bread for Pomme. In addition, they each arm themselves with a sword.

Returning from their elopement, the young couple discover that their fathers's swords are missing. Becoming alarmed, they summon the police and arrive on the scene just as their parents are about to start a duel. A ducking from a nearby fire hose promptly serves to dampen their ardor, and the appearance of a newsboy with an "extra" announcing "Peace has been declared and the United States is named Mediator" reconciles the warring families. All adjourn to Dill's house, where the young folk's marriage is hailed with joy and the American flag is voted as "being good enough for them."

BILLY PUTS ONE OVER (Santa Barbara).—Billy is in love with Betty and his Pa is aiming to win the hand of Mrs. Stuart (Betty's mother), a charming widow. Billy, however, is quicker than his dad and at a garden party, succeeds in winning Betty's consent to marry him, whereupon he places an engagement ring on her finger. Thereafter every time Pa calls on Mrs. Stuart, he finds Billy there ahead of him, making love to Betty. Finding that this interferes with his plan to win the widow, he conceives of a plan by which Billy can be eliminated for a while. He calls up an Insane Asylum, and has a doctor call and examine Billie as to his sanity, and tips him off to make out a certificate to the effect that Billy is "nutty."

Billy, however, is on to Pa's game, and as soon as his back is turned, changes the certificate, substituting Pa's name for his own. The automobile arrives for the lunatic and Billy assists in dragging Pa into the machine, where he is speedily driven to the asylum and put in a cage full of "nuts," among them being a particularly funny one who imagines he is Napoleon, and makes things very uncomfortable for Pa. In the meantime, Billy confesses to Betty what he has done, who hastens to the asylum and has Pa released. She then phones Mrs. Stuart that she can tell her where Pa is. All ends happily, Mrs. Stuart and Pa falling into each other's arms, Billy and Betty following suit and a double wedding is the result.

FATHER AND SON (Two Parts—Trump).—Christopher Rendall employs in his office his son, Robert, and his nephew, Allan Carter. Robert annoys his father by his youthful carelessness and lack of interest in the business; consequently, the old man turns more favorably towards Allan. On a certain day, however, Allan, who has been misappropriating the office funds, is driven to forge his uncle's name to a check.

Carol Amory, the stenographer in Rendall's office, tells Robert, who is in love with her, of Allan's unwelcome attentions. Robert seeks Allan and in a scuffle gets the better of him. Allan then tells his uncle of the existing affection between Robert and Carol, whereupon Rendall discharges the stenographer. Robert angrily tells him he will go with her. He does, and they are married soon after. Returning home, later, for his personal belongings, his father accosts him with the forged check which has been questioned at the bank. Allan calmly stands by and lets Robert bear the blame, and further shows his mean character by hounding Robert from one position to another, until the young couple are left penniless.

His father regrets his hasty action. His wife realizing this, seeks out Carol and pleads with her to give up her son. Carol agrees to leave Robert. When Robert returns and learns of the hand his family had taken in his affairs, he is enraged as well as grief-stricken over the disappearance of his wife. Then Allan's defalcations come to light and his low character revealed. He is dismissed by Rendall, who now realizes the unjustness of his attitude towards his son and the unworthiness of Allan. Carol and her baby are again sought for by Mrs. Rendall and together they bring Robert home and the two families are soon happily reunited.

THE FIGHT FOR FORTUNE—The picture tells the story of Richard Wallace and his wife who live in the wilds of Australia in dire poverty. On his way to Sydney, Charles Libton, a successful miner, is fatally injured and obtains shelter at Wallace's cabin. Libton, fearing death, requests wallace to take his claim certificate to his sweetheart in Antwerp. When alone, he writes her that she will receive his share of the gold mine in case he dies. At midnight Wallace enters Libton's room with the intent to rob him. He finds him dead and secures the gold and plans of the mine, whereupon he rides away.

At the mine Peter Smith, Libton's partner, disputes Wallace's claim and they proceed to the sheriff. Wallace declares he bought Libton's share, but Smith disbelieves it and a knife duel is suggested to settle the dispute. Wallace wins and he goes to Sydney, where he sells his claim for a fortune. After disguising himself he continues to travel and lands in Antwerp. He incidentally meets Dorrit Mortimer, who was Libton's fiancee, and falls in love with her. She refuses his marriage proposal, but later consents upon the pleading of her father, who is promised financial aid from Wallace if Dorrit marries him. Wallace's first wife, in the meantime managed to get to Antwerp, where she calls upon Dorrit to explain matters and comes face to face with Wallace. Dorrit's brother, learning of Wallace's crime, summons the police, but Wallace draws a revolver and pays with his life for the crime instead of going to prison.

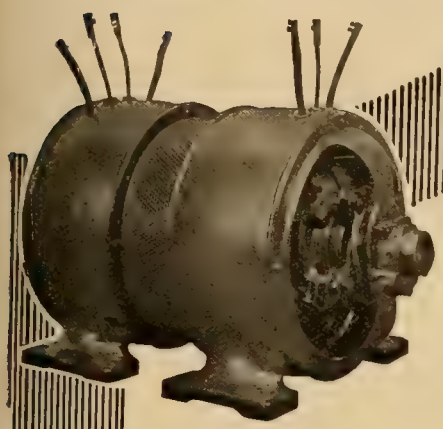
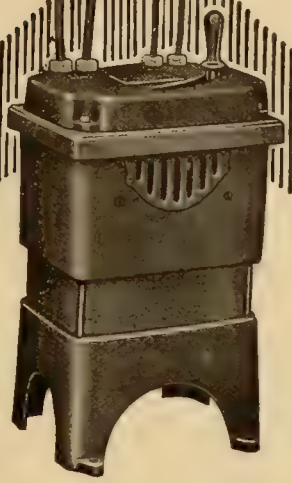
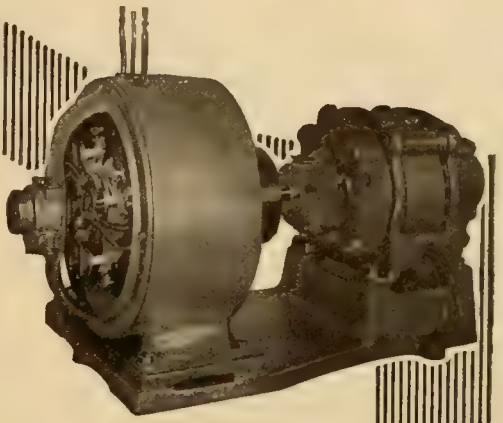
BETTER LIGHT LESS CURRENT



The DC Compensarc lowers the voltage of a direct current supply to that required at the lamp without needless waste.



The AC Compensarc cuts ⅔ from your lighting bill if you use alternating current.



The AC to DC Compensarc will transform alternating into direct current and reduce the voltage at the same time without needless waste.

No matter what current you have---Alternating or Direct---or what voltage or frequency, one of the will enable you to secure a light that will give those clear, bright pictures that everybody now demands.

What's the use of paying extra money for special screens, projecting machines, and first run films and then spoil the whole result with poor light? With the Fort Wayne Compensarcs you can get any kind of light you want regardless of the kind or quality of your current supply.

The Compensarcs will give you

STEADY LIGHT. No flickering, no sputtering, even when changing intensities or from one machine to another.

WHITE LIGHT. No yellow streaks, no ghosts.

BRIGHT LIGHT. Three times the light with two-thirds the current.

They are safe, efficient, easy to operate, fool proof and reliable.

FORT WAYNE ELECTRIC WORKS OF GENERAL ELECTRIC COMPANY
1702 BROADWAY
FORT WAYNE, INDIANA

Compensarcs are so commonly found in motion picture theatres that many people now call all current saving and transforming devices by that name.

But Remember

If it isn't a FORT WAYNE it isn't a "COMPENSARC"

MADE IN AMERICA

MINA FILMS

Good comedies are very scarce. Exhibitors need them badly. If you need them and you want proof that MinA Films are the best of the good ones, read the opinions of experts: (All necessarily condensed.)

No manufacturer could buy these criticisms at any price.

WORLD

Distilled Spirits—This is one of the finest exhibitions of trick photography that has been shown upon the screen for many moons. * * * This picture is an out-of-the-ordinary one, and will please any audience in any house.

NEWS

MinA Films started out with a rush. It seems incredible that the makers of these remarkable comedies could keep up to such a high standard, but they are doing it week in and week out.

WORLD

The Siege of Liege—A comedy which is greeted with roars of laughter from start to finish. * * * This is one of the funniest cartoon pictures that has ever been produced.

No successful trade paper ever sold its criticisms.

WORLD

A High Old Time—This picture made an excellent hit with the audience, and if the future releases of this new brand are equal in production they will certainly become very popular. Exhibitors will do well to try them out.

NEWS

Distilled Spirits—* * * A clever use of trick photography and properties. While strictly speaking it comes under the head of slapstick, its purely fanciful nature makes it entirely different from the ordinary types of pictures, etc.

WORLD

Dare-Devil Harry. These new releases are certainly in a class of their own. * * * It is an eye-opener.

The American STANDARD "MASTER MODEL"

Is the Motion Picture Machine FOR YOU

Here Are Some Reasons Why, Told by Users

EASY TO HANDLE

My two American Standards are safe and steady and easy to handle. JOHN WOLFE, West New York, N. J.

SMALL UPKEEP COST

Your machine in use at the Academy of Music is giving good service with small upkeep expense. F. E. HENDERSON, Jersey City, N. J.

PLEASES EVERYBODY

My operator and I are very well satisfied; so are my patrons. CENTRAL THEATRE, Yonkers, N. Y.

DURABLE

Your machine, after seven years, is still in service every day and gives perfect satisfaction. JAS. T. WILSON, Greenwood, S. C.

MECHANICALLY PERFECT

I use seven of your machines and my operators, all experts, urge me to stick to the American Standard. GUSTAV BARON, Brooklyn, N. Y.

STEADY PICTURE

My two American Standards project the brightest, steadiest picture in Rochester. G. L. TYLER, Rochester, N. Y.

MINIMUM REPAIRS

I have used an American Standard for three years and have not had to buy even a screw. HENRY WOOD, Bridgeport, Conn.

COMPLETE SATISFACTION

I've been in the picture business fifteen years—have used all makes—found the American Standard the best. I use five of them. R. S. HOPPER, Freeport, Ill.

PERFECT PROJECTION

I would use no other if I had a thousand houses and could buy the American Standard. Use them in my three theatres. GUS FREEMONT, Springfield, Mo.

ABSOLUTELY FIREPROOF

I have experimented and found the American Standard absolutely fireproof. WM. A. LORENCE, New York.

DRAWS PATRONS

The people of Phelps say I put on the clearest and steadiest picture they ever saw. F. A. BENNETT, Phelps, N. Y.

STANDS THE STRAIN

Any one wanting a machine to stand hard knocks should buy an American Standard. H. E. BRIGGS, Crosby, Minn.

MOVING PICTURE ELECTRIC LIGHT PLANT

Used and highly endorsed by the United States Army. Biggest Sensation in the Moving Picture World. Can be operated by a boy 10 years old. One customer writes:

"Plant running like a top and delivering the 'juice' right along every day for our moving picture house. Costs us about one-tenth as much as public service. Also pumps water to all our buildings, 2,000 gallons per day."

Write today for Bulletin 101. It is a mighty interesting booklet.

Stockton's Scriptwriting Service

To aid those who wish to guard against the formation of bad writing habits, or who wish to estimate their progress, I offer the following service:

Script Criticism For a fee of two dollars for each reel, I will read your manuscript and write a personal letter, pointing out the faults of plotting, technical development, manuscript preparation, etc. Sometimes I can help you to make the script salable, but I do not guarantee a sale. I do not revise manuscript; I do not typewrite it, nor do I offer it for sale. I simply write you a letter that tells you what the trouble is.

Plot Estimates If your stories do not sell and you want to know why, send me five synopses and one full script. I will criticise the script and tell you whether it is your plot or your development that is wrong. The fee for this service is $5 for the five synopses and additional plot. Synopses must not run more than 300 words each. Send a synopsis of your undeveloped plot and fee of one dollar and you will be advised as to whether it will pay you to develop the same.

Please Note My fees do not include envelopes or return postage. Send prepaid and self addressed return envelope and remit in New York exchange; not local checks. I reserve the right to return unread (with fee) any story or plot that does not warrant treatment. All scripts must be typewritten.

Mr. Exhibitor—When buying a machine from your dealer, be sure you get a machine made of the best material, not of soft die cast parts used by some manufacturers today.

Your dealer may advise buying such a cheap made machine because there's a larger commission in it for him and such a machine will only give service about one year, then you are compelled to buy another (the dealer says a good customer). You should protect yourself by demanding a machine that is made of the best material and every part made in its own factory and fully guaranteed, such as the MOTIOGRAPH. How to Make Money

by Lewis J. Selznick

No. 5

This series of articles is planned to make money for you—to show you why my ideas have succeeded—and why they will succeed for you if you will weigh each one carefully. Some of them will sound egotistical. I want them to—it's the only way I can drive home my arguments.

No successful business was ever built by advertising one thing today and another tomorrow. The public's memory is short and the only way to make it respond is to pound away on one thing until it makes an impression they can't forget.

I insist on upholding World Film contracts because it's for the good of the exhibitor as well as for World Film.

Once the public KNOWS that they can see World Film features at your theatre, on special nights, the crowds on World Film Nights will increase week after week—and your profits with it.

Then, the fellow who keeps flitting around will come to us and say, "I will give you so much more than Jones is paying if you will give me the service." I know, because it has happened that way hundreds of times.

But—World Film contract is for your protection as well as ours. You help to build its success and we plan that you share in that success.

The policy of liberality is the only way to build a business like this. No firm in the picture business pays so much for service as World Film. It is my policy that the men who help me succeed should share in the profits.

My profit sharing plan for World Film employees is based on that idea, and so is everything that World Film does.

I want you to help advertise World Film features—to make them great pulling magnets and to feel secure when you do it that the reward and profit will be yours as well as ours.

Advertising like this is the most valuable investment in the world for you—as safe as bank stock and paying far greater dividends. Ask our exchange to show you our advertising plans, paper, and heralds on every release.

I am spending thousands of dollars to give you the finest advertising that has ever been offered before. It is up to you to use it.

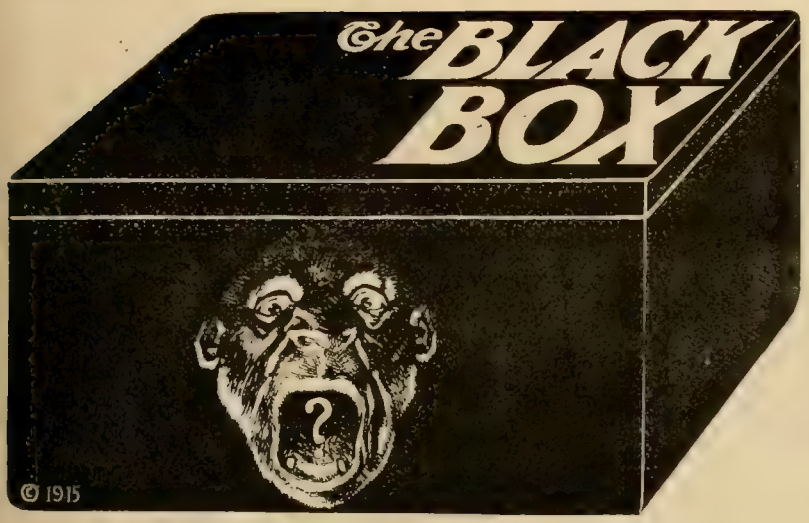
The Get in Line

BIGGEST

Advertising Campaign

EVER

Produced for any serial in the History of Films



The World's Greatest Mystery Photoplay Serial—"The Black Box."

By the World's Greatest Writer—E. Phillips Oppenheim.

Produced by the World's Greatest Director—Otis Turner.

For the World's Greatest Film Concern—The Universal Film Manufacturing Co.

At the World's Greatest Moving Picture Studios—at Universal City, Cal.

"THE BLACK BOX" is being advertised to tens of millions of fans all over the country.

"THE BLACK BOX" Advertising and Publicity Campaign is the biggest, the most complete and comprehensive ever put out for any film serial ever produced.

Every newspaper man in the land knows about this tremendous campaign.

Every editor knows that the millions upon millions of movie fans will want to read the story of "THE BLACK BOX."

Every editor knows that printing what the people want is the one best way to make his paper popular and successful.

Exhibitors--This is Your Opportunity

These editors want their share of this Advertising and Publicity. They know that they ought to run the story in connection with it to get the greatest benefits.

This situation gives you a wonderful opportunity. If you haven't talked with your editor yet—DO IT NOW.

Go to him and tell him to write Otis F. Wood, Inc., 17 West 38th Street, New York, N. Y., with whom he can arrange for the story rights—the right to publish the story of "THE BLACK BOX."

See to it that the story is run—episode for episode—at the time that you show this wonderful serial in your theatre, and—DO IT NOW.

If you haven't booked "THE BLACK BOX" you are overlooking the biggest money getter ever offered you, and if you don't confer NOW with your editor he will never forgive you. Wire your exchange immediately for your booking date. Then see your editor.

Completely equipped studio for making Moving Pictures located in the heart of New York City

Not only is this studio located in the very heart of New York City, but it is far better equipped for making moving pictures than the average high class studio. The outfit includes switchboard and wiring, office furniture, scenery of all kinds and character, and complete electrical equipment.

The arrangement of this studio is especially advantageous. The building is 43 feet by 135 feet. Stage is 25 feet wide by 45 feet deep. Studio possesses every modern advantage demanded by moving picture producers.

Entire outfit will be sold in whole or part, with better price on complete equipment. Lease can be renewed at once by purchaser. Here is, by far, the best opportunity to secure an entire studio, ready for occupancy. Outfit at a low figure. Superintendent will show intending purchasers over the property.

WARNING.

Watch Out for Exchanges Who Prey On Success

A number of irresponsible exchanges throughout the Country, to benefit themselves, claim that they are negotiating with World Film Corporation for State rights and similar propositions.

These claims have no basis in fact. At no time has this corporation considered or intended to consider any proposition of such character from anybody—and the very fact that an exchange makes an untruthful statement like this should stamp it as an undesirable business connection for any exhibitor.

The strength of World Film Corporation and the high character of the features it offers to the exhibitor have been the reason for its wonderful growth and its popularity among thinking exhibitors.

Edison Feature Film Weekly, in Regular Service

"A Tragedy of the Rails"

A Two-part Red Blood Railroad Romance

Featuring

Gertrude McCoy and Augustus Phillips

Released March 5—2000 feet

Action surges through this tense drama with the speed of the runaway engine, "33," around which the destinies of the girl operator and the engineer are woven with thrill upon thrill. The hatred of two red-blooded men, in a struggle for the girl, rushes on to the great battle to death in the cab of the runaway engine. Tied up as it is with the throbbing moment of the play, the spectacular race of Gertrude McCoy with the runaway engine and her breath-stopping, reckless leap from the rushing handcar to the flying engine is unmatched in genuine dramatic suspense and memorable dare-devil feats.

The Big Weekly Feature--Mrs. Fiske's Stage Success

"In Spite of All"

In three acts. Released March 1st. 3000 feet

Featuring Gertrude McCoy, Robert Conness and Sally Crute

This great dramatic triumph by the dramatist genius, Steele Mackaye, electrifies with heart-enthralling interest because the subject is vital with things that are near the inner heart of playgoer. Masterful in the character drawing, it swings along with compelling action. The weird fascination of an artful vampire who plays her victims with hypnotic perfume lends mysterious charm to this absorbing drama. Expect such a powerful play every week in the Edison regular service and book a feature at a price that pays as big as it draws.

Viola Dana in "The Portrait in the Attic"

No actress on the screen or stage has had the success in delineating sympathetic child characters as Viola Dana, the little leading lady whose wonderful success in the stage success, "The Poor Little Rich Girl," has never been equalled. She has such a part in the role of the little girl, cherishing her dead mother, whose father brings home a "new mother."

Edison Feature Films in Special Service

"My Friend From India," when dished up by the one-and-only comedian, Walter E. Perkins, who appears here in his original role, is three parts fun and all laughs. "Fantasma," a fantasy of fun, beauty, adventure and one that made Hanlon Brothers wealthy, played for twenty-seven years to an undying popularity. Hanlon, in his original role. In five parts. Both films now ready and supplied through the Special Masterpiece Service of the General Film Company.

All Edison Films are passed upon by the National Board of Censorship and released through the General Film Co.'s Program.

The New Edison Rollicking Comedy

The Waddy and Arty Brand-New Brand of Fun
(Wadsworth and Housman)

In the Laugh Hypnotizer, "Hypno and Trance"

Released March 2—1000 feet

Many a time and oft before have Waddy and Arty been funny, but the pranks of this pair and their tom-foolery in "Hypno and Trance" would make a horse snort with laughter. That quaint and brilliant comedian, Wadsworth, as the student of hypnotism who is throwing Arty into a trance and forgets how to get him out, contributes to the screen one of the richest situations and characterizations ever registered. Droll Arty, who drools in his simple faith in Waddy's power until a house falls on him, is that dyed-in-the-wool laughmaker he always is.

THE WHITE GODDESS

The First of Kalem's Weekly Three-Act Feature Productions, released in Regular Service

As the "White Goddess," the girl of mystery who is worshipped by the Hindus, Alice Joyce gives one of the most remarkable portrayals of her career. This drama of the Orient will give you an idea of the quality of the Three-Act Feature Productions which we will release every week in REGULAR SERVICE.

Released Monday, March 8th. We have put the strongest scenes on the 1, 3 and 6-Sheet, 4-Color Lithographs for this feature.

WOOED BY A WILDMAN

The strong-arm methods pursued by our prehistoric ancestors; the manner in which they discovered the first intoxicating drink, make this comedy of the Stone Age unusually funny.

Released Tuesday, March 9th. A striking 4-Color Lithograph for this comedy.

DESPERATE DUD, THE PLUMBER

If all plumbers were like Desperate Dud, the average house-owner would secure 42-centimeter guns in his effort to keep them away. There's a laugh in every foot of this burlesque.

Released Friday, March 12th. An attractive 4-Color Lithograph for this farce.

FOLLOWING A CLUE

A Two-Act Episode of

The Girl Detective Series

Captured by the river pirates, the Girl Detective is bound and placed in the room which contains a lighted bomb. The manner in which she is rescued in the nick of time is shown in a smashing climax.

Released Wednesday, March 10th. Eye-compelling 1, 3 and 6-Sheet 4-Color Lithographs.

THE NIGHT OPERATOR AT BUXTON

An Episode of the Hazards of Helen Railroad Series

In her effort to foil the yeggman who seeks to rob the express car, Helen engages him in one of the most realistic hand-to-hand fights ever filmed. Your patrons will enjoy this thrilling episode.

Released Saturday, March 13th. Strong 1 and 3-Sheet, 4-Color Lithographs for this release.

Facts and Comments

ASSUMING that the recent convention of Ohio exhibitors was fairly representative of the exhibiting body of the state it is impossible to understand their action in sustaining by a substantial majority the law which created the board of censors. Censorship of motion pictures in an unmitigated evil. It subjects the industry to an unconstitutional restraint and works incalculable hardship and injury on every branch. It might be urged that the exhibitors of Ohio have a right to do as they please in this matter. The trouble is that the action of Ohio will be cited as a precedent in every state where well-meaning but ill-informed agitators and designing politicians plan similar legislation. "If the men," it will be said, "who run motion picture houses themselves go on record as favoring official censorship what more is there to be urged on behalf of a strict censorship of pictures?" The advocates of the resolution favoring censorship seemed to know what they were about for they followed up their victory by the pressing of a resolution to send a record of their action to the legislative committee to which the bill for the repeal of the Censorship Law had been referred. To our way of thinking the vote which sustained censorship in Ohio is evidence of a lack of spirit. It has placed a very dangerous weapon in the hands of every enemy of the motion picture.

WE urge every reader of The Moving Picture World to look over the appeal and invitation which Marion S. Pearce, the President of the National League, has issued and which is printed in full in another part of this paper. It is well to have the exhibitors of the country vote informally, at least, on the question which he submits. We urge a full vote. The spirit of organization has been revived all over the country, accessions to the ranks of the organized exhibitors are reported in every state and there seems to be an universal disposition to bury all old differences and to start anew. A full expression of opinion from the exhibiting body of the entire country would be nothing less than an inspiration to the officers of the League who have worked so faithfully and intelligently for the common cause.

PRESIDENT PEARCE has given his personal sanction to the plan of The Moving Picture World to start a campaign against censorship on all the screens in the country. We again call attention to our offer to send either the text for good anti-censorship slides or to send the slides themselves at flat cost to any exhibitor who wants to use them. The text for the slides will be sent free of charge. There are a dozen short but "meaty" arguments against censorship to be had for absolutely nothing but the trouble of writing us. Remember that national censorship has won a victory in the House Committee at Washington, and is now on the Congressional calendar for further action. The time to create a national sentiment against censorship is now. When the next Congress meets this fight for federal censorship will be continued on the floor of the House, and it is very important that members of the House of Representatives ought to know where the public stands. The opponents of the motion picture will not sleep when the time for action comes. The Moving Picture World will also distribute to any readers who ask for it the text for a short pamphlet condensing the arguments against censorship and suitable for general distribution.

THE showing of the Vitagraph film, "The Silent Plea," before the lower house of the New York state legislature is an event which we had earnestly hoped for and which has now actually occurred. It was not alone a plea for the widowed mothers, but likewise a plea on behalf of the most powerful medium of expression ever known to mankind. We doubt very much whether any of the men who saw that picture and who were made to realize the screen's possibilities for good will ever be induced to vote for censorship of motion pictures.

NEWS comes from Mexico and other Latin-American countries that the motion picture is seriously interfering with the popularity of bull fighting. If the motion picture has power to draw people away from this hideous sport so much more glory for the motion picture. Here in the North the motion picture is admittedly the greatest ally to sane temperance. There is no better justification for our love of and devotion to the motion picture than its clear, ethical influence among individuals as well as among nations.

Fewer and Better

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

WHEREIN lies the art of the studio? There is a story to be visualized so that it may swiftly and powerfully appeal to the keenest sense in the human body. Millions upon millions of men, women and children will be seated in shadowy auditoriums, their attention concentrated on the screen, their eyes sharply scrutinizing every detail of the pictures. Many of them are pessimistic—they expect to be bored—experience has taught them that most photoplays are tiresome repetitions, but the great majority are generous, even hopeful, and are on the alert every moment they are watching the presentation. Is the average director capable of making an adequate presentation of any story?

It is a habit of many producers to encumber a director with the duties of a financial manager. He actually pays all bills and salaries and renders an account of the expenditure. He has also control of stage carpenters, electricians, scene painters, costumes, and those most willing of all craftsmen—the actors. He is well worth all that is paid him, because of an overwhelming number of duties, but does all this required expenditure of effort help or hinder his interpretation of the drama?

He must be a craftsman to adequately direct the movement of actors in many and varied scenes, keeping ever in mind the continuity of those scenes. If the author has neglected to adequately describe action and scenes, the director must try to match his own ideas to those of the author by shrewdly guessing at the general intent, assuming that he has carefully read the play and has its details well in mind. There are times when the author considers the action as a sufficient guide for the director, then the latter is compelled to use personal judgment in the manner of treatment. Can the average director do all this justice in a brief space of time?

Critical scrutinity of several thousand reels and careful survey of working methods in nearly all the Eastern studios satisfies me that the best directors improve most of the stories they visualize. The average director, faithful, painstaking, hard-working though he be, may accomplish nearly all that seems to him necessary, yet fail to grasp the very essence of what he is doing. Stupidity? Not always. He lacks time to properly concentrate upon a scenario so that he may achieve unmistakable comprehension of the author's purpose.

Of course, working scenarios furnish cold reading. An author unfamiliar with studio methods will find it desirable to write a very clear synopsis of his story, conveying his theme by open methods to the man who must read the scenario before producing it. A vast amount of hard labor, interesting though it may be, intervenes between the director's examination of a scenario and the finished product; his mind is apt to be largely occupied with a thousand and one details meanwhile; the working out of plot, scenes and incidents becomes his dominant thought, and he may easily lose that which the author could easily keep alive in a personal relation, the inspiration.

It is not a director's business to furnish the inspiration of a dramatic composition not his own, but it is necessary that he should receive it and transfer it, pass it on throughout the artistic work of interpretation so that this foremost essential reaches the audience. He does not do so as a rule, and the whole business is suffering as a consequence. People in front are not satisfied with what they are getting and they are beginning to ridicule a great deal that is shown on the screen.

There is profit enough for producers to take more time—time enough to scrutinize each scene, each situation, each incident, each action, each thought back of the action. If the author has infused his composition with spirit, that is the way to extract it. That is also the way to eliminate the vulgar, the unfit, yet preserve all the strength of contrast intended. To do the thing well requires time, but some producers are so eager to grab all the trade in sight that they are slowly destroying what should be solidly built up. I am not alone in believing that undue haste is detrimental to the whole business.

Among the many intelligent men who have expressed themselves on this subject by letter or in conversation, I select the comment of one who is qualified by experience to judge and who has had ample opportunity to study all sides of the question. I take the liberty of quoting part of a personal letter from Horace G. Plimpton, manager of the Edison Studio.

"I have read your article in the Moving Picture World of January 30th with much interest, and am in general accord with its spirit. The fact, however, must not be overlooked that the rapid growth of the picture in this country has created a problem different, I fancy, from any that ever existed before. The system of release dates, which started early in the distribution of films has undoubtedly impaired the quality of production, and, as the number of subjects has increased, the problem has become more difficult. It may be that the country would be better off without so many new films, but at present they seem to be demanded by the necessities of trade, and as the calendar does not stand still, those of us who are committed to release dates have got to furnish the subjects one way or another."

Mr. Plimpton continues: "A hundred and one obstacles may arise in production about which the public knows nothing and in which it cannot be expected to take any interest. Nevertheless these things may be decided factors in making a film very good or only pretty good." He enumerates them, but the greatest truth in his letter is that "we are dealing with a problem different from any that ever existed before." We are without precedents. We are creating them. We are building now what may serve as a pattern, as an example, for production in centuries to come, and those plays are bound to survive, as models will be made on the solid basis of patient, careful, intelligent and inspired work, the composite effort of creative genius in structure, treatment and interpretation. Let us make fewer and better.

In order that people in the audience may get relief from monotonous routine, from daily drudgery, from uninspiring toil, shall we give them dramas utterly lacking inspiration? That old formula of hero, heroine and villain, whether they are shown in the slums or in the drawing room, whether there is a new mechanical effect or merely a little shooting, is becoming worse than commonplace—it clogs the heart, deadens the mind, paralyzes interest. Its constant use, week after week, results from grinding out a definite number of releases in order to fill a program. If the art is to progress it must do so as we progress in our intellectual and moral qualities. Our occupations deal with material things. It is when we seek relief that we enjoy using our higher faculties that we may better understand one another and what is going on in the world.

Follies of the Screen

By W. Stephen Bush.

OF ALL the follies of the screen none is greater and more expensive than the screen advertisement, whether in disguise or free from disguise, whether paid for or offered gratuitously. Attempts to use the screen for incidental and surreptitious as well as for avowed and obvious advertising is as old as the screen itself. I know of various enterprises which aimed at the utilization of the advertising value of the screen. Most of them started out with a glowing prospectus and with plans for a new conquest of the world. There are no notable survivals. Advertising on the screen has not stopped, we may trust the genius and the energy of the publicity men for that. Nor do we want to maintain for an instant that the screen may not be used for advertising with perfect propriety and with probable profit.

The screen, however, must never, under any circumstances, be used for advertising purposes when it is supposed to serve as a medium of entertainment to the public. It is true that advertising men are not and cannot be moved by appeals to their aesthetic sensibilities. They have none. They climb Mont Blanc and our own glorious mountains and upon those awe-inspiring heights, when man is nearest, to the blue vault of heaven, they paint the name of some tooth paste with an adjuration to use the same. They invade the majestic ocean, and as you gaze out upon the vast sea you will find that "Time writes no wrinkle on its brow," but that the outdoor advertising man sets up his sign in the roaring surf urging you to use Jones' Celebrated Face Powder or Smith's Wonderful Chewing Tobacco. I remember gazing upon a heart-stirring sunrise in the Adirondacks when my eyes fell upon an imperative command to remember Somebody's Unfailing Corn Cure. Men to whom Nature, in her most solemn moods, fails to make the slightest appeal cannot be expected to stand in awe of the screen. I am often surprised that our great dramas are not interrupted at tense moments by the intemperate proclamation of the merits of so-and-so's cigarettes and of so-and-so's cheese.

Now to get back to the screen. I had started out to explain why advertising on the screen hurts the business of the exhibitor. To fully appreciate the facts in the case let me point out the radical difference between advertising in the newspapers and advertising on the screen. It is true that most people buy the daily papers for the news and periodical publications for entertainment and information. They do not buy the paper primarily for the advertising. Now, in the case of the newspaper and the magazine, the reader need not look at the advertisements if he does not want to. In the case of the screen he must look at whatever appears there and he cannot look at anything else unless he wants to gaze on the ceiling or talk with his neighbor. It is clear, therefore, that the patron of the motion picture has a cause of complaint against any and all advertising on the screen. The reader of the newspaper may skip the advertising pages; the observer of the screen cannot skip anything. His senses and his whole mental apparatus are concentrated on the one spot which provides him with his entertainment. An advertisement of shoes or hats is a distinct deception upon the patron. The advertisement does not merely hurt the illusion, it kills it with an axe. We all know that the illusion is the essence of the enjoyment and the killing of the illusion ruins the entertainment. Some patrons resent it openly, others, more numerous, resent it secretly and all of them will be alienated if the abuse is continued long enough.

There are many theaters, I regret to say, where the advertising of coming attractions is woefully overdone. It is all right to make your announcement for the attraction of the next day or the next week, and in case of a big future attraction the announcement may well be repeated a number of times. To advertise your coming attractions not only a day or a week, but two and three weeks ahead, is taking chances with the patience of your patrons. It is also quite useless. Nobody is going to burden his memory with what is going to be shown two and three weeks from date. It is impossible to remember it all and few patrons will take the trouble to put it down in their notebooks. It is well for the exhibitor to remember that advertising on the screen, if it be done for his own benefit, must be done skillfully. A brief announcement of the next attraction is all that is needed, too many details rather weaken than strengthen it. Every exhibitor is asked from time to time to display a slide advertising some coming local event of importance. That kind of advertising is permissible, but it may easily be overdone. There is, however, one use of the slide which is entirely justified. I refer to the agitation against censorship. This is a public question of the highest importance. The exhibitor who aids in the fight against censorship in any way whatever is not only rendering a service to the industry of which he is a part, but is fulfilling his duty as an American citizen.

There is a sort of insidious advertising the exhibitor should be most careful to guard against. There are big and bold advertisers who try to sneak mention of their ware into the moving picture. Clever devices are adopted to "slip in" the name of a brand and make it appear natural and innocent, as if it were just the proper part of a necessary scene. There have been numerous samples of this kind of advertising. In one or two instances the scheme was too transparent to deceive. In other instances the touch was more delicate and therefore more successful. This is a form of screen-abuse for which the exhibitor is, of course, in no wise responsible. No exhibitor ought to be required to pay for the rental of such a film. The evil ought to be stopped at its source. A manufacturer who allows such surreptitious advertising to find room in his production may gain a small pecuniary advantage, but he will lose something far more precious by losing the confidence of the exchange, the exhibitor and the general public. "Slipping in" surreptitious advertising is not only an unpardonable offense against art, but a grave commercial mistake. The public cannot be deceived in the long run. They will remember the trade-mark which serves as an introduction to indirect advertising.

There is a field for legitimate advertising on the screen. Even at this time many commercial enterprises seek the advantage which the screen gives them in proclaiming the merits of their wares. Where screen-advertising is done frankly and not under false colors the effects are bound to be excellent from the advertiser's point of view. Such advertising, however, has no place on the program of an exhibitor who asks money from his patrons in return for entertainment furnished.

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

Ohio State Convention

Election of Officers, Delegates and Alternates and Other Business—Next Convention at Cleveland.

Tuesday Night Session—February 9.

THE convention met in night session at 8:30 p. m. The first business taken up was the appointment of certain committees, which were to report at the Wednesday afternoon session.

Ways and Means Committee: J. H. Broomhall, Hamilton; E. N. Downs, Cleveland, and W. J. Dusenberry, Columbus.

Auditing Committee: Ed. Kohl, Cleveland; Mrs. Minnie Eley, Urbana, and Mr. Huss.

Committee on Constitution and By-Laws: S. Lawrence, Findlay; Dr. Q. O. Alexander, Dayton; George W. Heimbuck, Cleveland; O. J. Sibert, Marietta, and Mrs. Lulu M. Riefsnider, Urbana.

Committee on Building Code: Ben Sawyer, Cleveland; W. J. Dusenberry, Columbus, and Otto Ludeking, Cincinnati.

Max Stearn, President.

President Neff then reviewed his work of the past five years, and spoke of his devotion and loyalty to Ohio Exhibitors. He said that he had always considered them as members of the same big family, and hoped that they would render due respect and honor to his successor, and sustain him with the same great loyalty they had shown him.

E. N. Downs, of Cleveland, in his speech of reply, stated that, perhaps, at times, Cleveland had seemingly appeared to be against Mr. Neff, but that, personally, the Cleveland members had always considered him, and looked to him, as the father of the League, and that during their meetings at Cleveland not one of the members had ever taken his name in vain or made any reflections on him whatsoever. Mr. Downs assured the retiring president that Cleveland members had always sincerely appreciated his efforts on behalf of the League, and that they would always bear him in memory as the father and organizer of the M. P. E. L. of America.

Ben Sawyer, of Cleveland, heartily indorsed all that Mr. Downs had said.

The convention then engaged in discussing various matters pertaining to their business until about 10:30 o'clock, when adjournment was made until 10 o'clock Wednesday morning.

Wednesday Morning Session—February 10.

While awaiting the arrival of Tom P. Kern, state building inspector, who had arranged to address the convention on the new building code proposed for the state of Ohio, Ben Sawyer, the chairman of the building code committee, took the floor and requested the members present to engage in a discussion of the new building code. Among some matters touched on was the use of motor-driven machines, which the new code prohibits in its present form. Mr. Lawrence of Findlay, was outspoken in favor of the use of motors. Mr. Sawyer showed that all the recent fires in Ohio within the past year had originated with hand-driven machines. Mr. Bullock, of Cleveland, asked for the legalization of the use of motors in projection, and advocated the interests of the small theaters in country towns. "The little fellows should be helped in the building code matter where the prohibitions operate harshly against them," said Mr. Bullock.

Mr. Neff then referred to the size of buildings as prescribed by the new building code, and stated that its enforcement would be unfair to small theater owners, because it would permit new men to enter the business at their expense. He said that it was an injustice to certain picture theater owners that they should be at the mercy of real estate owners and that an investment of any kind, particularly in the small picture theater, should be protected.

Mr. Kern, who had arrived at this time, began his remarks by stating that better results could always be accomplished the closer the exhibitor and the members of the state building inspecting department got together. He acknowledged that he has had fair co-operation, indeed gratifying, from exhibitors. The exhibitor depended on the public for patronage and should afford all protection to them. The blocking up of aisles, by seeking to increase the seating capacity, was all wrong. The exhibitor had no right to make any change in his theater without consulting the department, and he advised exhibitors in all matters of change to write the department and have an inspector visit the house.

He reminded them that in applying the new building code the application had not only to do with new theaters, but with all old houses, where remodeling or other changes are made. He strongly condemned discretionary power on the part of a member of the building department. There was great danger in it because while a concession made to one exhibitor by deviating from the words of the law, where conditions warranted it, might be all right in one case and all wrong in the other. Furthermore, charges of partiality in such cases, and even crookedness, would be made.

M. A. Neff, National Vice-President

He informed the convention that there were two or three cases in the state where men built moving picture theaters without conforming to the instructions of the building department or the code.

In referring to the use of motors, in driving projection machines, Mr. Kern stated that while the code does not permit the use of the motor at the present time, no one should use it until the amendment of the building code, duly passed by the legislature, is in force. He gave it as his opinion that the old moving picture theaters will go out of business automatically, unless they conform to up-to-date requirements.

Mr. Sawyer, of Cleveland, at this point informed Mr. Kern that he was opposed to airdomes on the grounds that they were immoral and in direct competition with men who have invested heavily in picture theaters, and who pay heavy taxes on their properties. He recommended that "the dead man switch" be cut out in favor of motor-driven machines.

A vote of thanks was then given Mr. Kern for his attendance and address, which was expressed by all the members standing.

Adjournment was then taken until 1:15 o'clock p. m.

Wednesday Afternoon Session.

The election of state officers was immediately entered upon and Lem S. Miller, of Cincinnati, nominated M. A. Neff for president, to succeed himself. Ed. Kohl, of Cleveland, seconded it.

E. N. Downs, of Cleveland, nominated Sam. Morris, of Cleveland, for office, and was seconded by Sam Bullock, of that city.

President Neff then took the floor and nominated Max Stearn, of Columbus, for the presidency, in an able speech. Loud applause greeted the naming of Max Stearn. Lem S. Miller, of Cincinnati, seconded the motion.

Sam E. Morris,
First Vice-President.

A rising vote was then called for, and resulted in 30 votes for Max Stearn and 16 for Sam Morris.

Mr. Morris, after the result had been declared, stated in a neat speech that if he had known that Max Stearn was to be nominated he would never have allowed his name to be mentioned. He then moved that the election be declared unanimous, amid loud applause. The motion was seconded by W. J. Slimm, of Cleveland, and was carried with great enthusiasm.

Mr. Stearn, in his speech of acceptance, announced that he would not accept any salary during his term.

Ed. Kohl, of Cleveland, was nominated by H. D. Kruse, of Cincinnati, for the office of first vice-president. The motion was seconded by W. C. Bettis, of Toledo. E. N. Downs, of Cleveland, nominated Sam Morris, of Cleveland, for the office, and the motion was seconded by F. Beverstock, of Mansfield. The vote showed that Mr. Morris was the victor by a long lead, and his election was made unanimous.

For the office of second vice-president, Sam Bullock nominated Frank Beverstock, of Mansfield. The motion was seconded by E. N. Downs, and Mr. Beverstock was elected without opposition.

For state secretary, W. R. Wilson, of Columbus, the outgoing secretary, was nominated by Paul Stuffer, of Columbus, to succeed himself. This was seconded by Charles Weigel, of Cincinnati, and Mr. Wilson was elected by acclamation.

W. R. Wilson, Secretary.

Otto Ludeking, of Cincinnati, was named by W. R. Wilson, of Columbus, for the office of treasurer. The motion was seconded by Frank Beverstock, of Mansfield, and Mr. Ludeking was elected unanimously.

For national vice-president J. M. Kaufman, of Gallipolis, named M. A. Neff. The motion was seconded by John Huebner, Jr., of Cincinnati, and Mr. Neff was elected unanimously. Mr. Neff stated that he accepted the office because there was very little work to do and that he could be of more service to exhibitors in that capacity than in any other.

Otto Ludeking, Treasurer.

Mr. Bullock at this point injected a little of the old rancorous ill will, which has characterized his actions in the Ohio League for some time past, by raising the point that Mr. Neff was not eligible for the office, inasmuch as he was about to engage in the handling of films as a renter. It was then shown that the state executive committee had granted Mr. Neff the privilege, in accordance with the constitution. Secretary Wilson read Article 2, section one, of the constitution, after which the action of the state executive committee was endorsed when Ben Sawyer moved that M. A. Neff be granted the privilege of handling feature films. The motion was seconded by Otto Ludeking, and was unanimously carried.

J. A. Maddox, of Columbus, moved that Lem S. Miller, of Cincinnati, be appointed as counsel for the Ohio state branch to succeed the former counsel, John Lentz, who resigned some time ago. The motion was seconded by J. A. Ackerman, of Cincinnati, and carried unanimously.

The next order of business was the election of delegates and alternates to the next national election.

The delegates are as follows: Sam Morris, of Cleveland; Mrs. Lulu M. Riefsnider, of Urbana; J. M. Kaufman, of Gallipolis; G. D. Spragg, of Bellaire; H. E. Vestal, of Ada; Dr. Q. O. Alexander, of Dayton, and Ed. Kohl, of Cleveland.

The following are alternates: Charles Weigel, of Cincinnati; E. Schwartz, of Cleveland; O. J. Sibert, of Marietta; L. Smith, of Alliance; W. C. Bettis, of Toledo; J. A. Ackerman, of Cincinnati, and S. Lawrence, of Findlay.

The report of the committee on constitution and by-laws was then made, the following four amendments being recommended. The first of these, which had reference to Article 2, section eleven, read as follows:

"Any exhibitor who has been a member of the Ohio League for two years in good standing and secures the consent of the state board of directors, may retain his membership in the League and be entitled to all privileges and benefits the same as any other member of the League."

The amendment was rejected.

The second amendment related to Article 4, section one, and read as follows:

"There shall be an annual meeting held at such time and place as designated by the convention in session, or by the direction of the League. A written notice shall be mailed to each member at least 20 days before the meeting takes place."

This amendment was accepted.

The third amendment to the constitution related to dues, and read as follows:

"Members who belong directly to the state shall pay 50 cents a month to the state treasurer, quarterly, in advance. All local treasurers shall send to the state treasurer, yearly, quarterly in advance, 75 cents for each member in good standing at the rate of 25 cents per month, and for all new members taken in the treasurer shall send 25 cents on a quarterly basis in advance from the time they become members.

This amendment was recommended to be adopted with certain recommendations.

The fourth amendment related to Article 5, section one of the constitution, and read as follows:

"All bona fide and responsible moving picture exhibitors, owners of theater buildings, lessees and managers may become members providing the theater the applicant wishes to represent is not controlled or partly owned by any manufacturer, film exchange, or person or persons connected therewith, and that the applicant is not interested nor engaged in any branch of the manufacturing of films, or in the film exchange business directly or indirectly, on application with proper fee and receiving a majority vote of all the members present at a regular meeting or a majority vote of the board of directors."

In the great hurry, incident to the departure of several members to catch their trains, this amendment was lost sight of and no action taken upon it.

The state constitution was then amended so that the office of corresponding secretary was abolished and his duties assigned to the state secretary.

It was then decided that the next annual state convention shall be held in Cleveland, O., the state executive board to confer with the Cleveland members as to the date.

Adjournment was then made sine die.

NATIONAL EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE MEETING.

National President M. S. Pearce, National Treasurer Peter J. Jeup and National Secretary W. R. Wilson were present at the Ohio convention and held the proxies of Messrs. Cory, Finnegan and Brylawski, the remaining members of the national board of directors, but no business was reported.

Mr. Jeup stated, however, that another meeting would be held in about a week to decide certain matters.

The selection of the city for the holding of the coming annual convention of the league will be one of the questions to be decided at this meeting.

Massachusetts League Election

Annual Meeting and Dinner at Boston Well Attended—E. H. Horstman Re-elected President.

AT THE annual meeting and dinner of the members of the Massachusetts Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, which was held at the Quincy House, Boston, Tuesday evening, February 9, Ernest H. Horstmann was Re-elected as the head of that organization for a third term. The following officers were also re-elected to office: John F. Patten, of the Bates Opera House, Attleboro, as first vice-president; P. F. Lydon, of the Imperial theater, South Boston, second vice-president; G. M. Clark, of the Huntington Avenue theater, Boston, treasurer, and R. W. Drown, secretary and clerk.

E. H. Horstmann, President.

The business meeting, which was attended by sixty-six members, was called to order at seven o'clock by President Horstmann.

Secretary Drown submitted his report for the past year and it was accepted.

An auditing committee was appointed. It will comprise the following members: W. B. Sproule, of East Boston; G. F. Washburn, of the Unique theater, Boston, and Colonel Kincaid, of Kincaid's theater, Quincy. The election of the board of directors followed. The following members were chosen: John F. Patten, of the Bates Opera House, Attleboro; P. F. Lydon, of the Imperial theater, South Boston; Ernest H. Horstmann, of the Scollay Square Olympia, Boston; R. W. Drown, of Boston; J. Laurie, of the Beacon and Modern theaters, Boston; Samuel Grant, of the Eastern Theaters Company, and G. M. Clark, of the Huntington Avenue theater, Boston.

A vote of thanks was expressed to the officers for their work during the past year and a similar vote was extended to the Gordon Olympia Company for the use of their offices for meeting during the year.

John F. Patten, 1st Vice-president.

It is to be regretted that all exhibitors in the state do not join this organization. Since the establishment of the league, the work has been done by a few of the members and there have been times when many of them have been forced to bear a financial loss. This should never be. The work that has been done through the league has benefited every exhibitor in the state. In this Puritanical section, adverse legislation is in abundance. The non-members should realize this and they should remember that it is much easier to fight against the passage of a bill than it is to have it erased from the statute books. Many of these non-members will contend that it is impossible for them to attend meetings and to work in the interests of the league on account of the distances which they live from Boston. This may be very true, but it is not and never was impossible for any of them to join the league and pay their dues. This small financial contribution would prove to be of great assistance to the members who are actively engaged in the work. It is to be hoped that the new officers and board of directors will receive more co-operation from the members during 1915 than was given to them during the past year, when they proved that they could "deliver the goods." The legislative records of the commonwealth show the great results of their efforts.

The dinner followed the election of officers. Nearly a hundred members and guests were present. Addresses were delivered by G. F. Washburn, of the Unique theater, Boston; N. D. Brooks, of the Automatic Vaudeville Company; Joseph Mack, of the World Film Corporation; Baron Hirsch, of the Thanhouser Syndicate Corporation; Fred Swett, of the Nicholas Power Company; Victor J. Morris, of Loew's Orpheum theater, Boston; R. M. Kane, of the Park theater, Spencer; Frank J. Howard, of the Gordon Company, Boston, and John Gartland.

P. F. Lydon, 2d Vice-president.

Among those present were B. Hirsch, of the Thanhouser Syndicate Corporation; G. M. Clark, of the Huntington Avenue theater, Boston; N. D. Brooks, of the Automatic Vaudeville Company; W. B. Sproule, of East Boston; J. F. Raymond, Majestic theater, Worcester; H. I. Wasserman, Roxbury; Frank J. Howard, Boston; W. G. Barhydt, Niagara theater, Roxbury; Herman A. Sivovolos, Hub theater, Boston; Fred B. Murphy, Edward Connelly, W. F. O'Brien, W. Brennan, W. Hickey, W. Sullivan, M. S. Schaeffer, all of the United Film Service; Fred J. McAloon, of the Royal theater, Worcester; Thomas Sprye, Alco Film Corporation; Harry F. Campbell, Box Office Attraction Company; Henry Burke, Marlboro; Samuel Bernfield, Pathe Exchange; Charles Hodgdon, Princess theater, Wakefield; Arthur E. Lord, Boston; William Dowling, Magic theater, East Boston; Herman Rifkin, Eastern Feature Film Company; Samuel Grant, Eastern Theaters Company; E. N. Cook, Plaza theater, Salem; Stanley Sumner, Plaza theater, Salem; H. W. James, Chelsea; B. Mailie, Scollay Square Olympia; George Ramsdell, Orpheum theater, Melrose; H. A. Gilman, Magnet theater, Dorchester; E. R. Daniels, Dreamland theater, Lynn; B. Cohee, Gordon's theater, Lynn; R. D. Crocker, Boston; Louis Boas, Academy, Fall River; H. Abrams, Harry Asher and W. E. Greene, all of the Famous Players Company of New England; Glover Ware, Beverly; E. W.. Lynch, Worcester; Samuel Goldstein, Worcester; C. H. Buckley, Roxbury theater, Roxbury; Clarence Mixer, Union Square theater, Somerville; Percy Butler, Boston; G. F. Washburn and A. F. Washburn, Unique theater, Revere; A. Shaller, J. A. Eslow and J. Donovan, of the New England Universal Film Company; W. E. Spragg, Gordon's, Chelsea; H. H. McKinney, Dream theater, Revere; B. M. Corbett, Corbett theater Equipment Company; C. W. Fraser, United Booking Office; Al Somerbee, Bowdoin Square theater, Boston; J. Brodie, Frank H. Vine, B. Selznick and L. Machatt, of the World Film Corporation; Winfield F. Bradley and W. Patten, of the Mutual; J. Laurie, Boston, and B. Wetmore.

MICHIGAN EXHIBITORS TO DANCE.

The Michigan Motion Picture Exhibitors' League at its meeting Tuesday afternoon, February 9, appointed Howard O. Pierce, of the John H. Kunsky, Inc., as chairman of committee to arrange for the proposed dance to take place some time in April. This committee will appoint subsidiary committees to aid in the work. President Fowser of the league has so far received assurances from the World Film Corporation and the Essanay Company that they will have someone of prominence at the affair.

At the above meeting, resolutions were presented to Peter M. Jeup, conferring upon him the honor of a life membership. Mr. Jeup ably responded

New President of Ohio Branch.

Max Stearn, Owner of the Beautiful Majestic Theater in Columbus, Worked Ten Years as a Newsboy in N. Y. City.

MAX STEARN, the newly elected president of the Ohio State Branch of the M. P. E. L. of America, came to Ohio in 1897. In the spring of 1904 he opened the first penny arcade in Columbus. He had spent the interim between 1897 and 1904 in following the amusement business in the summer resorts of Ohio.

In 1907 he opened the Exhibit theater, the third moving picture house built in Columbus. About $13,000 was spent on this house, which seated 300 people. This was quite a large expenditure, considering that the moving picture business had just begun to be rightly known. For a long time the Exhibit was the leading moving picture theater in Columbus. As time advanced, other larger theaters were erected in the city, and Mr. Stearn and his associates decided to build a house devoted to pictures that would again place him in the lead. The house is the present Majestic, which seats 1,200 people and cost $100,000. The very best people in Columbus, including the Governor and his family, professional and business men, and the pastors of all the leading churches, have attended the house from its opening, an admission of 10 and 20 cents being charged from the very first day.

When he opened the Majestic, Mr. Stearn was invited to address the allied churches of the city and announce the policy to be followed by the management. He spoke straight from the shoulder and to the point, as he always does, and told them that courtesy, clean pictures, and wide publicity would be the three watch words of the new house.

Mr. Stearn was among the small number of exhibitors in Columbus who made the first attempt to form an organization of exhibitors throughout the state of Ohio. The first meeting was held in the Hartman Hotel, Columbus, where about twenty exhibitors from various parts of the state had assembled. These men continued active for about a year, and after employing every effort to organize Ohio exhibitors under the title of the Ohio Motion Picture Protective Association, they were obliged to give up the task as hopeless. Shortly after this, a little less than a year, M. A. Neff appeared on the scene, and by dint of hard work, splendid organizing ability, and unremitting toil, he succeeded in organizing the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Ohio, which has since branched out into the nation-wide organization known as the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America.

Mr. Stearn is a self-made man. For nearly ten years he sold newspapers in New York City. At a special exhibition given in the Majestic on a Sunday morning, not long ago, he entertained 800 or more newsboys of the city of Columbus. He addressed them personally, and the following paragraph was included in his remarks:

"I used to sell newspapers," he said. "But it was in New York—not in Columbus where each one of you sells one paper—I sold the Times, the Herald, the Tribune, the Sun, the Globe and others. There was a constant fight on between the boys because when a man said 'hi, boy, a paper,' we all dashed after him; he bought a paper from one boy and the rest of us fought about it. You boys who sell your papers, I want to tell you first of all to be honest. When a man buys a paper, have your four cents change ready if he gives you a nickel—don't give him three and pretend to hunt for the other penny, hoping he will say, 'Keep it.'. Be honest with him and so with yourselves. It isn't a bad thing to be a newsboy, but it is a bad thing to be a dishonest boy. I can say truthfully that I never did a dishonest thing while I was selling papers. I am proud to be able to say it. I tried my level best to do the right thing, because I wanted some day to own a theater, and I worked for it from the time I began to sell papers. It was my one thought and when I got enough money so that I could have a little theater, then I knew some day I could have a bigger one, and then a bigger one still. And now I want one even bigger than the Majestic. If any of you boys want anything, you can get it if you work for it. If it is a theater you can get it; if it is an automobile factory you can have it—you can get whatever you make up your mind to have if you work for it and work honestly! You must be honest and honorable and you must leave cigarettes out of it—don't smoke them, ever."

At the recent Ohio convention held in Columbus, Mr.. Stearn accepted nomination as president of the Ohio branch with the understanding that he would hold office for one year only and without pay. His own money will be used in journeying from his home town to other towns throughout the state, and much of his valuable time will be devoted to building up the membership and to impress on the exhibitors the importance of having a strong organization for self-protection. During his term he will try to eliminate all strife and petty jealousies among members, and to promote a strong and harmonious state organization.

An important feature of his policy will be that of endeavoring to bring film manufacturers, exchange men and exhibitors into closer business relationship. He is imbued with the hope that manufacturers, exchange men and exhibitors will combine in promoting the welfare of the moving picture business generally, throughout the state of Ohio.

New Officers for Warners

J. C. Graham Succeeds P. A. Powers As President—New Deal Planned All Round With New Money Available.

A MEETING of the board of directors of Warner's Features, otherwise known as the United Film Service, was held on Wednesday, February 17, at the company's offices, 126 West 46th street, New York, and the resignations of P. A. Powers as president, Harry Warner as vice-president, were accepted.

To fill the vacancies J. C. Graham, formerly associated with the Mutual Film Corporation and later with the Universal Fim Manufacturing Company, was elected president, and O. S. Goan, who succeeded Mr. McKinney as general manager of Warners, was elected vice-president and treasurer. D. A. Chase, the former cashier, was promoted to the position of secretary.

It is reported that additional capital became available upon the consummation of the change in the management of the company and that all financial obligations have been adjusted in a satisfactory manner.

Warners, or United Film Service, as it is now called, is considered by experienced motion picture men to be one of the best organizations in the business and that it would, under aggressive management, become a valuable property. Mr. Graham, the new president, has had several years' experience in the exchange branch of the business and is a most capable business man.

Photoplayers at Play

Men of the Vitagraph Company Enjoy Periodical Beefsteak Dinner and a Good Time Generally.

THERE were high jinks at Healy's on the evening of Saturday, February 13, when the men of the Vitagraph Company met for their periodical beefsteak dinner and general get-together. The hour was 6:30, and it was not long after that time when things began to move. The Vitagraphers make it a point to provide their own entertainment, and they have no difficulty in digging it out when they want it. Vic Smith, the general manager of the big Flatbush establishment, was in charge of affairs on Saturday. To his generalship was due the success of the evening.

During the consumption of quantities of beef and several kegs of amber disturbance there were brief halts as the party joined in the singing of songs that always form a feature of Vitagraph functions. When to the last man, hunger had been appeased Mr. Smith opened the program by calling on John T. Kelly, old-time comedian, just breaking into pictures. Mr. Kelly was in reminiscential vein. "Bill" Sellery made an hit with his Scotch songs and Frank Currier made another with a story. Fred Thomson, former Vitagrapher, gave a recitation and refused to be beaten out of the effect of his climax by the interruption of a fool waiter.

"Donny" Hall sang "Asthore," and for an encore "Annie Laurie." He was in fine voice, as was also Danny MacBride, who held the closest attention. Stage Carpenter Wentworth told a story of old days on the stage. William Sellery finally sang "Wee Dock and Dorus"—every one present listened with attention, but nobody drank one; not just then. Thomas Mills told a story with a big finish. Anders Randolph responded to the introduction as the Man From Headquarters and gave a recitation that was heartily applauded.

Billy Quirk entertained with a general talk. Others who contributed to the fun were Charles Brown, Garry McGarry, Albert Roccardi, George Baker and James Morrison. The party closed officially at midnight. It was a night to be remembered.

Some of the Vitagraphers present other than those named were Gladden James, L. Rogers Lytton, Harry Morey, Tefft Johnson, Wally Van, Sam Spedon, Robert Gaillord, Leo Delaney, Charles Eldridge, Wilfrid North, Lee Beggs, Antonio Moreno, C. Jay Williams, Paul Scardon, Nicholos Dunaew and George Cooper—and right down the line.

Alberto Ramella Returns to Italy

General Foreign Agent of the Savoia Company Has Been Studying Film Conditions in This Country.

AFTER a stay in New York City of three months, Alberto Ramella, general foreign agent for the Savoia Film Company, Limited, of Turin, Italy, sailed for home on Saturday, February 13. Mr. Ramella is one of the large stockholders of the Savoia Company. One of the main purposes of his visit to the United States was to closely examine conditions in the film world, especially as these may affect the product of his own company. One of the results of his trip has been the formation of the Savoia Company of America, in which Mr. Ramella will represent the interests of the parent company.

Alberto Ramella.

Mr. Ramella has been with the Savoia Company three years. In that time he has been connected both with the artistic, the producing, side and the business department. In reply to a question, he said that both of these factors in picture making appeal equally to him. He said the Savoia Company was expanding. Recently, he added, the company had been reorganized, a number of bankers having taken a strong interest. The capital has been increased to 3,000,000 francs. With the infusion of new blood he was confident the company would be an important factor in the world's picture market.

While in New York, Mr. Ramella has spent much time at picture theaters watching American methods in the making of photoplays. Asked if he had been impressed by what he had seen, he said he admired the action of the native product, and that he believed his observations would have result in the future product of the Savoia Company.

Mr. Ramella announced that it was intended in the near future to send American directors and American stars to Italy to work at the Savoia studio in order that advantage might be taken of their knowledge of requirements of the American market. He said at the present time two American women were at work in the Turin studio. Mr. Ramella said that among the projects of the company was the making of a picture of international interest, in which the opening scenes would be in America, the greater part of the play would be laid in Italy, and the finish in America. Mr. Ramella said his return to this country would be determined in large part by the course of the European war.

The Savoia Company of America will market in the United States the product of the Savoia Company. It is said to be more than likely that several branches will be opened in larger cities and that the territory not covered in this way will be disposed of on the state right plan. Already six subjects are on the way to this country. One of these is a big production dealing with the French Revolution, the title of which has not yet been decided upon. The others are "The Flying Clew," "The Child's Heroism," featuring Lombardi, the famous Italian artist; "The Fatal Gem," "Romance of Duke Fabia" and "The Tragic Domino."

Composing the Savoia Company of America will be, besides Mr. Ramella, L. George Forgotson, Abraham Bloom, F. A. Rivaldi and H. H. Lichtig. For the present, the offices of the company will be at 1203 Candler Building.

WORLD FILM RELEASING FROHMAN SUBJECT.

The first production of the Frohman Amusement Corporation, of which Gustave Frohman is at the head, will be released through the World Film Corporation. "The Fairy and the Waif" is based on a story by Marie Hubert Frohman. Mary Miles Minter makes her screen debut in the role of Viola. Percy Helton plays the Waif.

Hector Dion Returns from England

For Seven Months American Actor Has Been Playing in Turner Films and Directing Hepworth and B. & C.

AFTER an absence in England of seven months, Hector Dion returned to New York on February 9. Mr. Dion is one of the original photoplayers. He was a member of the Vitagraph Company in the days when film manufacturers were few. In England Mr. Dion played with the Florence Turner Company and also directed Hepworth and B. & C. productions. He was located at Walton, the site of the studios of the companies named. It is a town literally filled with quaint backgrounds, Mr. Dion says—an ideal situation for film companies.

Mr. Dion said that the production of motion pictures had not been interrupted to any material extent by the war. So far as the exhibition of pictures is concerned there is, if anything, greater business now being done than ever. At least this was the situation in Walton and in London. English manufacturers are making steady artistic progress, said Mr. Dion. The backgrounds to be found in the British Isles are unsurpassable, and picture makers there are awaking to the fact.

Outside work is possible in England practically six months in the year, Mr. Dion said. One of the advantages to be found in that country is the diminutive size of the older houses, with their small windows, enabling a director to get comprehensive backgrounds close up to the camera. Mr. Dion pointed out that if a producer is anxious to work outside the year around he may easily do so by taking his company to Italy for the winter months. When asked if he intended returning to England the oldtime photoplayer said that, while his experiences abroad had been most pleasant, he probably would not. He was in consultation with parties here looking to employment on native soil.

EDISON CELEBRATES BIRTHDAY.

Thomas A. Edison, the great inventor and electrical wizard, passed his sixty-eighth year post Thursday, February 11 and to record the occasion in a memorable way a motion picture of Mr. Edison, still hale and hearty and in the harness more than ever, was taken at noon in his plant at Orange, N. J.

Mr. Edison was taken with all the officials and principals of the organization, shown shaking hands with those who wished him the good wishes of the day. Everyone of the officials, as did also the thousands of his employees, wore a button with Mr. Edison's picture with two streamers attached, bearing the date 1847, Mr. Edison's birth year, and 1915. Standing on the steps of his famous laboratory, Mr. Edison was shown receiving the felicitations of his oldest employee, John Ott, who is older than Mr. Edison and has been with the organization forty years. Mrs. Edison had presented to each of the principals a souvenir carnation which was worn in the lapel. The motion picture will be saved in a collection which record many interesting and momentous incidents and periods in the great inventor's life and career.

Three Biograph Two-Reelers

"His Romany Wife," "Colomba" and "Aurora Floyd" Are Good Dramatic Subjects with Picturesque California Backgrounds.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

THE first of the Biograph subjects to be filmed among the picturesque backgrounds of California have arrived in New York. Among these are three two-reel productions—"His Romany Wife," to be released Feb. 23; "Colomba," March 2, and "Aurora Floyd," March 9. It will be recalled that the entire producing forces of the Biograph company were transferred just before New Year's to the Los Angeles studio, there to remain for the winter and spring. In spite of the reported dearth of sunshine in the Southern California section during the past few weeks there is in these three pictures no evidence of other than splendid photographic conditions.

"His Romany Wife."

"His Romany Wife" is a strong dramatic subject. There is a gypsy side to it, and this furnishes opportunity for work in the wide outdoors. Alan Hale has the role of Travers, a civil engineer who marries Zara, a gypsy, portrayed by Louise Vale. The underlying theme is the mismating of the two—the man accustomed to the standards of civilization, with due regard for the importance of neatness and order in the home; the woman brought up in ignorance of all the domestic arts except the absolutely primitive. Then, too, there surges in her blood the love of the camp, the freedom of the open. It is only a question of time before the woman will forsake child and husband and go back to her own. It is only a question of time before the husband will realize his mistake and his heart will turn to the sweetheart of his boyhood, the girl in his own station. There are many good situations in the working out of the plot—there is drama, and there is tragedy of the heart and blood, too.

Franklin Ritchie is the gypsy lover of Zara—he loves her before she goes away with Travers, and his infatuation for her continues. Jack Drumier is Gorman, the theatrical agent, who discovers in Zara material for an accomplished stage dancer and takes her from the camp to which she has returned after deserting her family. Vola Smith is Alice, the childhood friend of Travers, who it is fair to assume becomes his wife following the accidental killing of Zara by Tonio—the knife being intended for Gorman. The story is well played and well staged.

"Colomba."

"Colomba" is a feud story of Corsica. This, too, is a tale of the open, chiefly of the mountains. A question of boundary is responsible for the murder of a landowner and the effort to fasten the crime on an innocent man. Gretchen Hartman finely plays Colomba, the daughter of the man who is killed; her portrayal is that of the woman of determination, of courage, of physical strength, who bends her strong-willed brother to her view of a doubtful case. Joseph McDermott as the sweetheart of Colomba gives a strong performance. There is a long and excellent cast, among the players being William J. Butler, Gertrude Robinson, Edward Cecil, Hector V. Sarno, Jack Drumier and Irma Dawkins.

Scene from "His Romany Wife" (Biograph).

"Aurora Floyd."

"Aurora Floyd' 'is an adaptation of the popular play of the same name. It should be a popular picture. There are many situations of strength, some of them notable. Louise Vale has the name part, Aurora Floyd, who elopes with Conyers, a horse trainer in the employ of her father. Miss Vale gives a splendid performance. Her characterization of the woman whose first experience with marriage is as unhappy as it is brief is filled with the tragedy of marital infelicity; the second marriage, in the mistaken belief that Conyers is dead, brings happiness, of short duration, too, but it shows the other side of life. "Aurora Floyd" teaches the folly of concealing the past and shows how apparently dead issues become things of life and trouble. Aurora's troubles begin over again when Conyers returns from Australia and blackmails her.

Franklin Ritchie has the role of Conyers, Jack Drumier is Matthew Floyd, whose unwise advice to his daughter is responsible for her predicament. Alan Hale is John Mellish, the second husband. The work of all is of the best, as is that of the man who plays the half-witted stable boy who shoots Conyers. "Aurora Floyd" will be liked.

Edna Mayo

IN Miss Edna Mayo the Essanay has secured another star of the first magnitude. Although only twenty-two years of age she has had six years of experience on the speaking stage and in motion picture work. The most recent plays in which she appeared on the speaking stage were "Madam X," "Excuse Me" and "Help Wanted."

"I went to motion pictures because I believed there was better opportunity in the future in photoplays than on the speaking stage," said Miss Mayo. Her exceptional work before the camera was watched by Essanay in looking for the very best of the profession, and she was quickly engaged.

Miss Mayo graduated from a girl's college in a suburb of Philadelphia, when only sixteen, and her beauty and talent at once obtained her a position on the stage.

Edna Mayo.

She went up rapidly to leading parts. Miss Mayo has shown exceptional ability in her role in the three-reel Essanay photodrama, "Stars Their Courses Change," where she plays opposite Francis X. Bushman.

In addition to her photoplay work, Miss Mayo is exceptionally skilled in sculpturing. She made a long study of this art both at the Art Institute in Chicago and the Art Student's League in New York. She also has an excellent voice.

Miss Mayo is athletically inclined and is an expert swimmer and horsewoman, as well as being a lover of all outdoor sports.

"The Warrens of Virginia"

A Filmed Version of the Well-Known Belasco Play, Which Had Such a Record of Success.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

THE screen has seen the great American war drama "acted o'er and o'er again," and it may be that audiences are somewhat cloyed with civil war plays. "The Warrens of Virginia" has become a classic on the speaking stage. Just what screen values are to be found in the old play may be an open question. Of course in the matter of spectacular effects the screen is a far better medium than the stage. In the filmed version of the Lasky Company quite a good deal has been made of the spectacular possibilities. One or two scenes are especially worthy of note, such for example as the ambushing of the Confederate supply train and the destruction of the powder wagons. There was, throughout, much evidence of a most laudable desire to do things on a lavish scale. I noticed, too, that attention to detail, without which a real feature is impossible.

As to the acting, the work of James Neill as General Warren, may be characterized as thoroughly capable and conscientious and effective; House Peters as Ned Burton had a most trying part which tested his art to the straining point; Dick La Reno made a most acceptable "General Griffin." Blanche Sweet has a charming personality, which has won her innumerable friends among patrons of the screen, but in the part of Agatha Warren she is scarcely at her best. In the great scenes which precede the discovery of the forged dispatch there was a lack of fire and spirit. In the scenes where sweet girlishness was needed Miss Sweet was at her best. She fitted well into the refined but simple atmosphere of an old-fashioned Southern home. All the outdoor scenes in the play were extremely well chosen. Here and there I noticed a flash of the skill which visualizes quickly and powerfully, but evidences of this skill were less frequent than in other Lasky productions. The part of Mrs. Warren was in the filmed adaptation of the play a minor and not a very grateful one, but it might have improved under better treatment. Touches of humor occurred occasionally and often they were good, but once or twice they seemed labored.

Taken as a whole, the production will go well on most programs.

CRUEL SALLY CRUTE.

It was in a Broadway dansant a tall, raw-boned man stepped up to Sally Crute, the Edison favorite, and asked her to fox trot. Sally soon found that her partner needed many rehearsals but he was enjoying himself immensely, totally unconscious that he had stepped on her foot about fifteen times. He emphasized the sixteenth episode by gazing fondly into the depths of her eyes and breathing "I could die doing this."

"Well, hurry up about it," replied Miss Crute.

Dorothy Bernard

DOROTHY BERNARD, famous alike to photoplay patrons and theatergoers, has been specially engaged by Kalem to play the leading role in the powerful three-act feature production, "The Second Commandment." Miss Bernard recently joined the Kalem forces at Jacksonville, Fla., where this drama is being produced.

This versatile actress's experience goes back to her fourth birthday. Despite her tender years, the child's amazing ability attracted attention and she toured Australia and America with such famous stars as Nance O'Neil, Edward Morgan, Wilton Lackaye and Theodore Roberts. Upon Miss Bernard's graduation into ingenue roles she appeared with various Western stock companies and at the Belasco Theater, Los Angeles.

Dorothy Bernard.

Then came a vaudeville engagement with William Courtleigh. But the two-a-day did not appeal to the versatile actress and she returned to the legitimate stage, playing in stock in Detroit and Columbus. After a period of this work, Miss Bernard became a leading woman for the Shuberts, appearing in "The Ringmaster." Just about this time, the silent drama was beginning to command attention. Like many other stars of the stage, Miss Bernard heeded its call and became a member of the company directed by D. W. Griffith, with whom she remained for two years.

According to Miss Bernard, she has played everything from musical comedy to Shakespeare. This charming star is particularly pleased with her role in "The Second Commandment." This feature, which is one of a series of ten, each based upon one of the Ten Commandments, is admirably adapted to Miss Bernard's peculiar talents. The production will be released through General Film Company's Regular Serial.

SELZNICK PRACTICING THE "POVERTY FLAT."

On his recent visit to San Francisco, Lewis J. Selznick, vice-president and general manager of the World Film Corporation, had as his guest Miss Michelena at an impromptu party at the famous Cliff House. There Miss Michelena taught Selznick the "Poverty Flat Trot," and the big film magnate, quickly learning this forty-niner dance step, proclaimed himself its ardent admirer and promised to introduce the innovation to the more sedate East as soon as he had finished his present tour of the country.

UNITED FILM TO RELEASE PLAY BASED ON "DIVORCE."

Ruth Helen Davis, the distinguished writer, whose translations of French masterpieces have placed within the reach of American readers many notable works of contemporary literature, has been secured by Jack Rose, president of the Humanology Film Company, to prepare for early production a play based on "Divorce," the famous poem by Ella Wheeler Wilcox, which will be released by the United Film Service.

Their well-known policies of service and efficiency have served to guarantee success in the past and assure the success of the production of motion pictures.

Trade With South America

Opportunities for the Moving Picture Industry to Secure Business in Latin-American Countries.

By Francisco Montero.

FOR some time past we have been reading in most of the leading publications and have heard on every hand that the war in Europe would afford great opportunities and open new gates to American industries. With very few exceptions, such articles as have been published have given no direct advice on how to find the way to those fountains of riches. Most American manufacturers, we must confess, though able and shrewd as they are in their home market, are quite deficient in their knowledge concerning the foreign markets, the reason for this being their lack of information. This has so far been held in trust by the "middle man" and naturally he will not show the manufacturer the way to go about to make his money. One result of this state of affairs is that great injustice has been done to the industries of the United States.

That there are opportunities today in the South American markets has been proved and is an unquestionable fact; this, all American producers have come to realize, and this the government of the United States has made efforts to encourage and assist. These opportunities have existed for years unknown to the greater majority of American manufacturers. They were misinformed about those countries and naturally feared any attempt in the direction of doing business except through the middle man. The European manufacturer took advantage of this situation, made personal investigations of those markets, sent reliable men to study them, and by perusing the statistics of each of the Spanish-American republics the inevitable results are visible. Europe knew how to cultivate the good will and friendship of the Spanish-American and to win over his sympathies; Europe offered fair goods at a fair price and one could always rely on the word and honest methods observed.

Americans have always adopted entirely different methods, not appealing to the South American, who even in business is somewhat sentimental. Curt and sharp letters written in English or half-broken Spanish are not to their liking; the peculiar "look down" of the average American salesman is also resented, and, above all, the informality in the fulfilment of promises of a salesman from the average American firm has been made a standing joke. This is, in plain words, the general intimate feeling of the Spanish-American business man. Honorable mention, however, should be made of a few, very few, who have had the good fortune of going about it in the same manner as Europeans. They have attained success.

The present European war has brought about radical changes in the commercial relations of the United States and Latin countries, but to profit by these changes an effort is required. We might say that we will do business with Latin America in a certain form, but "it takes two to make a bargain," and if we want the business we must hear what the other fellow has to say. South Americans have thus far been served by Europe in ways pleasing to them, and if we need their business and their money, we must pave the way as others have done before us. The Latin-American, nevertheless, is willing to forgive and forget; he is disposed today to give us a fair trial and if advantage is taken of the opportunity thus given, we can make good friends with him, secure his trade and let Europe, after the present war is over, sell him what we cannot supply. This would be in sharp contrast with the past, when we have been selling only what Europe could not supply.

The conditions of which I have spoken as prevailing apply equally as well to the moving picture industry. Just stop to consider the cinematograph, an American invention. There has been no decided effort made on the part of any producer to secure a good foothold in those countries; perhaps it has been that the demand at home was so large and the business so very successful that they could not devote time to exporting their goods or give any special attention to a development in that direction. On the other hand, the European producer also had an enormous demand, but in spite of that fact he tried to establish a foreign market.

It is really difficult to comprehend why the American film and machine is not predominating today all through Latin-American countries, and one would most likely think that the manufacturer is guilty of neglect. There is no excuse whatever for the moving picture industry of the United States not to own practically the entire field!

In the present situation opportunity knocks at the door once more—here is a new chance, a field with no strong competition. Will you take advantage of it, Mr. Manufacturer? There is only one right way to go about these things, and for the benefit of the manufacturers in this special industry I will state a few facts which I regard as vital and conclusive.

That there is a market, a large, unlimited one, will be seen by the following statistics gathered from the official reports of the various governments, embracing the importation of moving picture machines, films and other supplies, as follows:

The Republic of Chile, as one instance, during the year 1914 imported from Europe $52,331 of moving picture machines alone, while from the United States the importation amounted to the ridiculously low figure of $1,980.

Peru imported in machines, films and other supplies over $100,000, out of which the United States furnished $25,000.

The Argentine statistics show an importation in films alone from Europe of $44,775, against $4,970 from the United States; while in moving picture machines the figures are $17,562 from Europe and $6,786 from this country. The other large countries show figures of about the same ratio. If we take the smaller republics into consideration, I would cite just as an instance Costa Rica, the smallest republic in America, with only a half million inhabitants. The importations of machines, films and supplies of the little state amounted during 1913 to $27,085 from Europe, while from the United States to the sum of only $3,772.

These are cold facts. They prove conclusively that there is a demand and a good market which is being supplied by others. They prove that the American has not gone after that business. These are facts that I can vouch for through personal observation, for the only men whom I saw actively working upon this line of business were Germans, French and Italians.

There is very little to say after such figures and in the face of such facts. A systematical and well concerted effort needs to be made if we wish to change these figures. Men should be sent through those countries to study the field, for personal observation in this case would be the only true source of information. Send men who speak their language, that they may be able to study their tastes and temperament; and, above all, send gentlemen, for South Americans appreciate a true gentleman. Such a man is able to do more business and achieve greater results. There is nothing more displeasing to the average South American than the too usual overbearing and "self important" style of salesman. If you know your field, you can easily supply films to suit the taste and pleasure of the different localities.

There is no reason why a competent salesman under the conditions and with the qualities above mentioned could not secure an enormous amount of business. With a systematical campaign he could establish the base for a continued success.

Do not be discouraged by the advice of people who seek to keep you out of the field, but examine the field for yourself. You will find that this special business is being exploited by a few who are blocking your way to the consumer. Go directly to the consumer and acquaint him with your prices. As conditions exist at the present time, the consumer is paying a high price for goods of a very low grade. Keep in steady correspondence with the consumers and do so in their own language, endeavoring to give prompt and faithful service.

Moving picture theaters could be as numerous in those countries as they are in the United States. There are no regular resident operas or dramatic and vaudeville performances there, so that the cities depend for their amusements upon the occasional traveling troupes that go through their territory on schedule time. The only steady amusement would be the moving picture show, and by reason of its low price would prove very popular, for it would be frequented by rich and poor alike.

The exhibitor prefers to use the better kind of machine and although there is much of the cheap film used, there is a great demand, especially in the large cities, for first class films and up-to-date productions. Offer your films with titles in Spanish and have such titles written by persons knowing the language and understanding the wit and humor of the same. Do not attempt to write the titles in broken Spanish; the South American people resent this because they are under the impression that the American considers them half savages; and that therefore anything is good enough for them. As a consequence of this, the intention of the Americans are unmercifully misinterpreted. Give them pictures of their own country, views of their own cities. They enjoy seeing familiar faces on the screen. Show them their own armies drilling and maneuvering. It would meet with universal satisfaction.

Advertising is another feature which adds in great measure to the success of the machine, film and supply business, and especially so to the film producer, because his service must be prompt and well advertised to meet with approval. The commercial advertising of the concerns wishing to introduce their goods into those markets should be written in an attractive but non-exaggerated manner; the new productions should be advertised in descriptive form and illustrated if possible. The titles should be translated into Spanish and in harmony with the temperament and humor of the Spanish-American.

The credit system is the point of vital interest to the exporter and good management and understanding of the credit in those countries will enable one to do a good business in a safe and conservative manner. The allowing of credit is not as risky a proposition as it seems to those who have never studied the field, but who are guided simply by reports of merchants that have made mistakes in allowing credit without having a thorough knowledge of the field. There are hundreds of old established firms in those countries that are as solid as the best in the United States and which enjoy almost unlimited credit in Europe. Naturally, they are strictly punctual with their obligations. The average well-to-do merchant, although not included in the ranks of the wealthy, is usually prompt with his payments, for his credit is of more value to him than anything else.

A careful allowance of credit involves no more risk than it does in the United States. There are ways to find out the standing of a business man there as well as here. Bradstreet's and Dun's keep up-to-date ratings of the majority of the firms in Spanish America. If this rating could not for any reason be obtained, there remains the local bank and the usual commercial reference given by the party soliciting the credit.

The contract between the credit method of the European and the American is not so great that it would make competition impossible. Europe allows credit of three months, also for six months, and in exceptional cases even of nine months, but we must consider that they charge interest for that length of time and that the goods are as a general rule sold net. American merchants have so far allowed from 30 to 90 days with interest and in some cases the extension of a credit is as long as six months on very good accounts.

Special mention must be made of the legislation of the Spanish-American countries. The laws are very strict in regard to failures and other frauds and the foreign exporter is well protected. Years ago failures were a common occurrence and unscrupulous adventurers had an endless number of opportunities for committing all kinds of depredations; but today the laws are such that it is almost impossible to commit fraud and "get away with it."

Long term credits are not unusual in the moving picture business. The theaters and other places of amusement are generally financed by rich investors who in most cases send money with the order or who accept a sight draft upon receipt of goods. Drafts are usually made in favor of a local bank, at sight and against shipping documents, the bank surrendering documents upon payment. Drafts are also drawn at 30, 60 or 90 days and they are made out to cover principal and interest up to the time of arrival of funds in New York. These drafts are often discounted by the bank or banking agency in New York and the money obtained much sooner. The banking facilities which will eventually be had between this country and South America will make these transactions much easier in the future.

Orders will come sometimes to be collected at a bank or commission house and in such a case the manufacturer, even if he does not invoice directly to the client, but to his agent, is not in any way compromised or obliged to give any further discount or commission to such an agent, as he receives his legal commission from the client. When possible a copy of such invoice should be sent directly to the person ordering the goods.

In filling orders, substitutions should by all means be avoided, unless specifically authorized to do so, this being a practice which the Spanish-American has always held against the United States shippers.

Invoices as well as correspondence should be made out in Spanish and in a clear and systematic form. Invoices in foreign languages are not desirable and are interpreted to mean that "we are too busy to bother with you."

There are various ways in which moving picture machines, supplies and films can be shipped to Spanish-American countries, and which before very long will be facilitated much more than they are today. Shipments of any size and weight are made in the usual way under bills of lading and consular invoice. If shipments are too small for a minimum bill of lading, a forwarding agent offers the quickest and cheapest service. The Parcels Post offers a very inexpensive and quick service for moving picture films. A recent ruling of the postal authorities has removed the total restrictions that had existed against moving picture films and they are accepted today for shipment by Parcels Post to Spanish-American countries. They should be packed in a tin box, placed within a light wooden or cardboard box, with the customs declaration form attached to the package stating the substance of which the films are made. This is the best way of packing and shipping films of gelatinous composition and they should be declared, "Gelatine Cinematographic Films."

When a shipment cannot be made by Parcels Post on account of its nature or weight, the "Parcels Receipt" system is very convenient and very cheap. Under this arrangement the package is delivered to the mail steamer and for a small sum said package is delivered to the consignee at the end of the route.

I sincerely hope that the information and facts given will serve to encourage and bring results to the manufacturers in the moving picture industry, desiring to extend their field of action. I hope to see the day when every manufacturer in the United States is supplying the South American republics with their products and that before very long New York may become the financial pivot for the trade of the South American hemisphere.

President Wilson as an Actor.

The Edison Company Has the Promise of the President's Appearance in a Real Play.

TO Director Eugene Nowland, of the Edison Company, will go the "scoop" long prized by all motion picture directors—that of getting President Wilson in a film as an actor in a real picture story. So comes the news from Washington, where the newspapers are giving column length, first page space to the feat, notably the Washington Herald. The President has promised to be a real picture actor, and although his appearance before the camera is always of interest, the interweaving him into the story gives the occasion and the film especial interest, particularly at this time when we see, through pictures of a recent happy event at the White House, the affectionate side of the man. In the film, he will appear as a sort of cupid's assistant, as he lends his encouragement to the love affairs of two young people.

Gladys Hulette.

The story will be a heart interest story around the civil service. The hero, Pat O'Malley, comes to Washington to enter the government employ through the civil service. In his wanderings, he meets with the young lady of his choice, Gladys Hulette, already in the government employ. The scene of their courtship carries them onto the White House grounds where President Wilson enters on the stage and has a conversation with the pair, shaking hands with them.

The officials of the civil service were so delighted with the accurateness of the scenes describing the workings of that system that they joined in with enthusiasm and used the "influence" that allowed Director Nowland to snap some of the big public men who were too shy for succumbing to the regular request. These same officials got to work on Secretary Tumulty and in that way arranged for the President's appearance. That was Director Nowland's venture into diplomacy that won him the "scoop" that hundreds of motion picture men have sought ever since President Wilson entered the White House.

Director Nowland is still in Washington completing the scenes of the play, where he is awaiting the opportune combination of a sunny day and a lull in the affairs of state that will give the President the centre of the boards.

ANOTHER PICTURE PLAYHOUSE EXCHANGE.

The Picture Playhouse Film Company, Inc., in following out their recently announced program to open six more new exchanges, have rented an office at 23 Piedmont street, Boston, Mass., and have installed John Curran as manager.

The office opens with a full set of their eighteen feature releases, besides a number of comedies.

CHICAGO LETTER

BY JAS. S. McQUADE

A Tribute to M. A. Neff.

WHEN the Ohio state convention broke up late Wednesday afternoon, February 10, and the members rushed away hurriedly to catch their trains, I could not help reflecting that the claims of the little things in life sometimes blind us to the larger. The occasion was really a momentous one in the history of the organization of exhibitors. Yet how many of those in attendance thought of it?

As these men rushed away with minds full of business cares, they left behind them in the room a man who had, most likely, presided over their state organization for the last time; a man who had made state organizations and national organizations possible for exhibitors; a man who has always endeavored to build while at least some of his opponents have been tearing down; a man who has shown himself big enough to sacrifice personal ambition for the good of the organization, not once but twice; the one man abve all others whom exhibitors should give due credit for the work originated and accomplished by him.

I have attended many conventions, some of them stormy, at which M. A. Neff has presided, and I have watched him closely and have been always impressed that his whole heart was in his work. He was ever solicitous for the welfare of the League. He cared for it as a man would for his first born, and he fought for it in the same spirit.

When I think of the days and nights devoted by this man to planning and working out measures for the growth and continued progress of the League, amid good and evil report and at very poor recompense, I have faith that he will receive in later days due measure, in memory at least, for what he has accomplished.

Knowing what I do of M. A. Neff, I offer this small tribute to his work and his worth.

Chicago Theater-Church Ordinance to Be Tested.

Reference was made in the Chicago Letter brevities, in the issue of February 13, to the difficulties between the Hyde Park Presbyterian Church and the owner of the Harper Theater adjoining the church. It now appears that, if the trustees of the church refuse to withdraw their objection to the issuance of a license for the theater, owners of the leasehold and building will ask the Supreme Court for a mandamus writ compelling the city to grant the license and declaring the Chicago theater-church ordinance unconstitutional.

In the interval elapsing before action can be taken by the Supreme Court, the plaintiffs propose to lease the theater building temporarily to the congregation of a negro church, unless some better arrangements can be made.

Edward Rosing, owner of the plot on which the theater stands, has explained to the trustees that under the law his ground rent of $4,500 annually is a first lien on the property. This ground rent is payable quarterly in advance.

"Under the law I can foreclose on the whole property if at any time the owners of the building default in payment," said Rosing, "and I would receive a handsome present of a building that cost $220,000. I have no desire to do so and urge you to come to some reasonable agreement."

Ownership of the theater building and the ninety-nine-year lease is now vested in A. E. Martin of the Martin Construction Company, and the holders of $125,000 in bonds. These bonds were issued after F. W. McKinney, who originated the proposition, transferred his interest to Martin.

The theater owners have offered to enter into an agreement with the trustees limiting the playhouse to moving picture shows. The trustees demand that the theater shall be open only six days in a week, eliminating Sunday performances. The theater owners refuse to do so.

Praise for General Film Company's Generosity.

I have just had another welcome letter from Harry E. Downer, Head Resident of the Friendly House, Davenport, Ia. In referring to the generosity of the General Film Company in furnishing educational films for exhibition at this very worthy institution, particulars of which are given later in this article, Mr. Downer acknowledges the deep sense of obligation which he and his confreres feel to that corporation for coming to their aid at a critical time.

"It was certainly a handsome thing for them to do and we are grateful." Mr. Downer writes. "It seems to me that given the disposition—and I have no doubt they are as generous as other men—the motion picture people have a peculiar philanthropic opportunity to care for such institutions as ours. I am mighty glad the General Film Company is embracing its chance to be an all-the-year 'good fellow,' and that it does not cramp its generosity into the Christmas season."

Here is the good tidings concerning the General Film Company's liberality to which Mr. Downer refers and to which the Davenport Times gave publicity at the time:

> The best news that has floated into Friendly House for a long time came by mail yesterday from the Chicago office of the General Film Co. As no bills for rental had been received since the first of the year, an inquiry as to how it happened brought the reply that the Friendly House account in their office was balanced and would always be balanced in the future, that the General was making a Christmas present to the children of Davenport and that they would serve them to the best of their ability in the future without asking for their pennies or any share of them. That surely is handsome treatment from a great corporation, inasmuch as the popular estimate of corporations assigns them neither souls nor gizzards. The wonder box has this week the usual mixed menu of information and smiles.

"We are very busy at Friendly House," writes Mr. Downer in concluding his letter. "We have fine audiences of children for the pictures, but grown people still decline to take an interest in the class of pictures we are most anxious to place before them. We are perturbed over the sparse crop of educationals these days."

If Mr. Downer keeps track of the educational output, even in these days, he will be rather surprised and encouraged.

Elbert Hubbard and Moving Pictures.

Elbert Hubbard, that big, healthful soul and optimist, is a thorough believer in moving pictures. He does not believe that a child can make the stride of a man nor that he can attain the wisdom or experience of the right kind of a man until he has withstood the hard knocks and the trying, uphill climb that the fullness of years brings.

So with moving pictures. Mr. Hubbard knows that the coming years will test them and that the good will stand the hammering and the weeding-out that time will surely bring. In a recent article he writes:

"I am a writer. In my writings I describe what I have seen and the things that seem to me to be true. Just to the degree that I express truth and make men think do I benefit them. No criticism can be brought against moving pictures which cannot be brought against books with equal truth. There are good books, there are bad books, and there are bum books written by punk parties with literary eczema which are neither good nor bad.

"It is exactly so with moving pictures. These pictures tell you a story, playing the thing out while you sit and look. Good people want to see only the truthful and the worthy. As we grow better we will have better moving pictures. As it is now, I believe the silly and absurd are being eliminated, and the helpful and the true are coming to the fore.

Chicago Film Brevities.

The lady exhibitors who relieved the monotony of "mere man" at the recent Ohio state convention in Columbus were: Miss K. Smith, of the Ideal Theater, Urbana; Mrs. Minnie Eley, Ideal Theater, Urbana; Mrs. Lulu M. Riefsnider, of the Orpheum Theater, Urbana; Mrs. H. E. Vestal, Ada, and Mrs. Vanvallara, of the Lyric Theater, Ada. Mrs. H. E. Vestal is the wife of Mr. Vestal, chairman of the Ohio State Board of Censorship. While in Columbus Mrs. Vestal and the other ladies called at the Governor's office in the State House, where they were cheerfully greeted and introduced to Mrs. Willis, wife of the Governor.

M. W. McGee, general manager of the Majestic Theater Co., Detroit, Mich., paid a call at the Chicago office recently. Mr. McGee stated that the building of the Majestic Theater, on Woodward and Willis avenues, in that city, is now well under way. The new theater will have a frontage of 119 feet on Woodward avenue. The front will have a number of modern stores and offices. The theater proper will have a depth of 135 feet from the projecting room to the screen. The ground floor will seat 1,850 people, and the entire building will cost about $150,000. The officers of the Majestic Theater Co. are: Arthur Caille, president; Frank Wesbrook, vice-president, and Henry Guthard, secretary. As before stated, Mr. McGee is the general manager of the company. He also will be the manager of the theater, which will be opened about March 1. Mr. McGee stated that business was very encouraging in all the well-managed theaters in Detroit. He also informed me that the Family Theater, owned by the Harris Amusement Co., of Pittsburgh, formerly offering vaudeville programs, had changed to straight moving picture programs on February 1.

It is said that the new house will be so built and equipped as to make it rank among the best structures of its kind in Michigan.

The building and grounds committee of the Board of Education of Chicago started a movement last week which has in view the opening up of public schools to the public for entertainment on certain evenings of the week. Trustee Robert J. Roulston introduced the following resolution, which was adopted by the committee: "Resolved, That a special committee of three be appointed to investigate and report on the feasibility of opening the assembly halls and gymnasiums in the public schools to the public at least three evenings a week, during the school year, and, further, that moving picture apparatus be installed in each assembly room, to be operated along educational lines, under the direction of the superintendent."

Lake Forrest, a suburb of Chicago, has decided that there will be no more moving picture exhibitions in that community on Sundays. One evening last week the city council of that village put the final seal of disapproval on pictures, for Sundays, by a vote of five to one, it is said. It is denied, however, that the vote was anything like this, as City Clerk King estimated that the vote was about evenly divided, as many hundreds of persons, unwilling to trust the expression of their sentiments to "yes" or "no," wrote letters. Reform organizations were very active against Sunday picture houses, and it is understood that they reported that poolroom keepers were preparing to open up on Sundays if the pictures were permitted to run. The truth of the whole matter is that the small attendance at Sunday evening church services in Lake Forest is the cause of the oposition to Sunday pictures.

The votes for favorites in the "Sue" contest, this city, are soaring skywards every week. The latest published list of the votes shows that the five highest candidates for honors are as follows: Dorothy Warshauer, 831,560; Florence Tighe, 525,075; Gladys Swayne, 336,695; Myrtle Johnson, 306,230, and Beatrice Brown, 230,655. Many managers and owners of moving picture theaters, in all sections of the city, have entered the contest for the girls. The South Side theaters have been fighting hard for Florence Tighe and Gladys Swayne, while the North Side are even stronger in their support of May Connery, Dorothy Warshauer and others. Clubs are also being formed in various sections of the city to assist their candidate, and many thousands of votes are collected in this way daily. It is understood that the Essanay Film Mfg. Co. has determined to use in the "Sue" picture as many as eight of the highest contestants, provided they are equal to the tasks imposed on them in making the picture.

It goes without saying that the films presented were unqualifiedly endorsed and approved not only for having the necessary educational value, but also as being very satisfactory photographically. General Manager Watterson R. Rothacker and other officers of the Industrial Moving Picture Co. were invited officially to be present at the opening of the Illinois building in San Francisco.

MASTERPIECE FILM COMPANY NOT DISBANDED.

In the issue of the Moving Picture World for February 13 it was stated that the Masterpiece Film Company had disbanded. This information was transmitted to the World by its Los Angeles correspondent upon information given by Al. Filson, one of the company's players, who had been dropped along with others. The facts in the matter are: The Masterpiece Film Company temporarily suspended production and discharged its players until it could dispose of the completed work on hand—not an unusual proceeding with companies making features—and arrange for another picture.

As an indication that the company intends to continue it has purchased the Loftus Feature Studios at 1339 Gordon street, Los Angeles, and has purchased an entire city block upon which it has built some $20,000 worth of buildings for motion picture uses. In addition to the buildings already erected contracts have been prepared for a glass studio 60 feet by 60 feet in dimensions with a large open-air stage in connection therewith. The entire plant is to be completed within ninety days. This would indicate that the Masterpiece was far from being a "dead one."

Doings at Los Angeles

AT last Los Angeles is to be recognized as a moving picture production headquarters, and the companies operating here are to be shown more courtesy than before. The following from the "Times" gives in full the result of a meeting this week of the directors of a local commercial organization:

Deploring the general attitude of city and county officials to put obstacles in the way of an industry that annually spends $5,000,000 in this city, the directors of the Merchants' and Manufacturers' Association took the initiative yesterday in a campaign to effect a better understanding between motion-picture concerns and public officials.

By resolution, Secretary Zeehandelaar was directed to make an investigation of the motion-picture film business and its relations to the business life of the city and also to determine means by which a more thorough co-operation may be effected between the companies and public officials.

Though various companies have complained to the association that they have been at times excluded from the public parks and their work otherwise interfered with, matters really came to a head when it became known that two companies are contemplating moving their plants to other places where, as their officials stated it, more encouragement and courtesy may be shown them.

The resolutions in full of the association's directorate follow:

Whereas, the moving-picture film industry has become a most important factor of our commercial activity, with an expenditure conservatively estimated at $5,000,000 per year for salaries and supplies, and employing over 25,000 people in this city; and

Whereas, aside from the financial advantages connected with this industry, Los angeles derives a tremendous advertising feature by having our scenic beauties and climatic advantages depicted in the pictures that are seen by the theater-going public throughout the United States; and

Whereas, complaints have reached this association that city and county officials have frequently interfered with the preparation for pictures to such an extent that some of the moving-picture film companies intended to move their plants to other places where more encouragement and courtesy may be shown them; thorefore

Be it resolved, by the board of directors of the Merchants' and Manufacturers' Association, that we deplore the attitude of those officials in placing obstacles in the way of an industry that is so advantageous to this city and county; and

Be it further resolved, that the secretary of this association be hereby directed to make a thorough investigation of the moving-picture film industry in this city, obtaining all the necessary data as to the amount invested in land and buildings, the number of people employed, the wages paid and the supplies required and also to what extent a better understanding and co-operation may be effected between those companies and the public officials.

Since arriving at the Hub, Mr. Samuel Goldfish has made some remarkable announcements. The best news is that "Half a million dollars is to be spent in the purchase of a new site and the erection and equipment of a new studio in Hollywood," according to the morning paper, "and between four and five hundred actors are to be brought out to form new companies, including some of the best known stars in the dramatic and film world." Details of plans include the sending of a company to Europe, one to Japan, and another on an expedition through the States.

With speculators buying seventy-five cent tickets to "The Clansman" and selling them a few hours later for two dollars and a half apiece, and many columns of newspaper argument for and against the showing of this big Griffith-Mutual master film, the Auditorium theater is crowded beyond all former records. At first it looked as if the piece would be stopped in its first presentation, for after the board of censors had favorably passed on the play, the council arose and ordered the police chief to stop the running of the film, and in turn W. H. Clune, manager of the theater got out an injunction restraining the chief from carrying out his order. Judge Jackson held that if the board of censors had sanctioned the play, it was not up to the council to interfere. The court room was crowded with negroes at the time of trial, and the "Tribune" quoted Judge Jackson as saying: "I don't agree with the taste of many persons who were present," he having been present at the first running of the picture, "That may be a difference of opinion. We all look at things from various standpoints, but I think it was regrettable that the play was put on. It has a tendency to aggravate a situation that is past and gone." The Judge also said that he thought that the picture was a good one and that the colored people should pass it by and not try to take any action or stir up agitation. The court also held that if the board of censors' decision was not to be permanent and final, he recommended that it be abolished. But the big picture is still running at Clune's and every day the line of waiting patrons extends to the corner.

Helen Holmes, heroine of "Hazards" and Director McGowan, who now can wobble about on crutches, wrote a nice letter telling of their trip to Las Vegas, New Mexico. We wrote them requesting news, so here is the result:

We arrived here last Tuesday week and found a very agreeable contrast in the weather.

Our first day here met with much disaster. At the start we derailed a car in the depot yards, as the conductor did not understand our work. After re-railing the obstinate box we proceeded about twenty miles south into the mountains and Helen was knocked from the side of a box car by a mail crane. This took up an hour of our time. We had a car chained up to the train, taking scenes from the passing track. On a stop signal the engineer applied the brakes too severely and dumped Williams, Murchison and the car. Both of the boys were on the side ladder and when the car left the track the jolting over the ties threw them off. Williams was struck by the chain and Murchison bruised considerably, but outside of that they were all right. Next thing our engine burst a flue; she leaked and leaked, in fact I never knew that a locomotive held as much water as that engine leaked on to the track. We "cut" her off from the train and she ran back about three miles to replenish the supply. On returning to the train we tried to work but the "tallow pot," or fireman, could not keep up a head of more than 75 lbs. of steam, so we were forced to "call it a day," wire for a switch engine, wait three hours and then be towed back in disgrace to the depot we had started from that morning with so much self-confidence and ambish.

Its all in a day's work anyhow. We have started to visit the local picture house, curtain speeches, flowers for Helen and Elks' dances, etc., for the men. They are all having a splendid time and the hospitality of the people here leaves nothing to be desired. Anything we wish for or want is anticipated, and one cannot walk down the street without an accompanying retinue of old and young men, and children of all sizes and ages. Will write you some of the news in a more understandable vein later on.

Hurriedly yours, J. P. McGOWAN.

Dolly Larkin, playing in "Features Ideal," with George Larkin, suffered a painful but not serious accident while doing a hazardous stunt this week. Dolly is held prisoner in a dive, George goes to the rescue, and after a rough and tumble fight with a gang, they get to a fire escape where he hangs by his knees and swings Dolly to the street, but unfortunately the giant swing was too much and their hands parted, the intrepid girl falling to the pavement. She was badly bruised on the head and was unconscious for some time, but fortunately is now recovered enough to proceed with the picture. The rest of Features players are busy as ever.

As was stated a week ago, Harry Revier had secured the Kalem studio at Santa Monica and would do comedies for that company. At that time Mr. Revier did have the studio, as far as his company was concerned. But John E. Brennan, formerly star comedian with Kalem, had interviewed the railway officials and secured the lease for the ground and the depot. The new Kalem man, upon learning this, fared forth to the beach with a train of motor trucks and an army of wreckers and razed the old studio in eighteen hours, starting Saturday evening at half after seven. Mr. Brennan tried to buy the stage and buildings, but they were not for sale. They were carted to a small place between the beach and the city and set up where Mr. Revier is now at work. Mr. Brennan immediately ordered a carload of lumber, and before three days had passed a beautiful new studio was in place of the old one and a brand new company started work for the jovial comedian. He will release through Pathe. He has a good start with the grounds, but will add new trees and shrubbery, and will completely remodel the whole place. A fine mission front is under construction on the street side, and a high fence will be built around the whole lot which is nearly a block long and about one hundred feet wide. Mr. Brennan, who was for so long with the Kalem at the beach studio, and who lives in Santa Monica, has at his beck and call the whole social population of the city, and will produce only high-class society comedies of a new order. Some of the finest real costumes and gowns are now being used by real society belles of the city, and clever pictures ought to result.

George Beban in "The Sign of the Rose," his old-time piece of vaudeville stage fame, will appear on the stage at Clune's auditorium on the first of March, after the seven reels of the picture have been run. This is to be one of the best films ever made by the N. Y. producer and is being looked forward to by many.

Filming "The Lady of the Snows"

Mrs. Carter H. Harrison, Author of the Novel, Takes Great Interest in the Production.

MRS. CARTER H. HARRISON had the unique experience on Thursday, February 11, of directing her first moving picture play. The Essanay company recently purchased the photoplay rights to Mrs. Harrison's novel, "The Lady of the Snows." Work on this production began Thursday and Mrs. Harrison was asked to appear and give her ideas on certain phases of the drama. Mrs. Harrison, accompanied by her daughter, Edith, and her daughter-in-law, Mrs. Carter H. Harrison, Jr., spent most of the morning in the Essanay studios. While the Mayor's wife did very little actual directing, she offered numerous suggestions to the producer and in other ways showed unusual interest in the production.

Mrs. Carter H. Harrison Explaining her Photoplay, "The Lady of the Snows," to the Players at the Essanay Studio.

"This is the first time I ever saw moving pictures being taken," said Mrs. Harrison, "and to me it is one of the most interesting sights I have ever seen. I was surprised in a way to notice the exacting care that is used in every scene. It was different from anything I had imagined. It seems as though the production of photoplays is just as much an art as the production of legitimate dramas."

The filming of "The Lady of the Snows" probably will take up the better part of three weeks. More than one hundred scenes will be taken in the Essanay studios and practically the same number will be taken out of doors. The exterior scenes will be taken in the northern part of Wisconsin.

BOOK ON NOTED PHOTOPLAY.

"Damon and Pythias" Issued in Story Form by Grosset & Dunlap.

We are in receipt of "Damon and Pythias" in story form issued by Messrs. Grosset & Dunlap, from the scenario of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.

The book is beautifully decorated and handsomely bound, containing sixteen single and one double page illustrations from scenes of the photoplay. This book is selling at the Grosset & Dunlap recognized popular price of fifty cents, and a far-reaching campaign has been inaugurated through the Knights of Pythias Lodges throughout the country as well as the book stores and the Universal Exchanges.

This is the first time this widely-known story has ever been issued in book form, and it is the first novelized story of the screen to which the Universal has lent its co-operation.

KLEINE ACTRESS HAS PLAYED LEAD WITH EDWIN BOOTH.

Mrs. Burmester is now with Henry Kolker in "Our Children" at the Princess Theater, Chicago.

MacDowell Educational Pictures

Camera Expert and Travelogue Lecturer Returns From Second Round-the-World Trip—Was Financed by Selig.

By James S. McQuade.

DR. EDWARD BURTON MacDOWELL, the well-known round-the-world traveler, expert camera man and travelogue lecturer, who has contributed largely to the number of educational films which the trade can now boast of, recently arrived in Chicago after another long trip. Dr. MacDowell left New York December 1st, 1913, and sailed to the Madeira Islands, where he took 1,000 feet of negative showing the customs of the natives and some of their sports. Among the latter was tobogganing by the natives, down steep and dry mountain roads, on peculiar looking sleds. A larger type of these sleds is used for public conveyances, which are drawn by oxen. A very amusing aspect of this sport lies in the fact that these rough roadways are paved with round cobble stones, about the size of a man's two fists clasped.

Dr. Edward Burton MacDowell.

Gibraltar was the next stopping point, where views of the old rock were taken from various angles. About 500 feet of negative were taken there, chiefly scenic, as the British authorities do not allow encroachment on the forbidden zone.

Algiers was next on the itinerary. There general pictures of panoramic, street and market scenes in the Arab quarter were taken, about 1,000 feet of negative in all.

Picturesque Monte Carlo, in Monaco, situated on the Mediterranean, a few miles from Nice, was the next objective point. The trip from Algiers to Monte Carlo was notable from the fact that Dr. MacDowell traveled on the first large steamer that entered the new harbor of this widely known city. Pictures of the great gambling Casino, the palace of the Prince of Monaco and other points of interest, consuming about 1,000 feet of negative, were taken.

Steamer was then taken to Alexandria, Egypt, via Naples. No pictures were taken in the ancient Egyptian city, as Cairo was the goal sought. Pictures showing street scenes, famous buildings, and forts and mosques were there taken; also excellent pictures of the Great Pyramids and of the Sphinx, which are located on the desert, about ten or twelve miles southwest from Cairo.

Passage was thence taken up the Nile to the first cataract, where the great irrigation dam built by the English, at Assouan, is located. Excellent, complete pictures of this dam, both general and in detail, were taken, the latter showing the lock and the passage of steamers, including the vessels of the German line and of Thomas Cook & Sons, the famous tourist guides. Near Assouan, pictures were taken of a wild tribe of Soudanese showing their dances and tribal costumes, which consumed about a thousand feet of negative. The ancient temple of Phylae, now almost submerged by the Nile waters, impounded by the big dam, were also taken.

A trip back down the Nile to the great Egyptian temple of Karnak and Luxor, on the east side of the river, and of Thebes, on the west side, was then made. Moving pictures of these gigantic piles of granite masonry were successfully taken, 2,000 feet of negative being used to show them and their surroundings.

On returning to Cairo, Dr. MacDowell went out on a camping trip on the desert, accompanied by eight Arabs and six camels, to the oasis of Fayoum, about fifty miles from Cairo. There a beautiful sunset picture of a salt lake on the oasis, with camels and Arabs in the foreground, was taken, furnishing a very striking bit of atmosphere of the Sahara.

On the desert trip to Fayoum, Dr. MacDowell made very interesting pictures of Arab camp and desert life. Two thousand feet of negative were used in these pictures during the ten days of the trip. About the best feature of the pictures is the showing of an Arab wedding on the desert, all the details of which are given in full, including the ceremony and the feasting, and the scene showing how the marriage contract was made by the fathers of the bride and groom, the latter themselves being absent. The pictures also include a unique camel race, in which about twelve camels participated.

The trip from Cairo to Port Said was next made, where a steamer was taken for Beyrout, Syria. From Beyrout, Dr. MacDowell went to the famous ruins of Baalbec. About 1,000 feet of negative were taken of the ruins, which are considered the greatest Roman ruins in existence.

Thence to Damascus. There about 1,500 feet of negative were taken showing the national life and customs, and also places of biblical interest. A very unique scene will appear in these pictures showing a troupe of about fifty camels carrying on their backs heavy timbers somewhat larger than our telegraph poles.

From Damascus the doctor went to the Sea of Galilee. Dr. MacDowell considers the Sea of Galilee in many respects the most interesting spot he found in the whole of Palestine. While the picturesqueness of the lake and its surroundings will not particularly strike an American, because of our many home scenes which are far superior, yet the great biblical interest surrounding it makes it a favorite visiting place for all tourists. On the north shore of the lake, pictures were taken of the ruins of an old Jewish synagogue, which are supposed to be on the ancient site of Capernaum.

From the Sea of Galilee the trip to Jerusalem was made, passing through the City of Nazareth on the way, and through some of the ancient ruins in Samaria. The trip of about 140 miles was made in a spring wagon, in four days. This wagon was not of American make, the doctor was careful to state, as the riding was anything but comfortable and the springs anything but springy. The weather was also cold during the trip, the time of the year being February. Two weeks were spent in the Holy City, during which Bethlehem, Bethany, the Dead Sea, the River Jordan, and old Jericho were visited. About 1,000 feet of negative in all were taken in these places.

A steamer was next taken from Joppa, the seaport of Jerusalem, for Port Said, and thence the sea-through trip to Singapore was made. From that spot he reshipped again to Java, where about two and a half months were spent. The main object of Dr. MacDowell's visit to Java was to familiarize himself thoroughly with the very interesting national life of that island. It is one of the most densely populated sections in the world. Java is about the size of the State of Ohio, and has a population of 30,000,000 souls. The density of population is surpassed only by that of Holland. How thoroughly Dr. MacDowell studied the life, customs and manners of the people, and the points of interest visited and taken by the camera, will be shown when it is known that he took 10,000 feet of negative while on the island, all of which are very interesting. These films are of great educational value. The rice industry, especially, which is carried on, perhaps, more perfectly than in any other part of the world by the natives of Java, has been very carefully filmed. Two crops of rice are produced each year on this island, Dr. MacDowell stated.

Boro Boedoer, the great Hindoo temple, which was built about a thousand years ago when Java was over-run by the Hindoos, is finely shown in the pictures. Also all the famous volcanoes on the island. A climb of 9,000 feet was made to the top of the Bromo volcano, which is still active and one of the most interesting and beautiful specimens now in existence. Dr. MacDowell went over the rim of the crater, which is not at all large when compared with the craters of the Hawaiian group. It must be understood that this volcano does not emit lava. It is constantly throwing up vast clouds of sulphur fumes and steam vapor, which makes it a particularly fine spot for a camera man.

Dr. MacDowell succeeded in catching with the camera every type of dance known on the island. He also took about a thousand feet which show a troupe of Java singers and actors in a native musical comedy.

The making of Java cloth, which is a household industry, has also been very carefully shown in some of the pictures taken. Batik is the name of this cloth.

From Java the voyage to Bangkok and Siam was made, where scenic pictures and also several showing native life and customs were taken. From Bangkok a voyage to Nagasaki, Japan, was made by way of Hongkong. Owing to the war, which had already broken out at the time, German passenger steamers had disappeared from the seas, and Dr. MacDowell was obliged to make the trip in a small rice steamer, of 600 tons, which occupied ten days. This was the Doctor's second trip to Japan, the first being made in 1913. Two and a half months were spent in the Flowery Kingdom, and about 10,000 feet of negative were made. These pictures cover a wide variety of subjects and views of many places which had not been visited during the first trip. They have a fine educational value.

Dr. MacDowell timed his visit to Japan so that it covered the "chrysanthemum" season, his first trip having covered the "cherry-blossom" season. On this trip he took some very charming pictures of Geisha girls, in poses and otherwise, in the chrysanthemum gardens.

From Japan the voyage to San Francisco was begun, and Dr. MacDowell arrived there after an absence of thirteen months. This completed his second round-the-world trip, and he covered in this instance, roughly speaking, about 35,000 miles.

All the pictures taken by Dr. MacDowell on his last trip, as on former ones, will be released from time to time by the Selig Polyscope Company, as the management sees fit. They will also be used by Dr. MacDowell in his travelogue lectures given throughout the country.

BRITISH NOTES.

ADOLPH ZUKOR, of the Famous Players Co., in an interview with the New York correspondent of a daily newspaper, declares that no actor or actress on the English stage, however celebrated, can afford to neglect an opportunity of appearing on the screen. This has given one or two people in the trade food for thought, and it is probably being wondered who it is on the legitimate stage that the F. P. Co. has its eyes upon.

The licensing authorities at Lancaster attempted last week to impose a kind of compulsory censorship of films upon the exhibitors in their administrative area. In renewing picture theater licenses they suggested to exhibitors that in future no pictures should be shown unless they had first been approved by the British Board of Film Censors or alternatively by the magistrates themselves. One exhibitor who holds seventeen licenses bitterly resented the proposal and did not hesitate to express his opinions and those of exhibitors generally on the matter. As an immediate outcome to this objection the condition is being held back for further discussion. This is not by any means the first time a local authority has sought occasion to mount the pedestal to judge what shall or shall not be shown on the screen. But it is a significant fact that they have all happened since the institution of that self-imposed oligarchy called the British Board of Film Censors. The manufacturers in Britain have no one to blame. On their own instigation and unassisted they set the censorship machine in motion. That it has been provocative of many unnecessary trials and tribulations has now been apparent for some time. Although it is in no sense official, it gives to local government authorities an opportune precedent to tighten their licensing regulations to embrace censorship duties, and from the way the wind is blowing at the present time a concerted movement by exhibitors would not come as a great surprise to the trade.

Under the auspices of the "Daily Mail" an exhibition of the films illustrating German military operations in Belgium and France was given in London the other day to an audience of eminent State and Parliamentary officials. At no little trouble and expense the copies were obtained by this newspaper from the United States collection of Herr Dernburg.

Larry Trimble and Florence Turner have achieved a novel attainment in British films by producing a drama dealing with the life of city shopgirls and the much criticised living-in system. It will, I am informed, be entitled "Shopgirls, or the Great Question," and has been produced at the Walton studios of the Hepworth Company.

Since the birth of the moving picture business in England as a separate industry almost every trade in the slightest way affiliated has come into line in catering for its diverse but special requirements. There is, however, one exception, the railway companies, who in the despatch and delivery of films between renters and exhibitors, seem to manifest a marked indifference in the discharge of their duties. Quite ninety per cent. of British moving picture exhibitors change programs twice weekly, Mondays and Thursdays, and in the realm of the renter these are known as change days. Theaters in the immediate vicinity of the renting warehouse have not much to complain of as the renter himself generally sees to the delivery of films by auto or one of his own messengers. But by few the greater part of the stock has to be delivered into the country by train and in multitudinous cases it is as uncertain as the toss of a coin whether the parcels reach their destination in time. Not that the trains are unpunctual, it is the staff organization and not the train service which causes chaos amongst renters on change day. Every parcel is labeled to travel by a certain train and the renter's responsibility ends when he hands over his films at the railway parcels office, where more often than not they are dependent upon the mercies of the porters for dispatch. Music hall artistes have their own railway association, a powerful body which makes all arrangements for the transport of players and luggage from town to town. For any railway company to offend this body would be disastrous, for it would henceforth boycott the line at every opportunity. Some similar organization might be augmented to effectually deal with the dispatch and return of films, for, up to date, but one railway has made any movement to provide for the extensive traffic in moving pictures.

D. W. G.'s loudly heralded domestic drama of American slumdom, "The Escape," has been exhibited to the trade and press of London and the provinces this week, two months ahead of release. Of the picture's success as a domestic drama embodying a provisional remedy for one phase of the sex problem there is no disputing. But of its acceptance as a pictorial object lesson in the complicated science of racial reproduction, is another matter. If Mr. Griffith sees some of the accounts by press men who saw the picture the other day he will realize how painfully critical British reviewers can be when some purport out of the ordinary is assigned to a quite commonplace subject. Without precipitating an ethical controversy I might point out that we have had from America a dozen productions similar to "The Escape," each in its way telling the same story and revealing the same moral, but none of these have been saddled with eugenical attributes. A leading reviewer dismisses this aspect of the film in the terse, laconic phrase, "Eugenics is a false alarm," while others admitting the dramatic potency of the picture entirely ignore its scientific designation. It is, however, booking well and will be discussed at length in the general press when exhibited in public.

A few interesting statistics are now available from the Government Board of Trade upon the financial movements in the industry during the year 1914. Altogether 314 new companies were registered with an aggregate capital of nearly two and a half million pounds. Owing to the war this compares favorably with the record of 1913 when 544 companies were registered, representing in capital nearly three million pounds. Last July thirty-eight companies to commercially exploit moving picture enterprises were registered, but in September only two are recorded.

Two notably large advertising campaigns begin in a few days in connection with the Thanhouser and Lubin companies. Mr. P. Kimberley, the managing director in Britain for the former organization, in addition to extensive newspaper publicity, is offering through "Reynold's Newspaper" one hundred pounds (about $500) for the best one hundred-word solution of "The Million Dollar Mystery." So far as newspaper publicity goes the campaign of the famous Philadelphia house will require some beating. The Lord Piccadilly series are being boomed literally to the skies and in addition a few extra attractions in posters are offered. The most arresting of these is a life-size cardboard figure of Arthur Johnson in the lead.

IMPERIAL FILMS CORP. BRANCH OFFICE.

Louis B. Goulden, general manager of the Imperial Films Corporation, whose general office is located in Milwaukee, Wis., announces the opening of the first branch office in Minneapolis, Minn.

It is the intention of the Imperial Corporation to establish several offices through the country from where they will be able to supply the exhibitor with features from five to fifty dollars per day.

F. A. Greenlaw, long and favorably known to film men and exhibitors, has been appointed manager of the Minneapolis office.

Francis X. Bushman---Star

By Thornton Fisher.

ONE of the most potent factors conducive to the success of the motion picture industry has been and ever will be the high calibre of its personnel, and nothing is more indicative of this fact than a brief survey of the men whose names today have become household words. The public knows them—wants to know them and in many instances are better informed concerning their private lives than they are of our statesmen, soldiers or writers. Only yesterday a gentleman of the stage could "get away with anything," first because he was an actor, and second because the public didn't care so long as he pleased them. Today we know what our favorite star eats for breakfast, whether he prefers lavender to red hosiery, and innumerable other things associated with his private life. He must conduct himself true to the ethics of propriety lest he be ostracized by the very fans whose favor he would curry. But I am digressing.

One of the conspicuous types of your modern picture players is a tall, brown-haired, blue-eyed fellow with the Essanay Company at Chicago—Francis X. Bushman, or "Bush," as he is affectionately known.

"Bush" really belongs to that old ante-bellum period so much does he typify the gallant southern chevalier of those days. He is a southern native, a son of Virginia, having been born in the old town of Norfolk. From Norfolk the family moved to Baltimore, where his sister played the lead in Baltimore stock. It was there young Frank first saw her in the "Lady of Lyons."

When the lad was seven years old someone handed him a toy stage with regular scenery and told him to go to it and absorb the atmosphere—and he did.

It was about this time when the dramatic spark was struck and which later was fanned into a flame through the close association with his sister's work in stock. He learned the technical phrases and vernacular of stageland and the mysteries of the playhouse were unfolded to him.

Young Bushman, however, was not ready for the stage, for it was true of him, as it frequently is of the lives of many successful men that he must needs play many parts before he received the star role. Hence it happened that Francis Bushman became a wrestler and strong man, and it is recorded that he played both these parts well, but (if Bush will not rise in righteous indignation) let me humbly interpolate, his countenance never would indicate it—I mean his features, as you already know are not those of the typical bull-necked thick-skinned wrestler or weight-lifter. Possessing an exceptionally well-proportioned figure improved by close application to athletics, "Bush" soon became sought by sculptors before whom he posed for the Lord Baltimore statue and the Soldiers and Sailors monument now occupying sites in the city of Baltimore.

Then he entered the theater via the stage door, where he played with both road and stock companies, and, seasoned theater-goers will remember him in the "Queen of the Moulin Rouge," in which he appeared.

Bushman was playing the lead in a Camden stock company when the Essanay Company reached out its long arm, picked him up and took him to its Chicago studios. It was not long before moving picture fans sat up and began to take notice of this unusual young man and Francis Bushman came into his own.

Six feet tall, clean-cut blue eyes—but why describe him—you, Mr. Patron, and you, Mr. Exhibitor, know him well—he is more than a screen actor—he has the faculty of creating a sense of personal friendship with you through his work. And yet Chicagoans know little of Mr. Bushman—perhaps in the immediate vicinity of his home passersby may see him on his black patent leather thoroughbred cantering along, but this is a secondary recreation, for before all comes his books. This in itself explains why Bushman, except for an occasional visit to a theater, is rarely seen in the evenings. He is proud of his library and there is his haven after the day's work.

Occasionally, however, he goes before clubs and Y. M. C. A.'s to lecture concerning the photo play. This work has taken him into the remote backwood regions of Pennsylvania, where perhaps one-half of his audience can scarcely speak English, but what matters that—they know him, for he has often stirred the emotion of this humble folk and if they cannot grasp his speech they understand his silent acting on the screen.

He receives on an average of one thousand letters a week, most of them of course of the kind usually received by the popular players, but he says with pride that probably fifty of them express an appreciation for the good he is doing.

I spent an afternoon recently with this young star, and far above the rattle and clatter of the New York streets Bush waxed eloquent when he touched on his faith in the future of moving pictures, for here is a man interested more in the picture and its mission than himself a cog (an important one to be sure) in the great machinery.

"Bush" plays to the millions and he esteems them all, but there is one for whose stamp of approval he is particularly anxious. "Bush" confided to me that there is a little lady down in Baltimore who, despite the weather, attends regularly the theater at which his films are being exhibited. It is to her he plays—his mother.

AN ELABORATE EDISON SET.

The infinite care spent in carefully-produced motion pictures these days is well represented in the Edison "Stranleigh to the Rescue," in which Miriam Nesbitt and Marc MacDermott are being featured. To have the ball-room and boudoir sets reflect the air of royalty, over $8,000 were spent. A beautiful and effective feature is the fancy ball where all are dressed in historic costumes of the William and Mary period and a novel clock effect is cleverly worked into the scene. So that the escutcheons on the heraldic shields should be correct, authorities in heraldry in England were consulted.

WILLIAMS BACK FROM INDIA.

Well-Known Film Man Describes Motion Picture Conditions in the Far East—He Says India Is "Virgin Territory" and Susceptible of Great Development—A Glimpse of the Film Situation in the War-Stricken Country.

By W. Stephen Bush.

JOHN DIXON WILLIAMS, the well-known film man of Australian fame and more recently connected with the Bosworth Company and the McIntosh Vaudeville Syndicate, has just returned from a six months' trip which has taken him half around the globe. He returns with a most valuable budget of information and with some interesting personal experiences. Primarily his object had been to investigate moving picture conditions in the Far East. He left New York on the Aquitania on July 21, 1914, and after a week's rest in London he started for India. Mr. Williams' recital of his work and his adventures is simple; he has the air of a globe-trotter, to whom the sight of strange lands and strange people and strange conditions is a stimulant more than anything else. A keen observer, believing in the most cosmopolitan sort of philosophy, Mr. Williams gave a plain and deeply interesting account of what he had been and had lived through.

John D. Williams.

India Is Virgin Territory.

According to Mr. Williams the vast empire in the East with its population of more than three hundred million of people and its numerous populous cities has at the present time scarcely a hundred motion picture theaters. These are located in the big cities of Colombo, Calcutta, Bombay, Madras, Singapore, Rangoon, Darjeeling and others.

"At present," said Mr. Williams, "the films used in the motion picture houses of the Far East are, with but very few exceptions, the refuse, if I may say so, of the London market. To call it 'junk' seems a mild way of putting it. Strange to say prices of admission are much higher than either here or in Europe. In Calcutta, for instance, the price of admission in the one good motion picture theater is three rupees for the best seats and three rupees are about a dollar in American money. The average price of admission is one-half of a rupee, which is about sixteen cents in our money. There are no daily changes and the theaters are crowded all the time. It is true the natives get very low wages, but on the other hand it is also true that the purchasing power of money is about three times as great as with us. Food, especially, is very cheap and a nice chicken may be bought for two and three cents. The natives are willing to and indeed they are used to living economically, living on about one-third of their income. The employees of the government and of the railways are over five millions strong and they all have money to spend. The laborers will deny themselves in every way to enjoy the luxury of looking at a motion picture."

Primitive Conditions.

"When you ask me about projection in India all I can answer is that there is no such thing. Why, very frequently it takes a great effort of the eye to see just what is happening on the screen. Real moving picture operators within our meaning of the word are practically unknown in India. When I get back there to work this territory I will immediately establish a school for operators. This will mean an immense saving of films to begin with, because at present the 'junk' does not last any time at all. It would be a blessed thing if the manufacturers of Europe would follow the custom which prevails here. I mean they ought to take the 'junk' out of the market or, better still, never let it get into the market. This will make it all the better for the better class of films which are bound eventually to find their way into India. I am an optimist and I may be wrong, but I am willing to go on record as saying that eventually the market in the Far East will take care of not less than ten prints."

The Motion Picture and the Natives.

"I had several talks with prominent officials in India outlining to them the value of the motion picture as an educator of the natives. I pointed out to them that the loyalty of the natives to the British rule in India would undoubtedly be strengthened if the natives could be made to see the power and the resources of the Empire on the screen. These officials thoroughly agreed with me and I am confident that the British-Indian government will aid any effort to develop the motion picture in India. I want to say in connection with this that the native is eager to learn and has instinctively recognized the screen as his best teacher. The millionaries in all parts of India are doing great good and they, too, recognize the motion picture as their most powerful ally. The possibilities are wonderful but very little has been done so far. The screen speaks a language which all the natives can understand regardless of difference in race religion or language. You know that many of these tribes are still plunged in darkness."

"The Screen vs. the Sacred Bull."

"In many parts of India the condition of the natives is susceptible of great improvement. The superstitious reverence paid to the sacred bull, for instance, and a thousand other degrading superstitions would soon give way before the enlightening influence of the motion picture which would broaden the mental horizon of even the most ignorant. I propose to pay special attention to that part of the motion picture upon my return to India.

"In order to attract the lower castes and to spread enlightenment as far as possible I am going to have special theaters for natives where I propose to make the price of admission as low as four and eight cents. This will bring the motion picture within the reach of the whole vast population of India. They say that China would never have become a republic and would never have progressed as fast as it did but for the motion picture. Whether this is correct or not I know that the native Indian is clever, adaptable and quick to learn and I have no doubt at all that the influence of the motion picture will mark a new era in his mental and moral development. I have delved deeply into conditions in India devoting ten weeks to this work and I do not hesitate to say that India bids fair to develop into fine motion picture country."

A Brief Survey of War-Stricken Europe.

"I came back to Europe," Mr. Williams continued, "by way of Malta where I made connection with Naples and then I went through central Italy, through southern France to Paris, from Paris to London and from London I went to Berlin, where I spent a couple of weeks. In Italy I found that times were hard and money scarce. There is not much kinematographic work being done now in Italy; the people are absolutely engrossed by the war. The sole topic of conversation is the war. From what I have been able to observe it will be a long time before Italy goes back to normal conditions. As for Italy's attitude I do not believe she will change her policy of remaining strictly neutral. Paris is not Paris any more. It is bleeding from many wounds and the sight is painful and distressing. Business is almost paralyzed and the motion picture industry has really come to a standstill there. In London I found the patronage of the theaters excellent; while the city is darkened it is quite possible to get about at night.

"There is great dissatisfaction in England on account of the severe censorship of war news. I do not know how things are in the provinces, except that in some of the larger cities, as for instance in Liverpool and in Leeds, the exhibitors have combined together not to pay more than five pounds miximum for any feature. Features will go in England, but they must be of high quality, the day of the padded film or of the cheap feature is gone forever. The sale of features, 'exclusives' as they are called, has dropped off in England at a rapid rate; where but a year ago twenty prints were disposed of most easily, a sale of five or six is considered good today. In Berlin I found things fairly normal. Most of the big motion picture theaters are running to capacity. From all appearances this European war is going to last for a long time and its ultimate effect on motion picture conditions throughout the world cannot be foretold at this time."

Mr. Williams intends to stay in New York for a week or so and then will go West. He expects to sail from San Francisco for India late in February or early in March.

ROSEMARY THEBY IN "THE HARD ROAD."

A path leading from the life of a young, simple, lovely little girl to that of a woman of the world and then down to the very depths is "The Hard Road," Harry Meyers' new Victor photoplay. Beautiful Rosemary Theby is the heroine and it is difficult to imagine the charming girl in the first scene to be the same as the bedraggled, soggy figure in the final fade-out of the picture. This is the first time Miss Theby has ever played a role of this character.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Cutting Throats.

FRANK F. LATTA sends in the formula for getting along with your house and the other fellow. Writing of the departure from his town of the originator of the "Friend Pass," he adds:

> There is only one way to do business, and stay in the same town, and that is, do it as near right as you can. Talk with the other fellow, he may not be nearly as unscrupulous as you think. Whatever you agree to do, do it, for the truth is mighty and will prevail. If you have no kind word for your competitor, then say nothing, just "saw wood"; watch your own weak points; don't waste your time on what the other fellow is doing or trying to do.

There it all is. Don't start in on the belief that the other fellow is a pirate, a horse thief, a child stealer and a murderer. Don't, the moment that you hear the rumor of another house, raise your service and your "trimmings" to a point where you must lose heavily in the pleasant hope that the other man will try to beat your offering and go broke first, leaving the town to you again. Perhaps the other fellow is like yourself, merely in the business to make money. Perhaps he'll be content to share a decent business with you, instead of trying to run you off your feet. Give him a chance, at any rate. Give him a chance before the fight starts. But don't seek a combination to keep your show below a decent value. Both of you give money's worth. Work together, and you'll both make money, and perhaps the two of you, in combination, can handle a real pirate if one ever does come to town. There are places where the competition is killing, and where the managers are mortal enemies. There are other places where the supposedly rival houses work together even to planning their advertising "get backs." You can use your own judgment as to the better policy, but think it over. Is it better to fight feature night with feature night, or lay low on the other fellow's big night and have him keep out of the way on your nights? The best Exhibitors' League you can belong to is the league between yourself and your competitors. Then you'll be fit to belong to the State and National leagues. All of this has been said time and again and it is going to be said some more. Mr. Latta phrases it so nicely that we let him line out the text.

Those on the inside of the theatrical business realize how bitterly personal has been the fight between the Klaw and Erlanger and Shubert interests. It has not even stopped at talk on the part of the lesser adherents, but business necessity has required them to combine. Why do you wait for business necessity, which is another name for the verge of bankruptcy?

Did It?

Eugene A. Upstill, of the Star theater, Long Pine, Neb., must be psychic. Before we could print the item about his lost program space he started in to use it. When he does run house stuff it is the sort of stuff that makes you feel he is running the house as much in the interests of his patrons as himself, because those interests are identical. Take this recent paragraph:

> Commencing Wednesday our program will consist of 4 reels every night with two full shows. This change has not been made in a day or two days, but I have been at least two or three weeks considering every thing and I am sure the new service will more than please. Yes I have weighed every thing but the price, this I know will by far over balance the old service.

It is not all dressed up with American flags and Chinese lanterns, but it goes right to the spot.

Another Proctor Stunt.

One good turn deserves another and B. A. Holway, of Proctor's Broad Street theater, Newark, follows the Griswold, Troy, N. Y. He pins his faith to the four page program which is printed up in quantities on one side and weekly as needed on the other, a money saving scheme that is not very generally followed. This means that you get but two new pages a week and that the matter on the back page must be kept standing until a new run is needed, but if it is the right sort of house stuff it can very well run from week to week. It's all a question of how you figure and how you work it. This back page stuff is of a sort that builds up by iteration.

At first the program was run for two houses, the vaudeville and the picture house, but after five issues, the stuff was split and since then the house has an issue all it's own; which is a better plan. It is mostly house distribution with enough around the theater to supply the demand but not then forced on the patrons—which is another good idea. The general plan is a cream colored stock with various colored inks, mostly greens, reds and browns. The brown gives the better effect. It runs five columns the regulaton thirteen em width, to which most type machines are set for general work. Using the standard width (13½ ems is also standard) means that rules, reglet and furniture do not have to be specially cut and that the linotype does not have to be set. The layout is excellent, the head faces being well selected as well as the body type, but a mistake is made in trying to print fine screen half tones on an absorbent paper. If you can't get the right screen, don't use the cut and get merely a blotch of ink. Mr. Holway knows type faces and seems, from his comments, to be wise to the game, so it is only fair to suppose that the excellent results are due to his own knowledge rather than to his good fortune in finding the right sort of printer, for the best work is generally obtained only when a man who knows stands on both sides of the stone. He uses a six by nine page but prints straight across the two inside pages. We think he will send samples for a return cover, and he gives an excellent model to follow, both in general layout and matter in type faces.

Plain Rotten.

Earl C. Johnson, of the Princess theater, Memphis, Texas, writes on another matter and incidentally remarks on a condition of affairs that is intolerable. He has a 350 house, running three reels of thirty-day stuff and features for five and ten cents. A block away is another house using six reels from three to four months old, for the same prices. He writes:

> We use no "bally-hoo" man. They are one block up the street and use a man with a megaphone in front and I am giving you a few of the choice statements which he makes each night:
> "Not three, but six reels."
>
> "The only show in the city that can show six reels."
> "Come to the only show in the city where you are never disappointed." (If any of our patrons have ever been disappointed I have never heard of it.)
> "One show in the city that gives you your money's worth, six reels for a dime."
> "Why pay a dime to see three reels, when we show six for same price."
> Do you think those tactics can win out in the long run? I believe that ten cents is not too much to charge for three reels of first-class pictures. When we put on "America" we raised the price to 15 and 25 cents, and you should have heard the megaphone man for the competing house holler.
> Wishing the World, which we could not do without, much success, I beg to remain.

We should be past the days of the bally-hoo, the mechanical piano, the megaphone man, and the cornet and drum orchestra. Such methods are bound to react, but it hurts all business in the meantime.

Mr. Johnson sends some particularly neat newspaper advertisements. Using a stock cut-heading, "Plays and Players," he runs his program for eight days in six point lines, two point leads, days in ten point bold lower case, but not dated as they should be. There is no display matter whatever and the only line rising above ten point is the "The Week at the Princess" in fourteen point. Feature titles are in italic.

The result is one of the neatest advertisements we have seen lately and they get practically the value of white space while using it for type. The reproduction will give an idea of how it is laid out. And, mind you, you can take this into a page loaded down with the blackest kind of job faces and make it stand out just because it is not black. The advertisement shown is two columns wide and six inches deep.

Novel.

The Reel theater, Cleveland, sends in a number of blotters each printed with a "freak" picture of the sort that is run in some magazines as photographic curiosities, or some similar title. Each is accompanied by appropriate text. The cut of a steeple-jack standing on his head on a cupola carries this text:

> This cut shows Prof. La Franc standing on his head on the dome of the California Capitol, 350 feet above the pavement, the wind at the time blowing 20 miles per hour. While in this position he removed all of his outer clothes. This we consider an unwise act, because had he visited the REEL THEATER, East Ninth Street, between Euclid and Prospect, he could have secured a first class upholstered seat for 10 cents and witnessed the famous Paramount Features, with choice music added.

Presumably they obtained second use of some cuts, but they do not explain. If the cuts can be had cheaply, we wish they would tell where, for the freak pictures will hold the attention and even lead one man to show others, and pass the advertisement along. The blotting feature also helps to keep it alive. Others could use the same scheme effectively if really novel pictures can be had. It is this that gives value to the idea, not the mere fact of a half-tone.

They also use a weekly program, a cardboard strip two by five inches, with the program on one side and a pocket calendar or some catchy reading on the other. They seem to manage to get out stuff that will be kept because it is interesting, and by interesting we do not mean the stereotyped "language of flowers" or "strange facts about the Bible," or the rest of the time-hallowed bromides. One issue is a set of questions about Cleveland, one of them being "What is the name of the largest gum factory in Cleveland? What is the name of the gum, and if all of the gum made in one year was in one long stick, how long would it be, and if cut up into packages of five sticks each, how long would it take the young lady at the 'Reel' Candy Store to sell it, providing she sold 50 packages an hour?" There are lots of people foolish enough to try and figure that out.

Here It Is.

Quite some time ago R. W. Buzzell, of the Picture Palace, Pittsfield, Mass., sent us a card that was good for matinee business, only he didn't send it. He said he used it to get the mothers acquainted with the house. The card now proves to be an advertisement of the Palace with a pass on the reverse good for one lady for any week day matinee, except Saturday, for a week, the date being stamped in with a rubber stamp. He said that it worked so well last fall that he intends to use it again "when the weather gets right." Mr. Buzzell says he is the only manager in New England owning his own 24 sheet boards. How about it? He adds that he does not use larger than one sheet in front of the house, and these are in brass frames, glazed. This is altogether good, except that with a wide lobby there can be no objection to a three-sheet on a well-kept board on either side, but the place for big paper is away from the house, not smeared all over the front like a "store trick" or a selling-out fake, where they have to keep the store dark so the stock will not give itself away. The dime museum effect is passe and then some more. Mr. Buzzell sends some post cards to show his display, but we are in bad with the engraver right now for sending down a program on a yellow card, and if we put these on top of that someone else would be writing this department. Any time a photographer tones your prints a yellowish green, instead of a strong black, hit him with something beside a check.

Good Work.

J. Walker McGuiness, of the Orpheum Circuit Company, in charge of houses at Plentywood and Fairview, Mont., and Williston, N. D., writes:

> Having read your department in the Moving Picture World for the past four years, and never before contributing anything, thought I would outline briefly a little advertising stunt we used, which broke records in three of our houses.
> Under separate cover I am mailing you copy of our local paper with full page ad for "The Spoilers." We ran this ad in the paper and then had them run off 4,000 copies, using part of them here and the remainder in our other theaters. We used some of them as to-nighters and folded about 2,500 and mailed them to the people of the different towns, in which we showed the picture.
> We, of course, had other advertising stunts to help boost the picture, but this, I think, did more good than any of them. We used about 400 sheets of paper in the four towns and took considerable space for press notices and cuts in the papers.
> Recently we opened a new theater in Minot, North Dakota, and, although it had always been a 10-cent town for pictures, we improved the quality, fixed the house up in first-class shape, installed two projection machines, raised the price to 15 cents, and are showing to twice the people the other fellows showed to at 10 cents, and to cap the climax, got 25 cents for The Spoilers and showed to more people than has ever attended any picture performance in that city.
> We are publishing a program in Minot and as soon as we get one good enough am going to send it to you for criticism.

Really they have two full pages, for the paper sent also carries a page announcing the publication of Zudora and its showing at the Orpheum. The house page is well displayed and the fatal mistake of using too much type is avoided.

If they'll send the program in before it gets "good enough" perhaps we can help to make it good.

Still at It.

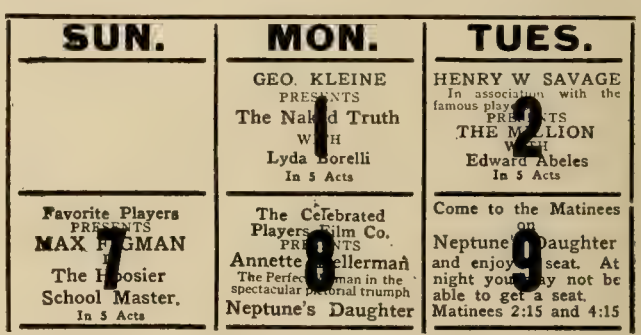
George Editor Carpenter and H. A. Sims, of the American theater, Salt Lake City, are scrapping over the "free coupon" scheme that the American works in connection with the Salt Lake Telegram. Mr. Sims very naturally likes the scheme. He thinks that Mr. Carpenter is "prejudiced." Mr. Carpenter is. He is connected with a feature film company in Salt Lake and his business connection, as well as the success of that business, depend on the prosperity of the theaters in that district. And Mr. Carpenter, like any other thoroughly trained theatrical man, knows perfectly well that the free coupon scheme is vicious and demoralizing and that wherever it has been worked, it has worked harm to the house using it. If Mr. Sims merely hurt himself we do not suppose that Mr. Carpenter should feel much worried, but he is hurting every house in town as much as his own because he is demoralizing the theatergoers and teaching them the dead-head habit, the most pernicious and close-sticking habit a theatergoer can contract. Free advertising in return for morning admissions looks good to some managers, but in retrospect it does not look as good as a closed house in immediate prospect. It is not a bad idea, perhaps, for a week or two, but the coupons in the issue of January 13, were numbered 384, and a coupon to the Pantages theater is only ten numbers under that. And the Utah theater in its own advertisement prints a coupon, a single one being good for a ten-cent reserved seat. It's a shame.

Look Out.

H. R. Weber (who has been out of the department for a long time, though he used to be a regular) writes from the Star theater, Chambersburg, Pa., that a company in Saginaw, Mich., advertises some attractive advertising stuff very cheaply. They can afford to do so, as they do not deliver the goods, according to Mr. Weber. This was some time ago. Though they stung him once, they had the nerve to try it on again, wherefore, he offers the suggestion that if you order it might be well to have the stuff come C. O. D. It is a pretty good plan in dealing with any company you are not certain about.

Another Calendar.

Just as we commented on Ralph Ruffner's calendar comes another style, this time from R. L. Bishop, of the Globe theater, Detroit. Mr.



Bishop makes his regular wall calendar ten by twelve inches. The calendar is for the month with the figures in red superimposed on the advertisement of the day's bill in blue. Above the calendar is a line of small portraits and a little house stuff. This is practicable only where you know your bill well in advance, but where you can print up an entire month, you get something that will go on the wall and stay there.

Please, Mr. Kleine.

Will George Kleine please take notice that a chap down in Kansas is putting a female impersonator in Antony and Cleopatra, at least he advertises that Cleo will be played by "Signor" Gonzales. It's a libel. Outside of that, the Beldorf Booster of Independence, Kans., is a nifty little sheet, well set, well printed and well laid out, except that there should have been a formal weekly program. This manager, name not given, found no trouble in getting a heading type that suited, in picking out the right face of body type and in laying out his stuff. He bought a few stock cuts to help along, and uses them intelligently, uses more house stuff than clips and otherwise makes a "regular" noise, but he let the printer make a man out of the Serpent of the Nile. It is a small Sheet, a four page five and a half, by eight, but it tells a lot and tells it interestingly. When it is handed to you it looks like something to be read, so you read it. And mind you, out there they get real money and two dollars, "top," for a stage play. This is booster number 44. Someone is darned slow in some things. But at least, we'd like to go down on the list for the coming issues.

That's Right.

"The last piece of advertising I sent in was roasted a little, but that is what I sent it in for," is the way George A. Roberts, of the Oneonta theater, Oneonta, N. Y., comes back for more. That's the right idea, only it was not "roasted" but criticized. "Roasting" is unwarranted adverse criticism, which is not the aim of this department. The new matter is a blotter carrying a week's program, not a half-side blotter that goes out of business after the first use, but an all-the-way through blotter that will work for a week and keep the program going. Each day should be dated. Apart from that, there is no need of comment. The top of the blotter names the week, but date every day and then one cannot go wrong.

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticised, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return, stamped envelope is enclosed.

The Script and the P. A. L.

NUMEROUS correspondents who have asked the address of The Script, only to be advised that it was for P. A. L. members only, are now informed that the monthly publication of the Photoplay Author's League may be had on subscription for one dollar a year. The subscriptions should be addressed to the P. A. L., San Fernando Building, Los Angeles. This is an excellent move, and one that we have urged, since it places at the disposal of all interested a helpful publication that is not in any way connected with a school scheme or other graft.

Recently the League, or more correctly Russell E. Smith, working for the League, has scotched the school evil by a campaign both in the paper and (more importantly) with the advertising agents, associations of agents and trade publications for agents and editors. Mr. Smith is a real newspaper man, knowing the game from all angles, and with the League behind him he has taken the only possible means of reducing the scope of the schools by barring the advertisements from the non-professional publications as well, even, from the Motion Picture Story Magazine, the most prominent and the most persistent offender of the lot. Working single handed, but backed by the League, Mr. Smith, on behalf of the League has done more than the rest of us, in combination, have done in the past two years. Here's more power to him and to the League!

In the early days we threw our influence against the League because they were working in the wrong direction. Now that they are working on the right lines, we are glad to give our endorsement to good work. They are not doing work directly beneficial to those who have arrived, but they are deserving of the support of the arrived writers because they are now working unselfishly for the general good and it is only through this work that the League can possibly become more than a labor organization.

The Script's article against the schools cannot help you, but the other letter press is well worth the subscription price.

The change is particularly appropriate now that the Photoplay Author has become the wagging tail of the Home Correspondence School's dog.

Too Much.

Professor Robert Wilson Neal, author of Short Stories in the Making, cuts up another cadaver and finds an organic disease. It is a very common complaint and lots of scripts die from it. Do yours? Listen:

> Here is a splendid example of the way in which to kill a thrill when it promises to be effective. I am basing my comment on the "Film Stories" in the Moving Picture World for January 23, p. 558—the Rex drama "The Measure of a Man."
> The action takes place in the Canadian Northwest. Bob, who has not been much of a man, has let his wife's love lapse; Jim, his friend, has gained it, but without knowing this, he bolts, in order to be true to Bob.
> Bob discovers the facts, fetches Jim back to the woman, and then rushes out to kill himself. But the magnitude of his self-sacrifice renews his wife's love; she "is swept from her feet and rushes from the house" to save and recall her husband. And right here the playwright or the director banged the thrill on the head with an ax, ran over it with a threshing-engine, put it into a 42-centimeter cannon and blew it into kingdom-come, and otherwise committed battery, mayhem, and assassination on it.
> Here we are, all worked up for the final moment of that reconciliation, with the probable moral regeneration of the husband as well as the wife. As she rushes forth, we are beginning to hold our breath for the big moment. And what happens? Does the big moment come? Not on your life. At this point it struck somebody that he could make two thrills grow where only one thrill grew before. So now he makes wifie rush forth—just in time to save Bob from "a would-be Indian murderer." (Was Bob an Indian, or was it a would-be Indian, or a would-be murderer? Well, no matter.)
> And so we have to stop our first thrill halfway, and work up another thrill, with a different fact-basis, and of quite another thrill-type. Do we ever get back thrill number one? We do not. Do we really get the full effect of thrill number two? We do not, because we can't shift over from the one kind to the other kind at such short notice—and without cause.
> And that's one grand little way to kill thrills.

Selig.

John F. Prybil is William N. Selig's personal representative. Mr. Selig has the last say on scripts, but Mr. Prybil is the second in command. His suggestions, as here set forth, apply not only to Selig, but in a general way, apart from the animal stuff and the first submission, to all companies. He writes:

> It may appear a small item to the writer but when a company receives hundreds of scripts daily, it amounts to a good big item of expense if self-addressed and stamped envelopes are not enclosed with manuscripts. Send along a self-addressed and stamped envelope with every manuscript.
> Do not enclose a long personal letter to the editor with your pictureplay plot. Don't tell him all your troubles, your ambitions and your hopes. He cannot act as a guide, counsellor and friend to thousands and he has troubles, hopes and ambitions of his own.
> Why write to the editor of a film company outlining the great things you have done and hope to do? Why tell him of the ideas you have in mind and enter into a lengthy and useless correspondence with a busy man? Why not write all these ideas in scenario form and submit them? The proof of the pudding is the eating thereof.
> The Selig Polyscope Company will not consider scripts not typewritten; and will consider only those stories that have not first been submitted elsewhere; we pay highest market prices for available material, and think first readings are due because of that fact alone. We endeavor to give prompt acceptances or rejections.
> It is useless to send stories to the Selig Company unless you are confident they contain exceptionaly good plots and business. In order to compete with the noted fiction stars and photoplay writers who submit primarily to this company, all stories must be above the average to gain serious consideration.
> The Selig Company is in the market for a wide range of stories, but the stereotyped stuff is not wanted. Good single and multiple reel Westerns, society dramas and comedies, good single and multiple reel stories having to do with wild animals; refined comedy having real plot, all are gladly read and liberal payment made when found available.
> The wild animal stories are highly desirable, but logical and constant plot and action is essential. Many authors attempting to write plots about wild animals make the mistake of having them perform all sorts of impossible tricks. In the great Selig Jungle-Zoo, recently completed at Los Angeles, there will be found lions, tigers, bears, Pumas, monkeys, wolves, hyneas, coyotes, panthers, elephants, camels, in fact a very wide variety of wild animal life. Unusual stories written around these animals are acceptable.
> All manuscripts should be addressed to the Selig Polyscope Co., 20 East Randolph street, Manuscript Department, Chicogo, Ill.

Another One.

Here's another of "them there those." He writes: "I am a reader of the 'Motion' Picture World, and find it interesting and helpful." He also writes: "Is there any specific form in which photoplays should be prepared?"

There is the "average author" who wonders why he never gets ahead and doesn't realize that it is because he cannot or will not think. He reads the "Motion" Picture World. If he could read he would find about two hundred times in each issue that it is the "Moving" and not the "Motion" Picture World. He can read, but he is stone blind, so it is no wonder that the articles giving the examples of written scenes should not have told him that there is a specific form.

He doesn't realize that he is not as intelligent as an observant child of twelve. He reads, but gains nothing from the reading because he does not understand what he reads. And he is the sort of chap who writes the bromidic stuff and then claims the producers steal it from him, because he has read the stories and forgotten that he has read the stuff already.

There is no hope—in photoplay or otherwise—for the man who reads merely with his eyes and not with his brain.

"Spec" on Changes.

We are always glad to get a line from Frank E. Woods, for Spec knows what he is talking about. Just at the moment he is talking about changing scripts, and writes:

> I agree with you partly, and disagree in other respects, regarding directors changing scripts. It all depends on the script and the director. I believe, eventually, in the future the best picture production will be by the script writer producing or supervising his own production. I do not believe that the best results will ever come from the script writer setting down in detail the action as he would like to see it, and then never seeing the production when it is being put on.
> In the production of large feature subjects it would be quite possible and should be the rule, to have the author present when the production is being made, but, as you know, in making small pictures of one or two reels this would be out of the question, except in rare instances.
> In our case our best directors are script writers—as good as any in the business—and a considerable proportion of their stories are their own, worked out with my assistance and approval.
> Personally, I have never yet found an outside script that could be put on exactly as written, for the reason that conditions never conform to the requirements of the story. The people available for the cast; the locations; the sets; the time required for production, and too often the expense entailed by following the script literally, are obstacles which have always prevented strict adherence to a script, no matter how good it might be.

And once we change a script there are endless other changes necessary to harmonize with the first change, like knocking one pin down in a frame of ten pins.

However, there is much to be said on both sides of this question.

As Spec says, there is much to be said on both sides of the question. He is writing from the present point of view of an actual editor of productions. We don't believe that he is speaking literally when he says he never saw a script from the outside that did not need to be changed. We know a number of strictly outside writers who can do precisely that, but they are so few that we'll sit close and hold hands with Spec on the general proposition that almost all scripts from the outside must be changed to make them practicable.

But the bulk of our quarrel is not with a company whose directors are also qualified script writers, and here we take in a broader horizon than Spec. A man who can write scripts is generally competent to make such changes as may be needed and keep the spirit of the author's work. We are talking mostly of the four-flushing faker who says he can write scripts when he knows no more of any form of literary composition than the jackass knows of algebra. We have far too many men who say and who probably think that they are writers as well as directors, and it is this class of man who has a mania for changing everything he touches until it takes on the cold, colorless form of all his work. He thinks only along a certain line and every script he makes is tortured and twisted until it conforms to that fixed idea: the only one the man can see. As Spec suggests one change necessitates another and another, until the reconstruction is practically the same drab rot the producer has made every week of his photoplay experience. This type of man should not be permitted to make the slightest alterations in a script. He should be given a play to produce and should be made to produce that play and not what he thinks that play should be. Where a man has literary skill and intelligence, he can adapt his mind to the thoughts of others and make the necessary alterations without robbing the script of its individuality, and the better the man, the fewer actual changes he will make. His work will be directed more to bringing out the author's idea and making it clear than to changing the story itself.

And more important is Spec's belief that in the matter of big stories the author should help the producer. This is precisely the stand that Bannister Merwin takes. There is sound reason behind it.

The difference between the fiction story of the trained author and the work of the novice is largely a matter of style. The clever twist of a phrase, the fluent wording of a sentence marks the master from the beginner. It is not so much the story as the way the story is told. In photoplay the literary style has no place. It cannot be conveyed to the screen. But in default of the style, as Mr. Merwin has pointed out, comes characterization, and this can, in part, be conveyed to the director through the amplified script, but can be fully attained only through the collaboration of the director, author and editor. Mr. Merwin goes even further and sugests the free lance director who will write and produce a script for any studio desiring his services.

We believe that some minor changes are generally necessary to suit a script to a particular studio. We believe further that this matter of changing scripts has been and still is being carried to excess. We believe that it is one of the curses of the business, because it robs scripts of their individual touches and makes all of the product of a director or studio too much alike.

The time is coming when something more than the bare idea must be taken from the outside contributor, and the free lance writer must then be prepared to offer scripts with personality.

Brain Fag.

One of the real people writes:

I have had a most unusual and humiliating experience. Early in September my brain died. It may have been on account of the big increase in my regular work about then. Every night I went to bed exhausted and got up worn and stale. When I sat at the machine, my imagination bogged down and my stuff was simply rotten. Only in the last few weeks have I been able to get back my old stride.

Of course, it is nothing unusual for a fellow's brain to die. But it is unusual for it to stay dead so long. I have been ashamed that I could not put out good stuff regularly. But, say—now that it is coming back, I feel much stronger than before. I hope that it lasts. The story I am working on now is head and shoulders above anything I have yet done.

The important part of this letter is that, after the scare, the author is turning out his best story. That tells the whole tale. He was tired and overworked. The brain went to sleep through sheer weariness, but being the right sort of brain, it woke up refreshed and better able than ever to do good work. Don't get scared if now and then you dry up, particularly after a hard run of work. Find out what best rests and refreshes your imagination and take the rest.

"Whaddyemean?"

At this late day a lady writes:

Will you please explain in a forthcoming number of the Moving Picture World just what you mean by "plotting"? Do you mean to write out the idea first in the common or garden variety of prose and then put it into dramatic form, after it has been sufficiently elaborated?

To me ideas comes in pictures, that is, I see or conceive an idea in action, in one or more scenes, just as on the screen, and then work forward or backward from it, as the case may be. I never write any synopsis until after the script is finished, for I don't know what is going to be in it until then.

What we mean by plotting, dear lady, is plotting. What plotting means is getting a plot. What getting a plot means is getting something that is more than incident. It doesn't matter how you get it, whether you paint it on the wall or write it down or simply keep it in your head. What we mean by plotting is getting a plot; something that will make a story that is a real story and not another one of "those things." It can be written in common or garden prose, just like you say, or done into action, or telephoned to the next town to a friend, but get an idea, get the idea just right, and you will have plotted. If the idea comes to you in pictures you've done more than plot, you have visualized, which is the second step, and you can work forward or backward or sideways or straight up in the air from the germ and still have a plot, but a lady who can visualize a plot should not have to ask what "plotting" is. She should know.

Few real writers ever do fix up a synopsis until the work is done, because they never know what the story is going to be. Looks to us that the lady is so far ahead of herself that she is lost. It doesn't matter how you do your plotting, so long as you get a plot, but if you can see it in pictures, you are thrice blessed.

Details of Sets.

One of the helpful editors recently raised an interesting point. He wants writers to have a clear idea of a set in their minds and then tell the director the essential details of a setting that, for any reason, must conform to the action. Now this does not mean that a lengthy and exhaustive explanation must be used for each scene, but that if a certain arrangement of doors or windows is necessary, the author carry in mind the exact diagram of the stage and tell the director the essentials. The editor's own illustration shows precisely what is meant:

Here's the point in a nutshell. If the set is unusual, or important business is to be registered in different locations in the same set, let them give an illuminating description of it at the point where the set is first introduced. Ordinarily the specification:

SCENE 1. Living room in Harrison's home would be sufficient. But suppose SCENE 20 in the same set is to read as follows:

"Harrison confers with Wallace. Mary listens at the curtains in hall. Jane is seen standing behind curtains to dining room. The argument between Harrison and Wallace becomes heated."

SCENE 21. Close-up of curtains in hall. Mary listening in amazement.

SCENE 22. Close-up of curtains at dining room. Jane listening. She knows Mary is in the hall and should not hear the men's conversation. How can she stop them? She determines to shut off the lights. She reaches through curtains.

SCENE 23. The living room. Wallace and Harrison talking heatedly. Mary listening at hall curtains. Jane's arm is seen to slip through dining room curtains and reach for electric switch.

SCENE 24. Living room. Close-up of electric switch. Jane's hand reaches the switch and turns it.

The director should have a clear idea of this set before he begins to read these details. Therefore we should have this:

SCENE 1. Living room in Harrison's home. On right is curtained doorway to hall. In background is curtained doorway to dining room. Library table and chairs in foreground. Electric switch near dining room door.

The experienced author knows that only an angle of a room can be shown.

The above only runs four lines of typewriting, but it tells the director all he needs to know, and gives him a clear idea of how to lay out his diagram. Then, when he comes to the action, instead of having to stop and puzzle out whether or not it can be done, he knows that it can, because he has the scene before him.

But remember that this is only for really essential sets, and similar detail is not needed for every set.

Interests.

"Heart interest" and "love interest" are two different things. Any darned fool can have them marry and live happily ever after, but heart interest requires a workman to handle it.

Some Keystones.

When we spoke of new Keystones recently we meant the new style stuff, not all new Keystones. Now and then they make a great picture and now and then they make a Home Breakers and still manage to live. If you saw that alleged comedy please do not regard that as "new."

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles have been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

The first seventy-four questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form. They may be obtained by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy. You may be surprised at the number of questions you cannot answer without a lot of study. Canadians should send P. O. M. O., or coin only.

Question No. 73.

Best answer will be published, and the names of others sending in replies of excellence will appear in the Roll of Honor. Theater managers looking for high-class men will do well to watch the Roll of Honor.

Explain, in plain, understandable terms, the action of a transformer. What purpose does it serve? One transformer may deliver a 50 volt, another a 1000 volt secondary, both taking the same supply. How is this? Explain fully. What is the approximate efficiency of a well designed and constructed transformer? Where should an economizer be located, and what precautions must be observed in locating it? If an economizer become so hot you could not lay your hand on it, what would you conclude? Suppose you connected the secondary of your economizer to the 110 volt line by mistake; approximately, what would the voltage at the arc be?

Roll of Honor on Question No. 67.

Question 67 brought out a surprising assortment of ideas with regard to semi-reflecting screens. None of the answers could be stretched enough to make them anywhere near correct on all points. However, due to the excellence of the efforts, I have concluded to place the following on the Roll of Honor: Joseph H. M. Smith, Fort Worth, Texas; G. D. Bullock, Gallup, New Mexico, who accompanied his answer by an exceedingly well made sketch—among the best ever sent to the department. I am really sorry I cannot use it, but, while correct enough, still it does not make the idea very clear; Horace D. Good, Reading, Pennsylvania; J. I. Roberts, Nashville, Tenn.; Harry W. Seward, Reading, Pennsylvania; Joe G. Maddox, Spokane, Washington; Harry Grant, Placerville, California, and A. W. Hornby, Port Hope, Ontario, Canada.

Due to the fact that none of the replies were suited for publication I am compelled to answer Question 67 myself.

Answer to Question No. 67.

By F. H. Richardson, New York City.

The Question:

What is the real advantage of the semi-reflecting screen as against the non-reflecting type, and what, if any, are the disadvantages? Can you locate your projection lens anywhere else than precisely level with, and central, sidewise with the screen and have a picture without distortion? Explain fully. What is the effect of viewing a picture at a wide side angle, and why is it so? Where is that one who sees least distortion in the picture seated.

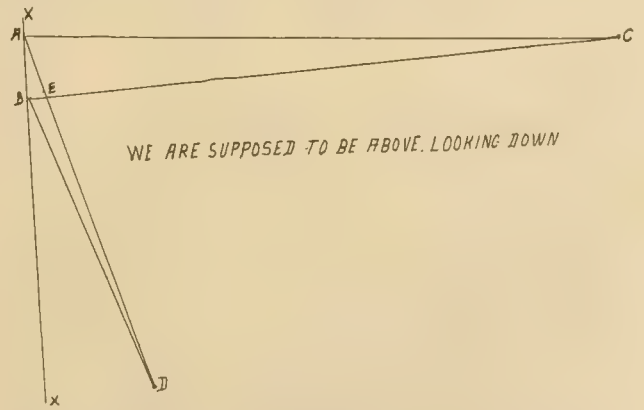
The Answer:

Strictly speaking, there are three possible advantages in the semi-reflecting type of screen, viz.: first and greatest, it enables the operator to secure a given screen brilliancy with less current consumption; therefore, a picture of given brilliancy may be projected upon a semi-reflecting surface more cheaply than on a "dead" surface, such as cloth, plaster, calcimine, or paint; second, it makes possible the brilliant illumination of a larger picture than could be accomplished with the non-reflecting type of screen; third, the surface of the semi-reflecting screen is, as a general proposition, more durable than that of the non-reflecting. Where glass is employed the surface is practically, barring highly improbable breakage through accident, to all intents and purposes, indestructible.

Its disadvantages are: first, in the case of the glass screen (a) its initial high cost; (b) its weight; (c) its size, which renders shipment and installation a somewhat difficult operation; (d) the difficulty of securing a surface sufficiently rough to diffuse the light to an extent that will enable the picture to be viewed at close range without considerable loss in definition, and viewed at sharp side angle as in an extremely wide house. Against the, however, are the following advantages: (a) it is the most brilliant projection surface known, utilizing a greater percentage of the light than any other, and possessing the peculiarity that the further you are from the screen (within reason, of course) the more brilliant the picture appears; (b) the fact that it gives a whiter, purer illumination of the picture than any other surface known; (c) the fact that once installed, barring very improbable breakage through accident, the surface is almost indestructible.

Second: The disadvantages of the carefully and scientifically made modern metallic surface screens are few, the chief one being the impartation of a somewhat cold metallic tone to the picture, but this, however, may be, and has been, to a large degree, offset and overcome by the scarcely perceptible tinting of the surface. The length of life can scarcely be called a disadvantage, because several manufacturers now guarantee their screen surfaces for a period of five years. Taking everything into consideration, I do not view the modern metallic screen surface (always assuming that it be properly, carefully and scientifically prepared by manufacturers who understand their business) as having any decided disadvantages. The advantages as against the non-reflecting type are greater durability and the ability to project an equally brilliant picture with less amperage. These surfaces, of course, cost more than the cloth screen, but, on the other hand, they last a great many times longer; therefore, the score on that point is, I think, about even. In closing this part of the answer I might add, however, that, viewed purely from the artistic standpoint, there is, in my judgment, no screen which surpasses the perfectly white one made of muslin of good quality.

No, the projection lens cannot be located anywhere except central up and down and sidewise with the center of the screen without distortion, but, as a matter of fact, the lens may be placed out of center with the screen a considerable distance vertically without the effect being noticeable to the average person, and, provided care be used in the installation, there may be a considerable drop in the projection without the distortion being seriously objectionable. I think a drop of one foot in ten would hardly be noticed, unless the picture be a very large one. I doubt if the average person would notice a drop of one foot in eight, unless the picture be a large one, although the keystone effect is then quite perceptible, but, as a matter of fact, audiences have become accustomed to keystone effect, and rather expect it than otherwise. Merely answering the question, however, I would be obliged to say no. Distortion is present when the lens is placed out of center of the screen by reason of the fact that the instant this occurs the light rays must travel farther to reach one side, or the bottom or top of the screen than the other side or the bottom or top, and, since the rays are continuously spreading as they travel, this must, perforce, produce distortion.



The effect of viewing a picture at a wide side angle is illustrated in the sketch, in which X-X is the screen, A-B an object thereon, and C-D the eye of a spectator located in different positions with relation to the screen. At C the eye views the object, say, a man or woman, at its full width A-B, but from D it only gets the effect of width equal to the distance B-E; therefore, the object looks very narrow or "thin." Another effect is that the object is made to appear exceedingly tall, but this, I believe, is in the nature of an illusion, due to the fact that a very thin object always appears taller than it is, particularly if it be something that we are accustomed to see of standard height, but very much wider.

The one who sees the least distortion in the picture will be the one seated nearest to the optical axis of the projection light ray, in this case nearest to the lens; therefore, the operator is usually the man who gets the best view of the picture—provided, of course, the manager has given him a regular observation port, instead of a knot-hole to look through.

From Lewiston, Montana.

Wm. Heinecke, Lewiston, Montana, winds up a long letter with the following:

> If I did not have the department every week I would be lost. You were wrong in your reply to Bird Island. The heat from the radiator certainly does affect the light beam. (I have found that all out and acknowledged the corn.—Ed.) With regard to film damage, you are right; it is the lower sprocket that does it. My Powers Six A and 1912 Motiograph both perform the same caper. The damage to the film is not serious, but the sprocket tooth, nevertheless, leaves its mark, and, therefore, the trouble should be eliminated. The difficulty is in the lack of proper adjustment of the idler. With regard to Roy Goggin, page 367, January 16th issue, I wish you would put the name of the town in print, and if it looks good I will go there, open a show and give Goggin twenty-three dollars to start in on.

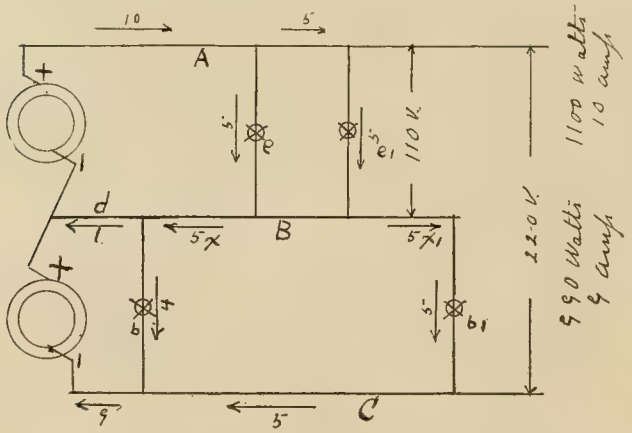
Friend Heinecke arrived a little late, but at least he arrived. We had located both the troubles he speaks of before his letter was received. He is correct in both instances. As to Goggin, why, I think you are late there, too, because Brother Goggin has been offered a good position by another manager, and I presume has accepted it.

Expects to Hear Something Drop.

John Solar, Watertown, New York, starts off with the following announcement: "I am about to criticise some of the articles recently published in the department." But he tones this awful threat down by saying that he expects, as a consequence, to hear something drop good and hard. He then proceeds

First: With regard to the reply to second part of Question 58. In saying "a complete conduit system must have good electrical connections between all joints of all parts of the system and the wire system must be grounded." This is an error, for the wire may or may not be grounded, but, if so, it is grounded directly from the secondary of the transformer supplying the service. As the question related to conduit only, and the conduit system must be grounded, the reply should have so stated. (Right you are. The thing is a typographical error. The word "wire" should have been "whole." I had not noticed it myself. I haven't the original manuscript now, but I venture to say it was written "whole" instead of "wire." On this part of the kick you are hereto given license to go up head. Ed.)

Second: In January 2nd issue, under heading, "Interesting," Friend James says 'taint no such thing. I say 'tis, too, and then I go on and say 'taint, either. You are all wrong. In considering the so-called neutral wire, from his point of view, I will attempt to prove by enclosed diagram that it is both positive and negative at the same time, or, in other words, the current flows in both directions at the same time, as shown at X-X1.



I contend that the so-called neutral wire is not at any time negative. The definition for the word negative is "implying absence," in this case absence of E.M.F. The neutral wire has at all times an E.M.F. impressed upon it equal to one-half (or nearly) of that between the two outside wires, and is always positive to one of the circuits. From diagram B is positive to the circuit B.C., and A is positive to A.B., to which B is neutral. The voltage of the system divides itself in direct proportion to the resistance in the system, therefore one-half the voltage impressed upon A is used to force 10 amperes through the resistance E-E, and the other half is impressed upon B, in this case 110 volts. The resistance in B-B is greater than that in E-E, and will only allow 9 amperes to pass, leaving 1 ampere, as shown at D, which returns to the generator on the neutral. But we must remember that the condition at D is entirely different than that at C, the true negative wire. One hundred and ten volts' pressure is required to force this 1 ampere back through the generator pressure, or a resistance of 110 ohms. (110 v x 1 amp.=110 ohms.). This is similar to any other device having a resistance of 110 ohms. connected between B and C, with this difference: If the device is connected between B and C the pressure is dissipated at the device, whereas if returned to the generator on the neutral, at generator pressure, is not dissipated or lost. (Well, I dunno about that, Brother Solar. That is a proposition that might be open to considerable argument. Ed.) We are to consider a positive wire as one over which current is flowing under pressure, and one from which power or energy may be taken. (Nope. You are wrong. Power cannot be taken from the positive wire. It can only be taken by connecting a positive and negative wire in such manner that power will be developed in overcoming resistance. Ed.) A negative wire is one over which current is flowing under no pressure (Hum! ? ? ? ? Ed.), or only that pressure required to force it through the resistance of the wire on which it is flowing. We cannot consider a wire as being negative simply because current is flowing over it back to the generator. If so, the whole circuit would be considered negative, as the current begins to flow back to the generator instantly upon leaving it. From the above we can readily see (Oh, do we? Ed.) that the dividing point between the positive and negative sides of a circuit is that point where the E.M.F. is entirely exhausted, or nearly so at B-B.

Well, Brother Solar, I am not going to do the dropping, but I guess you'll hear the drop all right when some of the fans land on you. According to my view of the matter, while you have put up a very ingenious argument, still it has some very holey holes in it. In order to really deal with this matter properly we would have to go very deeply into highly technical things, and let me say right now that I do not believe there is any point in the electrical system where the voltage is exhausted, or, in other words, where there is no E.M.F. I have printed the latter part of your letter, together with the diagram, because it is really interesting to follow through your line of argument, but I nevertheless don't at all agree with you. As to the current flowing in both directions, of course, in one way you are correct, but that is not what Brother James meant. What he meant, and what I meant was that if the overload were on the generator to which the neutral is positive, then it would be positive, and vice versa, and I still maintain that the neutral cannot be both positive and negative at the same time. However, I will leave this argument where it is, and invite our readers to continue it. As to your solution of the "Queer Proposition," it won't work, because there was no frame to the blooming lamphouse. The first thing that I looked for was, as I said, magnetic action, and there was none.

He Overcame It.

U. B. Goodlatte, Passaic, New Jersey, says:

Referring to F. H. Daly's trouble, January 16th issue, with regard to placing a heater in the center aisle, I had the same thing happen where there is a hot air furnace in the church with the main heat coming up in the center aisle, and you certainly can see the heat effect in the picture. The way I overcame it was to close the register just before the show commenced and open it again immediately after the show is over. The side register will usually keep the building warm for a few hours when the show is on if the house is warm before the show begins.

Many thanks, Brother Goodlatte, but I have an article dealing specially with this proposition which will be published very soon.

Like Thousands of Others.

I. B. Gardner, Coxsackie, New York, orders a Handbook, and says:

I passed along the line through the ticket seller, operator's-helper, and operator's position, and have finally reached the dizzy height of owner and manager of my own house, with good patronage and no serious troubles. Show the latest serials and best of features. Want to improve and know the Handbook will help me along in the projection end, which is, after all, the most important part. I am a constant reader of the department, as are also thousands of others you don't hear from. In closing let me thank you for the great assistance we get through it.

For your wishes and words of encouragement accept our thanks. We believe firmly the department contains pretty reasonably good dope, and that the Moving Picture World is about the swellest thing we know of, taken as a whole; that is, of course, merely our individual idea, and it makes us feel good to have others say: Yep, we think so too!

Trouble Doctor.

A. G. Peterson, Jamestown, New York, says:

I have one of your latest Handbooks, and it is "there with the goods." As you seem to be the doctor, I ask a prescription. Am using Powers Six equipment; three-wing shutter; distance of projection, 60 feet. Distance between aperture and lens, 4 inches. Shutter has a 4¾-inch flicker blade and I have some flicker. Is it the right size? If not, what size should it be? Also there is a bad rattle as the film is pulled down by the intermittent sprocket. The intermittent sprocket is not defective. Would the new apron and roller put out by the Powers people remedy the trouble?

I do not know anything about the "new apron and roller." If the Powers Company has put one out, they have not done us the distinguished honor of calling our attention to that fact. Take your screw driver and a light hammer and bend the ears of the apron which carries the rollers slightly backwards, meaning by "backwards," towards the condenser. First, however, be sure that the film seats between the rollers. If it does not then spread the rollers farther apart by placing the point of the screw driver against them and tapping sharply. If the film seats between the flanges of the rollers and bending the ears towards the condenser does not stop the trouble, then try bending it the other way, though, I am pretty sure you will find that the rollers are too far back—towards the screen, and that it is the seat of the trouble. As to the shutter, that is something else again. I should think you would have about a 5½ or 6-inch e. f. objective, and for that objective I believe your shutter blade is wider than necessary. Remove the blade from the hub and cut a stiff paste-board pattern of it; put this paste-board pattern on in place of the regular shutter and keep trimming off the main blade until you get travel ghost, cutting $^1/_{16}$ of an inch off the side of the blade each time. When you begin to get travel ghost your shutter is then a little too narrow, and, leaving it just a trifle wider than the paste-board pattern, you can trim the metal shutter down. If the shutter blade is wider than necessary, it has a tendency to produce flicker, yes.

New and Interesting Invention.

Mr. A. J. Stone is the inventor of a new and very interesting device which he has presented to the projection department for examination and description. Mr. Stone is associated in this matter with Mr. M. Suckno, both of Albany, N. Y.

Briefly, the invention of Mr. Stone follows, so far as results are concerned, somewhat along the line of the daylight picture proposition which was presented to New York some years ago, and thoroughly demonstrated at the New York Roof Garden, but for some reason was allowed to drop.

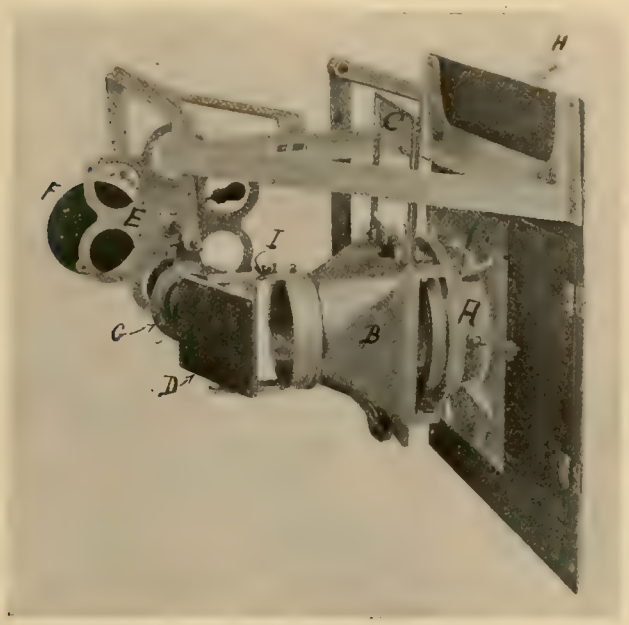


Fig. 1.

Mr. Stone's invention, however, only follows the former idea in a general way. His method of accomplishing the result is entirely different, and very much more practical from the theater manager's point of view. Utilizing what is at present waste light from the projection arc, Mr. Stone projects a band of light around the picture. This band may be of any desired color, or the colors may be changed at will; also stereopticon slides may be utilized, and the combinations thus made possible are almost without number.

The editor witnessed the demonstration at the New York Roof Garden, and he is prepared to make the positive assertion that a band of light projected around the picture apparently does have the effect of adding perspective, and also of increasing the value of the color tones of the picture. In other words, it, to a certain extent, and a very considerable extent too, has the effect of making practical the presentation of first-class projection in a very light auditorium.

Mr. Stone's method of accomplishing this is decidedly unique. He places on the left hand side of the lamphouse, immediately opposite the arc, a second set of condensers, A, Fig. 1, precisely like the set employed in front of the regular condenser. Outside these condensers is a slide carrier, C, Fig. 1, which stands on end and is contained in an aluminum hood, B, Fig. 1, very similar in form to the hood which carries the ordinary slide carrier in front of the regular condenser. This is not all the story with relation to the slide carrier, however, because, between the condenser and the carrier is a metal division, not shown in the illustration, which blocks out all the light except a band approximately ⅛ inch wide, of the same shape and relative proportion as the projection machine aperture. The slide carrier is operated by lever, H, Fig. 1, which sets immediately above the front condenser casing, and within convenient reach of the operator. It is only for the purpose of using slides when it is desired to project a border, composed of the stars and stripes of the American flag, or any other suitable design.

In front of the hood, or cone of this side condenser is a mirror, D, Fig. 1, the relation of which to the condenser is controlled by screw I, Fig. 1, ordinarily the angle of the mirror to the lens being approximately 45 degrees. This mirror reflects the light beam into an ordinary stereopticon lens, G. Placed in front of the stereopticon lens is color wheel E, containing six compartments, and in front of this is a dowser, F.

This whole contrivance is held to the lamphouse by a metal frame and bolts. It all sounds rather complicated but is, in fact, very simple.

The general appearance of the device is illustrated in Fig. 2, and a general view of the whole thing is presented at Fig. 3.

The only possible objection I can see to its adoption, always assuming results are all Mr. Stone claims, is the fact that the apparatus projects something like 16 inches on the left side of the lamphouse which, in some instances, might require the spacing of the projection machines a little farther apart, or else cause the operator considerable inconvenience. However, this is a minor matter, and the apparatus does not project much farther out than the extension rods on the Powers table, so that this feature need not be any serious bar.

Mr. Stone intends to make a demonstration of his device here in New York City in the immediate future, and the result of this demonstration will be duly chronicled. We hope and trust it will be all Mr. Stone expects. More than this I would not care to say at the present time.

Messrs. Stone and Suckno propose to provide suitable frames, that is to say, stereopticon slides which will project a band having somewhat the effect of a picture frame. The American flag was only mentioned as one possible instance of an available slide for this purpose, though such a band would, of course, be only appropriate on patriotic subjects.

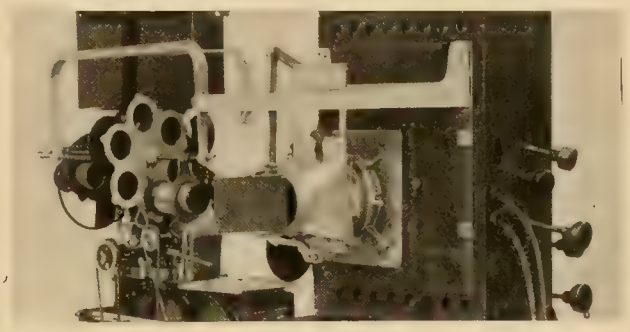

Fig. 2.

Typographical Error.

Oscar G. Whiting, New Haven, Connecticut, sets forth his version of the film damage matter, and then says:

> On page 367, January 16th issue, under heading, "Lenses," how can you place two 7½ condensing lenses "13¾ inches from center of the condenser combination"? Typographical error, I suppose.
> Yes, you are right. It should have read: "13¾ inches from center of condenser combination to aperture." As to the film damage matter, why we have discovered the seat of the trouble, and the matter is now up to the manufacturers, who have been duly notified of the reason therefore and requested to remedy the trouble.

To Repair Rewinder.

Fairbanks, Alaska, says:

Business here is fair at both houses. We only have No. 8 wire from the pole to the theater. We tested the voltage at the main house switchboard and got 115 volts, but when I struck an arc it dropped to 102, so I wanted to have the lines changed, but there was nothing doing—"it was good enough," but I am still talking about it. Well, I have a new wrinkle. Used to have a lot of trouble with the gears on my Edison rewinder. The hole would wear so that the pinion and small gear became loose and the large gear would climb, and the thing would wear out in almost no time. I tapped a 3/16-inch hole in the end of the rewinder and inserted a 3/16-inch stove bolt and set the bolt up against the pinion, using the nut on the outside as a lock nut. Have had no trouble since. I would answer some of the questions, but it takes five or six weeks for mail to come one way, so I am afraid that would be a little late.

I have no Edison rewinder in the office, so I don't quite "get you," but I publish the drawing as it is, and suppose those with Edison rewinders will understand. As to the questions, why, you can get one of the booklets and send your answers in six months ahead of time if you want to. Incidentally, the new book of questions will be out as soon as I can get them ready, probably about the time the others are exhausted. As to the feeders, why, that much drop in voltage is disgraceful. Of course, the loss is at the expense of the light company, but it is some loss. It may not all be in your feed wires, however. Possibly the street mains are also overloaded. In any event those wires responsible ought to be replaced with larger ones. By the way, if it is A.C. it may be in the transformer as well as the No. 8 wires. I suppose, however, it is D.C.

Union Procedure.

From a certain state in the west comes the following:

I am owner of a moving picture theater and want a little information, for which find enclosed the necessary fee for personal reply. On February 1st the new union wage scale of $25.00 a week goes into effect. Now, I am perfectly willing to be fair to the union if they are willing to be fair to me, but I certainly would hate to pay the operator I now have the sum of $25.00 a week. If I pay that price I want a man who is worth it. I don't know much about the union, and cannot seem to find out much, therefore am writing you. From what I can gather I have to use this man, or any other man the union sends me, whether he suits or not. Please tell me if this is correct or not. Have I no rights in the matter? Can I get a union operator from another city? Do I have to supply motors to the operator? And when one-speed motors are installed cannot a union operator turn by hand if you want him to? The faults of my present operator are: (a) he reads in the operating room, or anyway when you enter you can usually see something that looks like a book go over behind something; (b) he smokes on duty; (c) the machines are cleaned about twice a year when I don't clean them myself; (d) I run new stuff, but sometimes a misframe happens and they will run from a few seconds to as high as a minute. I usually have to call his attention to it by pounding on the wall; (e) the clear, white light is often on the screen at the end of the picture. We have two machines, yet the light flashes on the screen, and often there is quite a little wait between reels; (f) he has many callers in the operating room, but after all the main fault is that the pictures are run at one single rate of speed from beginning to end, which spoils the best effect of many of them, and towards the end of the evening they are either run too fast or too slow so as to come out even at 10.30. Now, do you think an operator of that kind is any good? Wouldn't you want a good operator if you were paying $25.00 a week? Please tell me what I can do and what I can't do? Can an owner run his own machines?

Here is a big question, or a series of them. I have answered by mail, but it is too important a matter to stop there. No, I don't think that kind of operator is worth $25.00 a week. The only thing he merits is instant discharge. If your statements are true he is not an operator, or even a good imitation of one. If he is a member of the union he is a disgrace to the organization, a disgrace to the business and to himself. I don't know what you mean by installing "one-speed" motors. Such a motor is not fit to be used for driving a projector. It would be an outrage on the public and on the producers of films to run a projection machine with a one-speed motor, unless it is proposed, as is quite possible of accomplishment, to govern the speed of the projector by a fly wheel brake. Yes, you most decidedly have the right to demand that your machines be run by hand, but, on the other hand, operators, either as individuals or as a body, have an undoubted right to refuse to work where hand-driven machines are used. You, however, have the right to absolutely demand that the speed of the projector, whether hand or motor driven, be governed in such way so as to bring out the best action in the film, and to instantly discharge any operator who refuses to comply with your orders in this respect; moreover, if any union undertakes to uphold its members in such refusal it is unworthy of any consideration whatever.

Union rules are necessarily more or less arbitrary in some respects. No, you are not, under union rules, allowed to run your own machine, except you are a member of the union. The trouble is that when the union did concede this right many managers claimed to be running their own machines, whereas they really had someone else do it, usually a callow youth who was paid about eight dollars a week. This child or cheap man did the actual operating, although the owner posed as "operator," and this was manifestly unfair and very bad practice. That is the reason for that law. You are not allowed to send to another town for an operator, except by the consent of the union. If you do so the union can refuse to receive the transfer of the man or to allow him to work within their jurisdiction. There is also a very excellent reason behind this seemingly arbitrary rule. What I would suggest is this. Without letting anybody know, some evening get hold of the business agent of the union, also, if possible, the president, and, still without letting anybody know, take them into your theater, sit down with them, and point out the faults in the projection, and then take them up to the operating room and show them the condition of things. Having done this, assuming the faults you complain of are found, ask them if they think it is a square proposition to ask you to pay the union scale for that kind of work. If they are fair-minded men that will settle it. As to callers in the operating room, why do you allow it? Your own statements of the condition in your operating room are in themselves proof positive that there is big need for better men in your city, and to get better men I guess you will have to pay more money. That is usually the case. You cannot purchase silk at calico prices. The joy of Germany is ten cents a pint, but the sparkling product of the vine clad hills of La Belle France comes higher. In other words, superior quality costs money, regardless of what the article may be.

I Stand Corrected.

Recently I reviewed "Optic Projection" by Professors Simon Henry Gage and Henry Phelps Gage. I sent the review to Brothers Gage, and in return have very kind letters from both. Professor Simon Henry Gage, in the course of his letter, says:

If I were to make any remarks on your review I would say that its spirit is wholly good. You have a duty to the operators who look to you for sound advice—and I think they get that kind, too—and you naturally had a friendly feeling for my son. If I were to criticise your review at all I would have to say you should have shown the book's faults, as well as its good points, without regard to friendship. I think anyone reading your review would think the entire book deals with moving picture projection, while in fact that part of projection was designedly made very brief.

I stand corrected. Friend Gage is right. I suppose I fell into the error naturally enough, because I have been so long and fully engaged with matters pertaining directly to moving picture projection that I guess it is difficult for me to see anything else clearly. As a matter of fact, I erred in not laying stress on the fact that "Optic Projection" deals exhaustively and instructively with ordinary magic lantern projection, which, as Brother Henry Phelps Gage in his letter very aptly says, "is widely used and poorly managed." Also the book deals, in detail and very interestingly, with microscopic projection, this being the specialty of Professor Simon Henry Gage. Aside from this, as I have said, the book contains much of interest and value to the student of projection, though weak on matters directly pertaining to practical M. P. projection. Professor Henry Phelps Gage in his letter says:

Our object has not been to replace that very complete and practical book on moving picture operation, viz.: the Handbook, but to put into the field a work which would consider all fields of projection. We have treated the chapter on moving pictures in much less detail than other chapters, because we felt that detailed directions for operating moving picture machines are already found in other places.

With the understanding that it is not intended as a work of instruction in practical moving picture projection, I can recommend "Optic Projection" to our readers. It is worth its price, $3.00. It is published by Comstock Publishing Company, Ithaca, N. Y.

THE STRAY SHOT (Biograph) Feb. 8.—Western melodrama in which the story is developed around an odd incident. A bullet, discharged in a scuffle, goes through the ceiling and wounds a man in the room above. It is a one-idea plot revealing nothing unusual save the happening mentioned. Isabel Rea, Curtis Cooksey and William J. Butler play parts that permit little characterization.

SUSPICIOUS CHARACTERS (Edison), Feb. 8.—William Wadsworth and Arthur Housman are two very easy-going burglars who make a joke of a good-natured policeman. They rob a home at their leisure and meet interference without concern. Faster action would improve the film; but, as it stands, it is good for several laughs.

SWEEDIE GOES TO COLLEGE (Essanay) Feb. 8.—This time Wallace Beery (Sweedie) enters a girl's college where tuition is to be given in return for labor. As a baker's assistant Sweedie nearly burns two men in the oven and then passes on to other experiences shared with the girls at a midnight supper party. Finally there is an embarrassing mistake in identity when Sweedie leaves. The story is loosely constructed; but offers a few humorous incidents.

PATSY BOLIVAR NO. 7, "Patsy in a Seminary" (Lubin), Feb. 8.—The seventh of the Patsy Bolivar episodes takes Clarence J. Elmer (Patsy) to a seminary where he is in turn a gardner and a physical instructor. Some of the scenes showing the girls in mannish gymnasium costumes playing follow the leader hold the attention. They are the best part of the picture for the plot is of small moment.

HEARST-SELIG NEWS PICTORIAL NO. 11 (Selig) Feb. 8.—Excellent winter scenes in this issue show ski jumping and playing tennis on the ice. The Kaiserhof hotel fire in Chicago is fairly well pictured and strong in their human appeal are scenes of the bread line waiting at the Knickerbocker Hotel, New York. Much of the war section is devoted to scenes in German cities where life proceeds as in times of peace.

HEARTS TO LET (Vitagraph) Feb. 8.—Because of a love letter sent by a friend for inclusion in a book the novelist is writing the novelist's wife believes him to be untrue and the upshot of the misunderstanding is a divorce. As presented here the cause seems inadequate and the reunion of the estranged pair is needlessly protracted. Leo Delaney and Leah Baird playing the principal parts under the direction of William Humphrey are the film's best assets.

OLIVE'S GREATEST OPPORTUNITY (Edison) Feb. 9.—For the last of the "Olive's Opportunities" Series the characters are taken to a winter house party in the country. Olive's gypsy father is drowned in the lake (he actually slips out of sight between cakes of ice) and, to close the film, and end Olive's maidenhood, there is a pretty church wedding. Mabel Trunnelle and Edward Earle make a pleasing couple in a somewhat sketchy story.

A ROMANCE OF THE NIGHT (Essanay), Feb. 9.—Adapted from a short story, the action in this melodrama is fast and to the point. A young man who thinks romance is dead is unexpectedly called upon to succor a beautiful young woman and her father. There is some stiff fighting in which Richard C. Travers and E. H. Calvert figure. Ruth Stonehouse is the girl. A fair melodrama.

MR. PEPPERIE TEMPER (Kalem), Feb. 9.—The episode in this split-reel farce, showing the antics of a man with a nasty temper, are loosely joined together, but draw a few thoughtless laughs. The action is spirited. On the reel with "The Mexican's Chickens."

THE MEXICAN'S CHICKENS (Kalem), Feb. 9.—Burlesque of fair quality closing a reel with "Mr. Pepperie Temper." Rebel soldiers steal chickens belonging to a Mexican general and because he fails to take the joke in good part he is blown sky high by a huge cannon. A passable subject.

HIS SOUL MATE (Lubin), Feb. 9.—George W. Terwilliger has written a quite unusual scenario that makes an odd rather than a humorous picture. Wavering between the charms of Dolly and those of Polly, a young man dreams that he marries each in turn, that both die and that he meets them in Heaven. His stenographer also is within St. Peter's gates, and she, it seems, is his soul mate. It is not so much a comedy as a fanciful notion picturized. Ethel Clayton and Joseph Kaufman are in the cast.

ROPING A BRIDE (Selig), Feb. 9.—The story told here is of the slightest, and in lieu of incidents advancing the plot there is much padding. Rivals for the hand of a girl determine to settle possession by a roping contest. Apparently the young woman accedes to the plan, but in the end she dismisses both of the suitors. Scenes are laid in the West. The Selig sub-title writer introduces the word "rivaltry."

THE LIFE HISTORY OF A SILK WORM (Edison), Feb. 10.—Opening a reel with "The Tailor's Bill" is this instructive study of a silk worm during all stages of its development.

THE TAILOR'S BILL (Edison), Feb. 10.—The individual performances given by Arthur Housman and William Wadsworth are better than the story provided by Elizabeth Miller in this half-reel farce. The plot is woven around incidents preparatory to and following a masque ball. One of the guests (Housman) refuses to pay for his costume and is hounded by Wadsworth, the irate costumer. Cora Williams and Richard Tucker make the most of the secondary roles.

THE FABLE OF "THE GOOD PEOPLE WHO RALLIED TO THE SUPPORT OF THE CHURCH" (Essanay), Feb. 10.—As in other George Ade fables, the humor here is pointed and intelligent. Small town audiences, in particular, will find a pardonably exaggerated portrayal of actual happenings in the experiences of the Helping Hand Society that organizes a festival at a total expense of $250. The receipts are $41.60, but, even so, the affair is pronounced a success. A George Adeish wording of the sub-titles adds greatly to this creditable offering.

THE OLD SLIPPER (Selig), Feb. 10.—An artificial melodrama which must be accepted in its extravagant entirety, or not at all. A slipper thrown from the window of an apartment is the means of saving a young woman from her aunt and uncle, who have designs on her fortune. Critical audiences will find the story unconvincing. Lillian Hamilton, Robyn Adair and E. J. Brady are in the cast.

BREAKING IN (Vitagraph), Feb. 10.—Elaine Sterne provided familiar material for Wilfrid North, the director of this film. A wealthy westerner takes his daughter East that she may break into New York society. With one accord society makes excuses; then Papa gets even by joining the Big Six of Wall Street. Scenes on the stock exchange are exciting and the cast is a strong one, including Ned Finley, Lillian Walker, Rose Tapley and Darwin Karr.

GETTING RID OF A NEPHEW (Biograph), Feb. 11.—Weak burlesque based on the career of a ridiculously stupid young man, who, after revealing his incompetency in a photographer's studio, is reduced to ashes by a high explosive. The attempts at comedy in this half-reel burlesque leave an audience unmoved.

THE BIG NIGHT (Biograph), Feb. 11.—Better than its companion piece on the same reel, "The Big Night" is mildly entertaining at times. It is the old story of a husband who sneaks away to enjoy a burlesque show. His wife arrives before the removal of the last veil in "The Dance of the Seven Veils" and drags him out of the hall without ceremony.

SLIM THE BRAVE AND SOPHIE THE FAIR (Essanay), Feb. 11.—First rate comedy of the kind customarily supplied by Victor Potel, Harry Todd, Margaret Joslin and Ernest Van Pelt. Slippery Slim's wild driving of a stagecoach over uneven roads and through rivers is something of an accomplishment. Disguised as a desperado, Slim outwits his old time rival, Mustang Pete, and wins the regard of Sophie.

THE MASQUERADE HERO (Mina), Feb. 11.—Only the most receptive of audiences will appreciate the comedy in this film. In a well-filled theater it passed with never a titter, because there was really nothing to laugh at in the story, or the acting. The plot is childishly simple and one does not find the brisk action that may cover up the lack of deeper qualities.

ON THE ALTAR OF LOVE (Vitagraph), Feb. 11.—Very well acted and pleasing in its total impression, is this romantic, sentimental depiction of artistic life. There is little novelty in the story of a young woman, who presents her masterpiece under the name of her blind sweetheart, an unsuccessful artist; but the situation takes on some freshness as acted by Maurice Costello, Estelle Mardo and Thomas O. Mills.

THEIR DIVORCE SUIT (Biograph), Feb. 12.—Granting as a premise the foolishness of the young married couple in this picture, the way in which they work out their domestic trouble is reasonably diverting. Having decided on a divorce, they live together until the necessary money is saved and then, of course, there is no divorce. The characters seem fairly natural as presented by Irene Howley and Jack Mulhall.

HAM AND THE SAUSAGE FACTORY (Kalem), Feb. 12.—Lively action with plenty of slap-stick humor should make this film a popular attraction. The idea has been used often enough, but not in precisely this form. Two hoboes feed dogs to a machine that grinds out completed sausages, retaining the color of the original dog and some of the animation. Unquestionably, the picture will excite laughter.

AN OBSTINATE SHERIFF (Lubin), Feb. 12.—An ordinary western melodrama in which a sheriff objects to his daughter marrying her cowboy sweetheart, and in which the cowboy wins favor by rescuing the girl from desperadoes. Several incidents in the story are made effective, settings are attractive and the cast is adequate with Velma Whitman, Melvin Mayo, Ray Gallagher and George Routh in the principal parts.

THE PERFUMED WRESTLER (Selig), Feb. 12.—Broad comedy that makes its first appeal to the not over delicate men in an audience. The perfumed Wrestler wins the great match because his person so reeks with the odor of limberger cheese that his opponent is overcome. The bout is amusing and the picture in its entirety is consistently handled in a low comedy vein.

WHEN GREEK MEETS GREEK (Vitagraph), Feb. 12.—As the producer of this comedy and the principal player, Sidney Drew, furnishes most of the entertainment, for the story is not especially strong. The incidents go to show how, to test the love of the woman he is going to marry, a man assumes all sorts of annoying maladies. Jane Morrow, the woman in question, remains faithful under the most trying circumstances.

WHEN FATHER INTERFERED (Lubin), Feb. 13.—In the last half of this comedy, acted in the chief roles by Arthur Johnson and Lottie Briscoe, the author departs from hackneyed precedents and offers a surprise. At the request of her admirer's father, an actress plans to convince the young man that she is far less innocent than one might suppose. Concluding scenes, showing how the deception goes wrong and the father is led to accept the actress as his daughter-in-law, make the picture worth while.

THE WOMAN WHO PAID (Biograph), Feb. 13.—A drama pointing a moral with sufficient clearness. Having stolen the affections of a man who rightfully belonged to another, a woman pays the penalty in later years by sacrificing legitimate love. Sympathy is aroused for the main figures in the little tragedy played by Gretchen Hartman, Herbert Barrington and Robert Nolan. At times the simple pathos is overdone.

BRONCHO BILLY'S SENTENCE (Essanay), Feb. 13.—Starting with a cross-country chase, in which Broncho Billy, a bandit, attempts to elude capture, this film develops along conventional lines—Broncho Billy's reformation because of kind treatment at the hands of a minister. The Bible is conspicuously in evidence as the bandit is being transformed into a Christian. G. M. Anderson is supported by Virginia Ames, Ernest Van Pelt, True Boardman and Evelyn Selbie.

THE BUGLE CALL (Selig), Feb. 13.—There is some comedy and more than a little improbable melodrama in this production of the Selig western company. The scene is supposed to be laid in Africa and a quite imposing lion appears frequently. The sudden insanity and equally sudden recovery of an army officer, who thinks that his sweetheart has been devoured by a lion, is not convincing.

THE RED SIGNAL (Kalem), Feb. 13.—Vivid pictures of an actual washout are included in the fourteenth of the "Hazards of Helen Railroad" series. The film is very well presented in every respect, with Helen Holmes figuring in several daring incidents. At one time she crosses a burning trestle to signal a train of impending danger.

THE GIRL WHO KEPT BOOKS (Edison), Feb. 13.—Mark Swan is the author of this episode in the life of "The Girl Who Earns Her Living." Included in an able cost are Gertrude McCoy, Charles Sutton, Augustus Phillips, Bigelowe Cooper and others. The narration of the adventures of the girl accountant is odd, but for the most part lacks the illusion of reality. The characters are credited with too little common sense and the situations seem forced.

HEARST-SELIG NEWS PICTORIAL NO. 13 (Selig), Feb. 15.—Coasting at Huntington, L. I., the winter carnival at Saranac Lake, rescuing the crew of a stranded ship, and blasting down old furnaces at Phillipsburg, N. J., make good material for this news issue. Canadian troops on Salisbury Plain and views of the much discussed steamer Dacia, comprise the war section.

HIS LOSING DAY (Biograph), Feb. 15.—While a broker awaits needed funds from a bank, his messenger reads a wild west tale, the scenes of which are pictured. The best part of the film reveals a man and a woman clinging to a rope as they descend a high cliff. A more entertaining sketch than "In Red Dog Town," released on the same reel.

IN RED DOG TOWN (Biograph), Feb. 15.—Confused burlesque opening a reel with "His Losing Day." Scenes alternate between a negro about to be suspended from the limb of a tree, and a rumpus in a western saloon. The subject comes dangerously near to being pointless.

Licensed Specials

IN THE HANDS OF THE JURY (Kalem), Feb. 8.—This interesting drama was reviewed at length by Hanford C. Judson in The Moving Picture World of February 6.

THE PASSER-BY (Selig), Feb. 8.—In this two-part romance of Civil War days, there is a fair story enacted in attractive settings. The costumes, too, are suitable, and the cast, including Fred Huntley, Eugene Besserer and Stella Razeto, is a good one. Fay offers to wed the man who goes to war in place of her brother. The Passer-By, a stranger to Fay, volunteers and is wounded. Eventually he receives his reward. Chance plays the largest part in the plot development. One battle scene is well handled.

PERE GORIOT (Biograph), Feb. 9.—The pathos in the story of Pere Goriot, adapted from Balzac's novel into a two-part drama, is only mildly effective. Suspense is slight and the plot offers few unexpected turns. The human appeal is in the pathetic figure of an old man, neglected in his old age by the two daughters for whom he sacrificed everything. Able performances are given by Edward Cecil, Kate Toncray, A. C. Marston, Vivian Prescott and others. The film is finely staged and costumed.

THE WRONG GIRL (Vitagraph), Feb. 9.—A bright two-reel comedy of college life presenting Wally Van in the guise of a freshman, who plays the prima donna role at a class entertainment. The plot in the second reel is especially well developed for farcical purposes, showing how a count kidnaps Wally, thinking him to be a girl, and how the sophomores, also in error, run away with the freshman's sweetheart. Good entertainment, especially for young people.

THE DISAPPEARANCE OF HARRY WARRINGTON (Kalem), Feb. 10.—The personality and acting of Ruth Roland are of distinct value in "The Girl Detective" series, of which this two-part melodrama is the third. Cleo Ridgley also appears to advantage in these adventures, following the mysterious disappearance of a well-to-do young man. Ruth traces him to the rooms of a band of anarchists, assumes anarchistic tendencies herself, and, aided by the discarded sweetheart of one of the ring leaders, effects a rescue. It is well conceived melodrama, forcefully acted. Robert Gray plays Warrington.

THE TRAPPER'S REVENGE (Lubin), Feb. 11.—French Canadians, trappers, half-breeds, mounted police and other characters, needed for a genuine melodrama of the Canadian Northwest, are used to good purpose in this very acceptable two-part picture. The first reel moves a bit slowly, but as the plot progresses the action takes on dramatic force. Locations are always attractive and the playing of Edgar Jones, John E. Ince, Josephine Longworth and others is sincere. Altogether the production is a worthy example of its type.

THIRTEEN DOWN (Essanay), Feb. 12.—Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne are in the cast of this interesting melodrama, which was reviewed at length by James S. McQuade in The Moving Picture World of February 13.

BAGS OF GOLD (Lubin), Feb. 10.—Most of the excitement in Shannon Fifes' three-part melodrama is crowded into the final reel, but the preparatory detail, no doubt, is necessary for a full understanding of the plot. It is the story of three crooks and a third man, who is on the point of stealing the bags of gold entrusted to him. The sensational happenings have to do with the capture of the trio of thieves. A cabin is blown up, and there is quite a bit of excitement in the way of fights and dangerous looking falls. John Smiley, Justina Huff and Clarence Elmer are in the cast of a melodrama of cumulative interest.

MOTHER'S ROSES (Vitagraph), Feb. 13.—A Broadway Star feature in three parts, written by William Addison Lathrop and directed by Theodore Marston. The story is sentimental melodrama with the lasting influence of a mother on her offspring for its keynote. At critical moments, the fragrance of roses, always associated with mother, prevents unwise behavior on the part of a young man and a young woman. It is an extremely well produced picture making a direct appeal to the sympathies. The acting of Mary Maurice and Frank Currier is notably appealing. Others in the cast are Dorothy Kelly, James Morrison, Ethel Lloyd and George Cooper.

HER SUPREME SACRIFICE (Kalem), Feb. 15.—Alice Joyce acts with considerable feeling in this two-part drama, written by Louis B. Gardner. She plays the part of a young woman who divorces her husband that he may receive a fortune from his father, who refuses to forgive his son's marriage to a poor typist. After a time the pair are reunited. Audiences will find sincere acting and a story of good dramatic quality, although some of the unhappiness seems unnecessary.

THE VAN THORNTON DIAMONDS (Selig), Feb. 15.—A two-part melodrama presenting a gentleman burglar during his efforts to steal the jewelry of a society woman. The plot is satisfactory enough in its way and fairly well produced, save for a few errors. The thief's wife, an unwilling accomplice, pretends to sprain her ankle in order to fool Mrs. Thornton and her guests at a house party. The actress playing the part limps even in the privacy of her room, although according to the story there is no reason why she should. One sub-title reads in part: "Pretended eager to be the first to see Mrs. Thornton's Gown." Several others are clumsily worded.

Independent.

PATHE'S DAILY NEWS NO. 10, 1915 (Pathe-Exc), Feb. 3.—One of the most attractive items of this issue are some scenes from the Washington Irving High School of New York City, showing in symbolical manner the vocations to which women are fitted, the subjects taught at the school, etc. The usual interesting incidents from the front are also shown.

CAUGHT IN A PARK (Keystone), Feb. 6.—There is nothing to especially recommend this picture, although no doubt the general public would like it.

PATHE'S DAILY NEWS NO. 11, 1915 (Pathe-Exc), Feb. 8.—The burial of Bruno Garibaldi, a descendent of the great Italian patriot, is an interesting scene; also the unemployed being fed at the Hotel Knickerbocker, New York, and a sand storm at Salisbury Beach, Mass. Other items of interest also appear in this issue.

ANIMATED WEEKLY, NO. 153 (Universal), Feb. 10.—Pictures of Bundle Day in New York, the funeral of Constante Garibaldi in Italy, ice carnival at Saranac Lake, war scenes and others are included in this. Some of the photography is a little dark owing to inclement weather conditions.

THE OTHER MAN (Reliance), Feb. 15.—The theme on which this picture is based has been worked over many times, and is the old story of the husband mistaking the outcast brother of his wife for her lover. The trouble which ensues is of the usual order. The suspense of the situation is retained to the climax, helping thereby to make the film a very acceptable one.

THE HAPPIER MAN (Beauty), Feb. 16.—Among the familiar faces that appear in this picture is Irving Cummings. The production is a good one, and the majority of it is set in western atmosphere. The story is that of two young men who, having been partners in business, become bankrupt and set off to the west together. Through aid given to a prospector who has met with an accident and dies, they come into a fortune. The point of the story is to show that the man who came back home and married was the happier of the two.

SAINTS AND SINNERS (American), Feb. 17.—Winnifred Greenwood and Edward Coxen are the two most prominent characters in this picture. The subject is a good one, and one cannot help wishing that a couple of reels had been devoted to a more thorough exploitation of the subject. It may be that the selfish society woman has been given just a little bit the worst of it, but there is no harm done in painting the situation as black as perhaps it is. The film, of course, contains a good lesson in the subject of true morality.

THE DEPUTY'S CHANCE THAT WON (Reliance), Feb. 17.—This is a fairly interesting western subject directed by Arthur Mackley. It is the story of a kidnapped young woman, for whom the kidnappers demand a ransom. The deputy makes a daring entrance into the cabin where the young woman is imprisoned, and succeeds in trapping her captors.

WHO GOT STUNG? (Princess), Feb. 19.—An entertaining farcial number in which the young married man's actor friends play a joke on him. One of them impersonates his mother-in-law. The situations are full of good-humored horse play which becomes very funny in places.

TWO JONES (Royal), Feb. 20.—Louis Simon doubles in this as Jones of Nyack and Jones of Tappan, one a drug clerk and the other a married man with a wife and child. The story is one of mixed identities and is quite amusing in places. It makes a very fair offering.

THE NEW DRESS (Eclair), Feb. 21.—The poor husband in this story steals money from a miser to buy a dress for his wife. He is found out, after the purchase is made. The miser comes to arrest him, but the wife recognizes in him her long-lost brother, so he forgives the husband. This is interesting but not very convincing.

THEIR LAST HAUL (L-Ko), Feb. 21.—This eccentric comedy number works up very gradually into a hilarious affair. The would-be safe robbers not only perform some extremely laughable feats, but take all sorts of chances in their fight on the roof and use of the rope up and down the sides of the high building. This is an extremely good offering of the nonsencial type, combining laughter with thrills.

DANCE CREATIONS (Big U), Feb. 23.—Martin Brown and Rosika Dolly appear in this dancing number, picturing very entertainingly dances old and new. The Crinoline polka of 1850, Clown trot, ballet steps and a Chinese dance are among those shown.

NELLIE, THE PRIDE OF THE FIREHOUSE (Nestor), Feb. 23.—An eccentric comedy number featuring a fire company in full regalia. They are called to subdue flames in the shirtwaist factory where Nellie is employed and great deeds of heroism are performed. The plot is slight and the action amusing, though not extremely funny.

FATTY'S INFATUATION (L-Ko), Feb. 24.—A juvenile number with a slight but rather amusing plot. Willard Gardner is the fat boy who uses the gas money to buy candy and ice cream for his young sweetheart. He afterward confesses that he did it for love. Not strong but pleasing in its way.

THE MYSTERY OF THE MAN WHO SLEPT (Rex), Feb. 25.—Something rather new in the line of mystery photoplays. Ben Wilson appears as an expert criminologist, who unravels the mystery of the sleeping workman. The crime is traced to the foreman of the works, who poses as a doctor and administers a drug to delay the construction work. This is well presented and holds the attention closely.

THE RUNAWAY CLOSET (Sterling), Feb. 25.—A frivolous maid, a flirtatious cop and a masquerading hobo appear in this. The latter hides in a wardrobe and runs away with it, finally falling over a cliff. This is fairly amusing.

SWAN LIFE (Sterling), Feb. 25.—On the same reel with the foregoing, presumably one of the Universal educational films.

TAKING HER MEASURE (Nestor), Feb. 26.—Billy Rhodes and Jack Dillon appear as a pair of newlyweds. The man in the ladies' tailoring establishment becomes very familiar with the bride in taking her measurements. The husband goes on a rampage and shoots the place up. This is full of action but not quite up to the Nestor's standard as to plot.

THE LAUGH THAT DIED (Victor), Feb. 26.—Mary Fuller appears in this East Side number as an Italian girl in love with a young engineer. Her father intends forcing her to marry Rigi, and the wedding preparations are shown. The girl escapes from the unwelcome match after some melodramatic scenes and is reunited with her own lover. The story is one of about average interest.

SAVED BY A SHOWER (Joker), Feb. 27.—An eccentric comedy number with Max Asher and Gale Henry in the part of a country couple in the city and Wm. Franey and Lillian Peacock as confidence people. The humor is not very strong in this, though some of the storm scenes are quite amusing.

THE UNKNOWN BROTHER (Powers), Feb. 27.—Sydney Ayres and Val Paul appear as two brothers, who were tattooed in similar fashion by an old sailor when boys. In later years one is sheriff and the other a bandit. The sheriff saves his brother after some dramatic scenes. This is well photographed and better than the average western number.

COLONEL HEEZA LIAR (Pathe-Exc), February.—"In the Haunted Castle" the second night is rather a hard one for the Colonel. On the same reel with "A Nature Beauty Spot." This is an amusing comedy from the series of J. M. Bray cartoons, and pictures the Colonel in the graveyard and in the haunted castle beset by ghosts in the shape of skeletons.

A NATURE BEAUTY SPOT (Pathe-Exc), February.—This subject, on the same reel with the foregoing, is an interesting series of scenes in the Crimea, colored, and exceedingly beautiful.

WHEN CIDERVILLE WENT DRY (Pathe-Exc), February.—Made by the Esperanto Film Co. and possibly entertaining to many audiences. It is more or less of a burlesque on Prohibition and Woman Suffrage, and is not exactly a high-minded bit of work, inasmuch as that the use of the "Blind Tiger" and various other deceitful methods of dealing out drinks have been employed.

FERRETS (Pathe-Exc), February.—On the same reel with "Max is Forced to Work," this picture forms an interesting natural history subject, showing the murderous tendencies of this often useful little animal.

MAX IS FORCED TO WORK (Pathe-Exc), February.—An ordinary sort of comedy, on the same reel with the foregoing. It is a farce comedy; its development is distinctly European and contains a number of amusing incidents.

Independent Specials

THE MYSTERY SOLVED (Thanhouser), January.—This final episode, No. 23, of "The Million Dollar Mystery" Series, holds the interest closely. It calls particular attention to the work of Sidney Bracy in the double role of the butler and the millionaire father. Margaret learns at last the secret of her parentage, she being the wealthy man's daughter. She also learns where the million dollars is hidden, in the back of his picture, together with a portrait of her mother. She is married to Jim Norton, thus bringing the series to a successful close.

NONE SO BLIND (Kriterion—Trump), Feb. 8-13.—An excellent two-reel production produced bq Alex. Frank at the studios of the All Comedy Film Co., Inc. The production is a drama of an interesting type, and the story has that delightful quality in these days of hackneyed subjects, of having a fresh tone in its make-up. It is the story of an old miser's cruelty, and has been developed with intelligence, and more than a little artistic sense. Crawford Kent and Justina Wayne are featured in the picture.

THE DEATH DICE (Reliance), Feb. 13.—George Patullo has written the story on which this two-part western is based. Irene Hunt plays the feminine lead, and Eugene Pallette, Fred Burns and Vester Perry impersonate the male characters of the play. The story is of how a loaded dice decided the fate of two men, the one condemned to lynching by mob law, and the other going free. It so happens, however, that the guilty party is the one convicted.

MUSIC HATH CHARMS (Komic—Two Parts), Feb. 14.—A Fay Tincher farce comedy. There is nothing fresh or new about this picture; it is based on an old theme, but some of the comedy of the production is good enough to carry it through even with the drawback of a hackneyed theme. Augustus Carney, for instance, gets in some good work. The story is of two musician lovers, one of which is the girl's choice and the other the father's choice. The singing suitor hires a bootblack Caruso to help him deceive the old man, but the bootblack (Augustus Carney), lured away from behind the portieres by a pretty maid, fails the would-be singer at the crucial moment.

HOW HAZEL GOT EVEN (Majestic), Feb. 14.—A two-part production with Dorothy Gish, W. E. Lawrence, Fred Burns and other Majestic players. One of the chief attractions of this picture to the general public will be the frequent prize fight scenes which occur. Patsy, supposed to be the faithful lover of Hazel, through a freak of circumstances, gains the position of lightweight champion, and thereafter loses his head, snubs Hazel and goes to the bad. Her manner of getting even with him is quite amusing.

THE MASTER KEY (Universal Special), Feb. 14.—Episode No. 13. This opens with Dore still a prisoner in the temple dungeon. Sir Donald continues to poison Ruth's mind with stories of Dore's infidelity. Wilkerson and his friends plan to get the idol and disguise as natives for this purpose. The theft of the idol is accomplished under exciting circumstances. The caretaker, who is cursed with the wrath of Buddha for its loss goes into the dungeon and jumps into the vat of burning oil. In so doing he unconsciously allows Dore to escape. The latter then appears before Ruth and they take up the chase for Wilkerson and the idol. This number is a very good one and contains much interesting action.

IN THE TWILIGHT (American), Feb. 15.—A two-reel photoplay of the sentimental type, written by Marc Edmund Jones. It is very successful in its way and leads up to a home-coming scene of real pathos. The opening scenes are pastoral and show two brothers and two sisters living on adjoining farms. One brother deserts his sweetheart for the city; the other marries and remains home. Later years bring reverses and failure to the city man. He returns broken and penniless to find the happy family gathered about a victrola playing "Love's Old Sweet Song." He is forgiven and taken in. This is obviously sentimental in treatment, but gets over very well. The photography is pleasing and the cast good.

A MASK, A RING, A PAIR OF HANDCUFFS (Navajo), Feb. 15-20.—A two-reel western picture in which the story is not overclear and in which there are several incidents offending against the probabilities. It is hardly likely that a young woman caught in a stage hold-up would have the inclination to start a flirtation with a masked bandit while the robbery is taking place in order that she might secure from him a ring. It is even less likely that the same man later would fail to recognize the girl when conversing with her, let alone making love to her; or that he would fail to note the withdrawal by her of the fairly large pistol from his pocket.

THE KEEPER OF THE FLOCK (Santa Barbara), Feb. 15-20.—This two reel story with an eastern beginning and a western working out, while not strong, will get by. Fritzi Brunette is excellent in the role of the girl who marries against her will that her father may be financially bettered. Edward Alexander is the theological student and later the minister who loses the girl, to win her in after years. John Prescott is the successful rival and John Dillon the father. Much of the action takes place on a big sheep ranch.

A MAN OF IRON (Thanhouser), Feb. 16.—A two-reel production, better than the average in theme and construction. Frank Farrington appears as a financier with a boy and girl, both of whom are pampered and spoiled by too much high living. Failure comes and the father welcomes it because it will be a blessing to his children. They meet the change of life willingly, father and son working in the marble quarries. The son risks his life to save a girl. Later good fortune returns to the father and the children marry worthy mates. There is an inspiring note in this film story and it should have wide appeal.

RUNAWAY JUNE (Reliance), Feb. 17.—Instalment No. 6, entitled "The Siege of the House of O'Keefe." This opens with Blye and Ned continuing their search for the runaway bride. Blye enlists the aid of "Tommy" Thomas again, who takes June to a second employment agency. She gets a position as companion and while at work has an insight into the financial affairs of Al Grogg and his wife. In this case the husband spends all the money for drink, but always brings home a pot of flowers to his wife. She finally tires of this and hurls the pots at him. The instalment is entertaining, but the same thinness of plot is in evidence. The photography is good throughout.

THE THREADS OF FATE (Rex), Feb. 21.—A two-reel number, with Pauline Bush, Wm. Dowlin and Lon Chaney in the cast. The story concerns a poor girl and a young man of artistic leanings who tire of the social life into which they are thrown. They meet and separate, then meet again and are killed by a dash over a cliff in an auto. The sub-titles are quotations from famous writers. The production, as a whole, is too impressionistic and vague in certain respects; it would have held the attention more strongly with a more definite plot. It makes a fair offering as it stands.

HIS SISTER'S KIDDIES (Thanhouser), Feb. 21.—An amusing skit in which the uncle agrees to care for his sister's children during the mother's absence. The children wear him out with their persistent playing and pile into bed with him in the morning when he wants sleep. The situations in this are natural and quite enjoyable, though the plot is of course slight.

THE HARD ROAD (Victor), Feb. 22.—A three-reel subject, admirably produced by Harry C. Meyers, with himself, Rosemary Theby, Brinsley Shaw and Ruth Fielding in the leads. The photography is good and the settings attractive. More than a little art has gone into this production. One sister chooses the gay life and the other marries and has children. All through the picture the contrast is maintained. It shows without offense the price paid by the girl who chose the hard road, and leaves out the usual overdose of sentimentality. It is a realistic portrayal of a girl's downfall and winds up with a pathetic touch when she and her former lover enter the doors of a mission together. A strong offering of its type.

HAUNTED HEARTS (Gold Seal), Feb. 23.—An entertaining adventure number in two reels, with Cleo Madison, Joe King and Edward Sloman in the cast. The scenic effects at the beginning are very attractive. The hero falls while getting the rose for the girl on the desert island. The villain takes the rose and swims out to the yacht, reporting that the hero had died. Years later, after marrying the girl, the villain becomes repentant, and the story of his reparation is equally interesting. This is a very good number of its type and is well constructed and the photography is good.

THE ADVENTURE OF FLORENCE (Thanhouser), Feb. 13.—Florence La Badie and Morris Foster appear in this two-reel number, which makes a successful offering of the polite comedy type. The comedy is sustained through both reels. The girl allows a young man to call who has seen her in her auto and been attracted by her. The parents return from the opera and she hides him; the father thinks he is a burglar. He escapes. Later he turns out to be the wealthy John Travers, for whom the father has been searching. This is well constructed, in good tone and has an enjoyable touch of romance in it.

THE GRUDGE (Broncho), Feb. 24.—A two-reel western subject, with Wm. S. Hart, Charles Ray and Margaret Thompson in the cast. The sick youth calls the bandit a cheap bully. The bandit makes the unique proposition of restoring the youth to health so he can fight him for the insult. The latter's sister appears as the youth is getting better. Then the Mexican lover complicates matters. The fight scene is dramatically staged, and also the later struggle, in which the bandit kills the Mexican. This is a strong, entertaining offering, clearly photographed and appealing from a scenic standpoint.

THE ANSWER (Eclair), Feb. 24.—A two-reel western number with Norbert A. Myles, Lucy K. Villa and Lindsley J. Hall in the cast. The plot is very conventional and contains little that is new. The young husband is falsely imprisoned for the crime of another. Later he escapes and is finally cleared by a written confession of the dying murderer. The offering is one of about average interest.

THE PRAYER OF A HORSE (Big U), Feb. 25.—A sort of "Black Beauty" story, told by a horse. The equine in this case is a fine white horse which goes through innumerable experiences, finally ending its days happily in the hands of its old master. A good Kentucky feud story is also pictured in the opening scenes, the horse taking a prominent part. Agnes Vernon, Murdock MacQuarrie, and the latter's brother, Albert MacQuarrie, are in the cast. The photoplay is produced by permission of the New York Woman's League for Animals. The photoography is good and the story one of sympathy and general appeal.

THE MAN AT THE KEY (Domino), Feb. 25.—A two-reel railroad subject, with Richard Stanton in the part of a young operator. He leaves his key to have a look at his new baby and in so doing precipitates a train wreck. This wreck scene is graphically pictured. Years of servitude in the peintentiary are the price of this act of negligence. Later he escapes and saves the president's special from being wrecked. The story is well pictured and has good action throughout.

THE TREASON OF ANATOLE (Imp), Feb. 26.—A two-reel production dealing with the present war. Etiene Girardot, of Charley's Aunt fame, plays the part of a French violinist who is befriended by a German family in New York, the parents portrayed by Wm. J. Welsh and Violet Mersereau. They restore him to health and get him work in a hotel restaurant. When the war breaks out both men enlist in their own cause. Fritz becomes a spy and Anatole saves him, while on sentry duty, at the sacrifice of his own life. The picture closes with Anatole being shot. The presentation is sincerely made and not calculated to arouse belligerent feelings. It contains a few actual war scenes and the rest are handled in a way that carries out the suggestion of warfare very nicely. A good offering of its type.

THE SHERIFF'S STREAK OF YELLOW (Kay-Bee), Feb. 26.—A two-reel western number, with Wm. S. Hart and Jack Nelson in the leads. The sheriff captures the young bandit, but releases him in gratitude for a good turn the latter's mother did him. This desert experience is well pictured. The bandit later comes to grief, however, when the sheriff prevents the band from robbing the local bank. There is a lot of shooting in the latter scenes. Conventional western drama, with good action and photography.

THE CURSE OF THE DESERT (Bison), Feb. 27.—A two-reel melodramatic story of the Sepoy mutiny, written by Grace Cunard. She and Francis Ford play the leading parts. The atmosphere of India is well suggested and some of the settings are wonderfully good; also the costuming. The plot itself contains a succession of improbable incidents and much of the action must not be inquired into too closely. It makes a good piece of spectacular melodrama and the action, though incongruous at times, is spirited and holds the attention.

THE CHILDREN OF THE GHETTO (Box Office Attractions), Feb. 20.—To one who has not read the original story, "The Children of the Ghetto," by Israel Zangwill, the film version being presented by William Fox, will appeal as a strong and interesting film production. On the other hand, to one having read and absorbed the atmosphere of this truly great novel, something which it contains will be found lacking in the picture. Just what this "something" is will be hard to define, yet the vacuum left by its absence is most surely felt. "The Children of the Ghetto," as Zangwill created it, presents a great sociological and racial problem, and the reach of its philosophy is doubtless difficult of concentration into a few thousand feet of film. However, a thorough criticism or any kind of satisfactory discussion of the subject is impossible in so short a space. Wilton Lackaye, in the role of Rab. Shemuel, leaves nothing to be desired. Ethel Kaufman, as Esther Ansell, is perhaps the most satisfying of the feminine characters; her interpretation of the roll is sympathetic. Others of the cast who have done good work are Ruby Hoffman, David Bruce, Wm. R. Hatch and Irene Boyle. The picture has been directed by Frank Powell and the story picturized by Edward Jose.

THE ACID TEST (Pathe-Exc-Balboa), February.—A three-reel production which has many points of interest. The story upon which the film is based is not at all out of the ordinary, and is that of a wayward son who learns his lesson after he has been turned out by his father and has had to make his own way. He finally becomes head of a railway gang, and wins his father's approbation by the successful clearing of the road for the railway company of which his father is president. Some of the nicest scenes of the picture are those which occur between the young lady telegraph operator and the young man. Unfortunately several discrepancies are noticeable in the direction of the picture. Henry King, Jackie Saunders and Henry Stanley play the leads.

SECURING ARBUCKLE'S WARDROBE NO LAUGHING MATTER.

WHEN Maclyn Arbuckle arrived at the Bosworth studios in Los Angeles recently, he soon realized that he was "inside of a big pickle" on being told that he was to appear before the camera as "Hi Judd," a small-town postmaster. A hasty departure from New York resulted in his leaving some dozen trunks of stage wardrobe there and past experiences in the way of securing anything ready-made to cover his two hundred and fifty pounds gave him no little concern.

Maclyn Arbuckle.

Marshall Steadman of the Bosworth forces placed himself and his car at Arbuckle's disposal and a tour of the second-hand shops commenced. Arbuckle's fears were soon realized. The energetic dealers in second-hand apparel insisted upon attempting to sell clothes that fit him perfectly. In desperation Arbuckle said to one of the most persistent salesmen that he wanted the clothes for an uncle who weighs one hundred pounds more than himself and was only four feet tall. The largest coat in the place was brought forth, which he immediately seized. It was a coat of three shades: dark, faded green and dust colored. The dark was the original color, the faded green was the result of the coat hanging outside in the sun, and the dust color was the effect of long neglect in the open.

When the dealer at last realized that he was not to fit the star, he dug up a wealth of stuff, from which Arbuckle selected a marvelous collection. For a hat and a pair of shoes Arbuckle literally held up a native and before the man knew what had happened, he was driving home hatless and shoeless.

At the studios everyone, including Elsie Janis, who was posing for a picture at the time, joined Arbuckle in kicking the clothes around the stage for more character. At the final inspection Miss Janis asked Arbuckle where on earth he managed to find the wonderful clothes, to which ye stout person replied: "By persuasion. I was unfitted at a second-hand dealer's and sent a man home hatless and shoeless." It was a strenuous day for Arbuckle, but his immediate success in "It's No Laughing Matter," which is receiving the unstinted praise of both press and public, fully repaid him for his endeavors.

"The Lady and the Burglar"

A Strong Five-reel Production Presented by the U. S. Amusement Company, and Featuring James J. Corbett.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

NEEDLESS to say, "The Lady and the Burglar" has a double interest, presenting not alone a good story, but also the ex-champion of the prize ring, James J. Corbett, as a picture actor of no mean ability. His well-known epithet of "Gentleman Jim" seems here to have an added significance, and his easy adaptability to the melodramatic situation is not the least of the pleasures of the picture.

The production, which is a Blache Feature, directed by Herbert Blache, is being released through the U. S. Amusement Company. It is an artistic, in fact an elaborate, production. Its interior sets are deep and beautiful, and have been arranged to give an impression of space. There is a smoothness of scene connection, and a logical development of the story with the exception of perhaps one instance, that aids materially in the realism of the picture.

In the classification of the production one hesitates to call it merely melodrama, for comedy-melodrama seems to suit the occasion better. Its situations are tense; but even so, there is real humor in the manner in which the gentleman burglar cleverly bridges a menacing gap by posing as a detective with the victim of the burglary falling in love with him while her jeweled necklace reposes in the culprit's pocket.

The picture is, moreover, not without its big thrill, which occurs when the burglar in his flight crosses from one high roof to another by means of a rope swung over the open space. And it is not without its moment of pathos, which occurs at the meeting of the burglar and the ministerial suitor of the young woman, in her bedroom, where she has concealed the fascinating thief, and the recognition of the orphan brothers throws into bold relief the result of the influence of different environments.

At this point of the production appears the only noticeable discrepancy, namely, the entering of the young woman's room by the minister. By natural development of the circumstances, the mother or father would have been the one to rush to the daughter's room to ascertain her welfare, and therefore the situation as presented seems a little forced.

Claire Whitney plays opposite Corbett, and it may be said that this clever young actress has never been seen to better advantage. In fact, the picture has been played throughout with a remarkably clever cast; and the child actress, whose name we do not know, should not be forgotten for the perfectly natural manner in which she played her part.

It is not too much to say, in closing, that the production is an exceptionally fine one of its kind, blending as it does a variety of human interests, and presenting artistic work photographically as well as otherwise.

Ina Claire Added to Lasky Stars

THE Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company has the honor of announcing the exclusive engagement of Ina Claire, who has signed a contract similar to that signed last week by Charlotte Walker and who will consequently soon make her photodramatic debut under Lasky management. As in the case of Miss Walker, and other stars recently retained by the Lasky organization, Miss Claire's arrangement is of such a nature that her photodramatic appearances, for a period of years to come, must be entirely under Lasky management.

Ina Claire.

Ina Claire, who determines to rank as one of the foremost favorites of her age on the American stage and also in London, was born in Washington, D. C., and educated there at the Holy Cross Academy. From early childhood, the stage fascinated her, and she finally made her vaudeville debut in songs and imitations. Her first regular engagement was with Richard Carle in "Jumping Jupiter."

Miss Claire was first brought prominently to the attention of the New York public on the occasion of the opening of the Folies Bergere, of which Mr. Lasky was the creative genius. She was one of the leading entertainers, and the hit that she made there was responsible for engagement in the title role of "The Quaker Girl," a success which literally meant fame and fortune for the young artist.

After the protracted success of "The Quaker Girl," Miss Claire appeared for a time at the Winter Garden and then went to London, where she starred at the Adelphi Theater in "The Girl from Utah." Last Spring she starred in London with Sam Bernard in "The Belle of Bond Street," her vogue in the English metropolis becoming greater than ever.

Miss Claire's most recent stellar engagement was in the title role of "Lady Luxury" at the Casino Theater.

ANOTHER WILCOX PICTURE.

Ella Wheeler Wilcox, the noted essayist and poetess of problems related to sex, soul and psychology, is collaborating with Ruth Helen Davis, known in literary circles for her translations of the Pierre Loti works into English, in writing a photoplay on the former's famous poem, "The Two Glasses."

The subject is to be handled in an allegorical manner, somewhat in the vein of such productions as "Everyman" and "Experience." The title, "The Two Glasses," refers to a tumbler bearing aqua pura and a long-stemmed crystal cup effervescing with the red fluid which a poet once described as typifying "the imprisoned laughter of the peasant girls of France."

The Wilcox-Davis drink drama, with its pitting of bubbles and bibulousness against still water and sobriety, is to be ready for interpretation by the Humanology Company at an early date. On account of its symbolism, it will be more than ordinarily difficult to stage. The technical direction of the Humanology Company is much interested in the unconventionality of the theme and confident of producing a drama of peculiar strength and charm.

"MIGNON" A SUCCESS IN PORTLAND, OREGON.

Beatriz Michelena in "Mignon" is a financial triumph and artistic success on the Pacific Coast. After being shown at the Columbia Theater, Portland, Ore., the manager sent the following wire to the Seattle branch of the World Film Corporation:

> Just finished the Mignon Recital given under the auspices of the Oregon Chapter Guild of Organists and your picture "Mignon" made a big hit. Everybody was enthusiastic and know Michelena success assured. We had approximately one thousand representative people present, including the family of Mayor Albee and others of prominence. The leading musical clubs of our city were represented and all proclaimed "Mignon" a big success. Convey my congratulation to Mr. Selznick and the California Motion Picture Corporation and hope other suitable operas will be filmed.

"Barriers Swept Aside"

Optimistic, Pleasant Story of Divorce and Remarriage—Human Adjustments Are Its Theme (Kalem, Two Reels).

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THERE is no doubt at all that among pictures, the one that is human and pleasant and especially the one in which the spectator can find material for thought helping him in judging others and himself, is always the preferred one. Such an offering is this—"Barriers Swept Aside," a two-reel Kalem picture, written by Hamilton Smith and directed by Robert G. Vignola. Its theme is human adjustments. It opens with the divorce of two young people and shows how they found themselves and each other. A kindly old butler adds to the human value of the picture, although this character doesn't enter prominently into the strictly dramatic action of the piece.

The producer of it is one who turns out remarkably even workmanship of high quality and, taken as a whole, this is amply noticeable in his latest picture. Yet one sees now and then a bit of typical, "picturey" over-registering of a point. The most apparent place is when Harry Millarde, who plays the young husband just divorced is reminded of former happiness by an old song lying on his piano. He had just had a party of rather riotous friends at the house and now has visions of his wife, and himself courting her. His passiveness during the visions and his clutch of feeling at its close do not, taken together, pull strongly as they ought at the heart strings; because the whole incident is "picturey." Then the situation in the picture would have been made more convincing, if it had been stated why the woman who had divorced him on account of his drunkenness did not ask and get alimony. He is still rich while she has to make her living as a stenographer and for (a subtitle tells us) a pittance.

The story told is excellent and abundantly interesting. The story is the heart of the picture and makes it a good offering to the public. It is a picture that gets one interested and keeps him, not excited, but distinctly sympathetic till the close. Pretty Anna Nilsson, delicate and spirituelle, fits the role of the badly disappointed, but still loving wife. In her poverty-stricken hall bedroom in a boarding house, she prays for the good of her one-time husband who is living in luxury and selfishness. John E. Makin plays the butler who tries to keep his employer as straight as possible and is full of joy when the wife comes back to the home. Henry Hallam has the role of a rude and vulgar employer of the girl. There are many perfectly staged and beautiful scenes in the picture and from the very first one is delighted with the life-like, perfect photography.

MARY PICKFORD IN MUTUAL FEATURE MOB.

The famous Mary Pickford and her director, James Kirkwood, accidentally became impromptu players in the mob scene of the four-reel Majestic-Mutual feature, "The Lost House," an adaptation from the novelette by Richard Harding Davis. W. C. Cabanne was putting on a fire scene and had stretched a fire line around the structure. Police officers and firemen were gathered in front of the line. Miss Pickford and Kirkwood were driving along in a machine and seeing the crowd alighted to watch the proceedings. They were in line with Cabanne's camera,

Mary Charleson

PRETTY little vivacious Mary Charleson, whose fame as an actress and screen star is international, has joined the Lubin players in Philadelphia and will shortly be seen in a series of novel Lubin productions. Her first appearance will be in "The Governor," a three-reel drama written by Shannon Fife, in which she will play opposite John Ince, who will also direct the picture. Following this, Miss Charleson will be featured in a series of fifteen one-reel romances called "Road o' Strife," by Emmett Campbell Hall.

Mary Charleson.

Miss Charleson has thousands of screen friends and has played leads with John Bunny, Maurice Costello, Edwin August and many other prominent photoplayers. Her rapid rise in the ranks of photoplayers has indeed been remarkable and it has been due not only to her attractiveness and charm, but to her versatility—a versatility that enables her to play with natural ease and intelligence almost any type of girl or woman in the human multitude of characters.

A prominent theatrical man once referred to Miss Charleson as a bundle of human activity and the description was most apt, but he could have arrived at the truth by a somewhat shorter verbal route had he merely said she was "full of pep." And it is this activity or "pep" that has won for the pretty Irish girl so many friends and admirers. Miss Charleson is exactly two inches over five feet in height, her eyes are a mischievous grey-blue, she's of the brunette type, is much better looking off the screen than on, and is a mixture of a typical Western girl and an Irish colleen.

Miss Charleson was born in the "ould counthry," her birthplace being picturesque old Dungannon, not far from Belfast. When she came to this country her parents took her to Los Angeles and there little Irish Mary made quite a name for herself not only as a child actress but by the delightful little way in which she sang Irish songs and did Irish dances. When she was twelve years old she won innumerable friends playing in "Rip Van Winkle" in the Belasco Theater in Los Angeles. After that she played in stock companies in different cities in California and did a few seasons in comic opera and vaudeville.

It is as a photoplayer, however, that Miss Charleson is best known and few players have achieved fame in this line so rapidly. Directors readily recognized her natural talent as a camera artiste and in a remarkably short time she was playing leads with some of the best known photoplay stars in the country. Miss Charleson arrived in Philadelphia this week and immediately began work upon her first picture.

GERTRUDE McCOY AS AN EXTRACTOR.

Gertrude McCoy, the Edison star, who admitted to having been stung on the purchase of her automobile, extracted the sting when she won her lawsuit in Part II of Supreme Court, New York, getting her money back, the defendant dealer having to foot the costs. Counsel for the defense objected to Miss McCoy using "lemon shade," instead of yellow, in describing the car, but she insisted that it was truly a lemon shade even if the car did have a yellow streak in it.

"The Witness"

An Interesting Semi-Western Melodrama Presented by the Kriterion Service and Made by the Crown City Film Co.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THERE seems to be nothing quite as acceptable to the general public today as a melodrama of a moderate type, presenting likely situations in a red-blooded but not over lurid fashion. This is what we find in the two-reel Paragon "The Witness." Donald MacDonald is its producer, while the honors for the story go to Anthony W. Coldewey. The chief characters of the play have been impersonated by Dorothy Davenport, Felix Modjeska and Lee Hill, good work being also done by other players whose names are not known to us.

The origin of the trouble in the story is a difference which occurs between two men in a mining district in the West, a fight ensuing, which takes place in the gambling hall of one "Bull" Dawson between an Eastern man and Billy Rand, and the notorious gambler. Later, after Billy Rand's return to the East, "Bull" Dawson, who has in the meantime cast off Papita the dance hall girl, whom he has accused of betraying him, comes East also, starting a dishonest stock-selling proposition, into which he attempts to draw the father of Rand's college pal. The affair ends in the Westerner shooting young Dick Hale to prevent his interference in the matter. Rand is arrested, but on the case coming to court the evidence of Papita, who is now a telephone operator in the same city in which the Hales live, and who has heard the conversation and the report of the pistol over the 'phone, the receiver of which has been knocked from the table in the Hale home at the time of the murder clears him, and the real murderer, drawn to the court room from curiosity, is placed in custody.

The production is an exceptionally good one, and lives up to the appellation "decidedly distinctive" placed on their output by the Kriterion Service. The situations of the story are good, the action is brisk, and the photographic effects are excellent. Many attractive sets, exterior and interior, have been chosen for the filming of this production.

CLAUDE FLEMMING AND MONTAGUE LOVE WITH WORLD FILM CO.

Claude Flemming, the Australian actor and singer, whose last Broadway engagement was in support of Fritzi Scheff in "The Pretty Mrs. Smith" at the Casino, has succumbed to the lure of the motion picture and has been engaged by the World Film Co. to play the leading male roles in several forthcoming films of importance. At the present time he is playing the leading part in "Hearts in Exile," in which Clara Kimball Young is being featured.

Mr. Flemming was one of the principals in "The Merry Countess," which had such a long run at the Casino two seasons ago.

Montagu Love, the well-known English actor, who supported Cyril Maude in "Grumpy" last season at Wallack's theater, has been engaged by the World Film Co. to play important parts in plays now in preparation. Mr. Love has just closed an engagement with Frances Starr in "The Secret" and was at once secured by the World Film Co.

Last summer Mr. Love played in the London production of "Grumpy" and was also in "Monna Vanna" at the Haymarket theater.

Augustus Phillips, Pioneer

He Is the First of the Screen Favorites to Appear for the Benefit of the Actors' Fund.

AS THE FIRST Screen Club member to appear on any stage for the benefit of the Actors' Fund of America, Augustus Phillips, the Edison leading man, made an earnest plea at the Crescent Theater, One Hundred and Sixty-eighth street and Boston Road, New York, Saturday night, February 6, where he appeared personally, the occasion being made more interesting by the program, comprising Edison plays in which he appeared.

Mr. Phillips, in an enthusiastically received speech, spoke of the fact that the actors, who proverbially were open hearted and always among the first to respond in case of need, were now for the first time making an appeal for the infirm and needy in their own folds.

Mr. Phillips also told of the historic house and scenes shown in the Edison "Midnight Ride of Paul Revere," the play being filmed, in part, in Paul Revere's own house. In that film Mr. Phillips appears as the dashing Paul Revere.

Augustus Phillips.

It is now three years since Mr. Phillips joined his fortunes with Edison films, which, by the way, are the only films in which he ever appeared. His success was immediate, as he had an excellent ground work and experience on the stage. His work is always characterized by an intense sincerity, genuine appreciation of finely drawn light and shade in his characterization, which, with his mobile face, never fails to register with marked effect. His "swan song" appearance on the stage, before motion pictures called him, was with Cohan & Harris's "Miss Ananias." One of Mr. Phillips' finest characterizations on the stage was as Jules Beaubien, the French-Canadian, in "The Wolf."

Mr. Phillips's first engagement was with his brother, Philip Phillips, at eighteen years of age, and later at the head of his own stock company which toured the Middle West. Coming east, he then spent seven years with a well-known stock company in Brooklyn, in leads, and then three years in New York at the Fifth Avenue and Lincoln Square theater stock. In a season with the Alcazar Stock Company in San Francisco, he was called upon to play Henry Miller's part in "The Great Divide" but a short time after Miller's appearance in that city. The test was severe, but the press was unanimous that Phillips's characterization did not suffer thereby.

In short, Mr. Phillips has played everything from Uncle Tom to Othello and Svengali. Although Mr. Phillips has appeared mostly in straight leads in Edison films, and had added to his film popularity as a result, he likes best to play character parts—and his work as the grasping Hebrew in the Edison "The Stone Heart" came as a surprise in its dramatic simplicity of strength. Mr. Phillips has appeared in innumerable Edison films and whenever he does appear the picture is the better thereby, for his personality is felt at his entrance into the scene.

Mr. Phillips has appeared with equal success in comedies as in dramas, and the finish he imparts even to his comedian parts but accentuate the humor and his versatility.

GLADYS HULETTE, PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT.

Miss Gladys Hulette, one of the brightest ornaments of the Edison studios, is busy preparing a two-reel drama written by herself, entitled "Jean." Little Miss Hulette is most prolific with her pen and has given some good stories to the screen, and is being featured in many films which will shortly be released.

A WELL DEVISED story, in which the heroine is permitted to do something rather than stand around and wait until others do things for her, "On the Stroke of Twelve" is a step in the right direction. Two methods that pall on the audience are the accidental discovery of the guilty man and a confession of guilt to save the final situation. The easiest way of story writing is along the lines of least resistance, there being none in a mind incapable of solving problems, so the amateur makes the artistic blunder of arbitrary solution to the utter disappointment of the audience. Gertie plucks up spirit when the man she loves is about to be convicted of murder because of overwhelming circumstantial evidence, and her solution satisfies a natural demand for justice while it is melodramatically effective.

The story starts with a triangle of Gertie and two suitors. Tucker, the favored one, a lawyer, and Cooper, the villainous one, the first winning by love, the other attempting the impossible, intimidation, so far as any intelligent American girl is concerned. Bad blood is aroused between the men one night after the lawyer has brought Gertie home from the theater. Tucker overhears the threat made by Cooper and expresses bitterness after the attorney has gone. Tucker and Gertie are standing near a grandfather's clock at the stroke of twelve and they part soon after. The lawyer is murdered that night. His body is discovered in the morning and near it, pistol in hand, lies Tucker, unconscious from the results of a violent struggle. The bullet which killed the attorney passed through his watch and stopped it at twelve.

While it is not entirely safe to assume that the watch was going and was perfectly regulated at the time it was stopped, the chances in favor of Tucker's innocence send Gertie on a very intelligent errand, that of ascertaining if the lawyer had a fierce enemy capable of committing murder. Her work results in discovery of the criminal, but its interest would have been more intense if no clue had been given in advance to the audience. A fault of construction clearly indicates the true murderer, almost from the outset, a method that is far from modern. It is ancient theatrical preparation to indicate two men who might commit the crime, exculpate one and expect the audience to be in doubt about the other. That one little fault caused an otherwise interesting story to drag in its later development. Mr. Collins should make his big ensembles, such as the court room scene, deeper to be more impressive, but his treatment on the whole indicates progress in the right direction. Aside from the charming heroine, honors go to Duncan McRae as the penniless inventor. His characterization was effective in that it portrayed the workings of his mind and heart.

Edward Earle, the Edison Leading Man

THE REMARKABLE stage presence and finished performances of Edward Earle have often been commented upon as marvelous for "one so young." But in point of years of hard-earned experience that only can make the artist of delineation, he is quite a veteran of the stage where he played many parts and won his spurs, years ago, before his advent into motion pictures.

Favored by nature with clean-cut, classic features his cool force of character, leavened with an unobtrusive pleasing personality, have enabled him to register characters on photoplayers' patrons memory in a way that spells more than mere popularity.

Edward Earle.

Sixteen years ago, in Toronto, Canada, where he was born, he one day stopped Lester Lonergan on the street and struck him for "a job." Amused at the youngster's initiative, Lonergan gave young Earle a good speaking part in the Valentine Stock Company, in comedy. The boy made good.

Deeply flattered by being made the understudy of the whole company in "The Dairy Farm," his next venture, he gained experience thick and fast, for the actors somehow were always quitting and throwing the job onto the young Thespian. In this way, it was not long before Earle was playing, at one time or another, every part in the play.

Then with Tim Murphy, in one night stands, and with William H. Thompson, in "The Bishop's Move," Earle's first New York engagement came with Henrietta Crossman and later Bertha Galland in "Sweet Kitty Bellairs." Nearly a year was then spent in vaudeville when he joined Mary Mannering in the original cast of "Glorious Betty." He was chosen for the original company presenting "The Shepherd King" at the Knickerbocker Theater, after which his versatility and ability found vent in the Augustin Daly Musical Company. Mr. Earle later appears with James T. Powers, in "The Blue Moon," two seasons with Marie Cahill, in "Boys and Betty," and then with De Wolfe Hopper, in "The Matinee Idol." Mr. Earle's last stage appearance was with Ina Claire and Clifton Crawford, in "The Quaker Girl."

He was with the Famous Players and Pathe before he went to Edison where his graphic power is shown in admirable restraint in well-remembered pictures as "The Unopened Letter," where he ranges from a boy to a character old man; in "The Hand of Horror" and "The Lost Melody." As Vance Coleman in the "Olive's Opportunities" series, Mr. Earle has given one of these sharply outlined, pleasing characterizations that have stood out, though the situation often of itself did not afford an easy delineation. Even in melodramatic plays, he imparts a quiet force of character agreeably in contrast to the overdone, thrashabout characterizations of less accomplished players.

RECORD CROWD SEES "DU BARRY" AT SUMNER THEATER.

What is probably a record in attendance is that made by Julien Loeb, who operates the big Sumner theater, Brooklyn, New York. The attraction was George Kleine's "Du Barry," which has already broken attendance records in several Manhattan houses. Mr. Loeb turned away enough people to fill his theater twice and was compelled to run a midnight show to accommodate the late comers. The Sumner is one of the best conducted houses in Brooklyn, and Mr. Loeb's success with "Du Barry" is a splendid testimonial to his own business initiative, as well as the drawing power of the subject.

"The Bachelor's Romance"

John Emerson, in Four-Part Famous Players Subject, Gives Good Interpretation of Quaint Character.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

IT IS an interesting interpretation John Emerson gives us in his portrayal of the young-old man whose mild adventures are depicted in "The Bachelor's Romance," the four-part subject released by the Famous Players on February 11. Mr. Emerson finely draws the character of David Holmes, the retiring, woman-fearing man, to whom marriage seems so far away. Chief in his support is Lorraine Huling as Sylvia, the ward of David. Miss Huling, who has been seen before in Famous Players pictures, has a pleasing personality. Maggie Fisher, as Aunt Clem, to whose care is intrusted by David the child so suddenly thrust into his quiet life, is one of the figures of the story. She finely typifies the housewife of the small community—strict in her ideals and as warm in her affection as her outward aspect is frigid.

There is nothing sensational in "The Bachelor's Romance." It is a story of a bachelor, a literary man, into whose heart slowly creeps the girl for whose upbringing he had declined the direct responsibility. For three reels the interest depends much on the character work of Mr. Emerson. The last part is where most of the action lies, and in this division of the story there is appeal as we see the guardian and the ward gradually but surely being brought to an understanding.

The opening of the story is of the office of David. We see him struggling to avoid the women callers. Then comes to his home the child of whom he is to be the guardian. The unnamed little player by her work arouses the interest and the sympathy of the onlooker. When Sylvia has grown up she has as a suitor a young man who is a competitor for a ten-thousand-dollar literary prize. David is the judge to whom has fallen the decision as to the winner. After David has determined that "The Bachelor's Romance" is the best story, he learns by accident the identity of the author. Not knowing who is judging his play, the young man asks David if he may have the hand of Sylvia in the event of his winning. David, who already has been unsuccessful in surrendering his task, reluctantly consents. Then comes the inward struggle to decide according to his convictions and against the dictates of his heart. It is the young woman who with true feminine determination and skill brings about the situation where she rests in the arms of David. She is obliged to simulate a fall from a cliff to accomplish it, but the scheme works out just exactly as she had planned.

MAKOTO INOKUCHI IN SELIG CHARACTER PARTS.

Makoto Inokuchi, the Japanese actor, so successful in comedy character work, has gone to Los Angeles, Cal., where he will undertake character parts in Selig Polyscope Company Pictureplays. Mr. Inokuchi is a graduate of Princeton University, Class of 1908. Among the dramatic productions in which he has appeared are: "Paid in Full," "The Daughter of Heaven," and "Bought and Paid For." He has also been very successful in motion picture work.

Jack Hopkins

FROM the pulpit to the stage is such a common jump that Jack Hopkins is not entitled to any special distinction because he studied for the ministry. The fact is mentioned merely to put him under his proper classification of 6-b-927. He never was—and isn't a regular minister, but he has been three and a half kinds of actor, and two kinds of director—full and assistant. Seeing that he only drinks soda, this classification will be understood to mean that he has put on pictures alone, and has assisted other full directors. He also worked with the Colonial company.

Jack Hopkins.

He started his career of crime as a regular comedian with the Lubin players under Arthur D. Hotaling. He was selected for this position both on account of his ability, and because he was a brother of Mae Hotely, who married Mr. Hotaling some time ago. He later obtained some good positions as comedian on the strength of his work, and without being related to any one in the company, and made good in the whole gamut from slapstick to polite or parlor comedies. He is one of the few men with soulful eyes and long hair who will stand for a seltzer siphon in a comedy instead of starting to talk an argument about the time he played dramatic leads. And the harder the work, the harder he works. Versatile is his middle name, but he was not baptized that way and so he does not use it. He has worked as lead with almost as many feature companies as there have been organized in a single prosperous month, but they cannot be listed here because he lost his card catalogue. He has also played in a number of the regular releasing companies and is at present with the Edison players in Ashley Miller's company. He really is that scarce person, an all around actor who can change from comedy to drama and back again with the changing of his dress, and in his three years in harness he has done everything from second lead in "Seats of the Mighty" next to Lionel Barrymore, and leads in many feature productions of Lubin and Ramo slapstick comedies. Few on this side of the water ever saw the Ramo comedies, but he was in lots of Lubin pictures before he changed his boarding place and company at the same time and came back to New York. He is a member of the Screen Club; one of the early members and rests content with that.

GLADYS HANSON IN "THE CLIMBERS."

Miss Gladys Hanson, the Broadway star who has been leading woman for Daniel Frohman, E. H. Sothern, Kyrle Bellew, Henry Miller, David Belasco and other prominent producers, will be featured in Clyde Fitch's "The Climbers," which the Lubin Company is making into a feature photoplay at the studio in Philadelphia. The scenario for the production was written by Clay M. Greene and the play will be directed by Barry O'Neil.

"The Climbers" is a powerful society drama and in the character of Blanche Sterling, orgininally played by Amelia Bingham, Miss Hanson has a strong emotional part particularly fitting her temperament and one which will give her a wide scope for the display of her remarkable ability.

Among the well-known Lubin players who will appear with Miss Hanson are George Soule Spencer, Jack Standing, Charles Brandt, Ruth Bryan, Rosetta Brice, Peter Lang and Ferdinand Tidmarsh.

FENWICK AND JUDELS PLAY LEADS IN KLEINE'S "COMMUTERS."

George Kleine announces that Charles Judels has been engaged to play opposite Irene Fenwick in the Kleine filming of the popular James Forbes comedy, "The Commuters." Director Fitzmaurice is busily at work with his star cast at the Kleine studio, 11 East Fourteenth street, where the big film is being rapidly completed.

"Unhidden Treasures"

Two-Reel Victor Comedy of Unusual Qualifications, and Featuring Mary Fuller.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

WHEN a picture sets one guessing it usually has some unusual qualifications. In the present instance it does not indicate that what the general outcome of the picture may be, sets one guessing, but it does mean that there may be a question as to its individual value. This question is set at rest when the distance that lends enchantment has given the production a pleasing setting in the imagination. It is by no means without its defects, but when all is said and done we are bound to confess that "with all 'its' faults 'we love' it still."

Mary Fuller in the lead has her usual fund of good humor, and continues to impress us with the fact that her comedy merits are as deeply rooted as her ability to play heavy emotional roles, of which we have heretofore been able to judge.

The supporting cast in the production have not been placed about the star to aid merely in accentuating her brilliancy, but rather as pillars of strength. Matt Moore and Charles Ogle are among the more substantial of said pillars of the play. The story is a simple comedy creation, and not at all a wonderful creation. Raymond K. Shrock has written it and Lorrimer Johnson has produced it, and it must be said that the latter has been done very acceptably. As before said, the production is not flawless, and once in a while an inconsistency creeps in, which it is felt might have been avoided. For instance, we are not sure just how at the estate known as "Bacon Gables," where the two young people, as yet unacquainted with one another, have been sent on a wild goose chase after alleged treasures, the young woman is aware that the young man is after the same thing as she is. The hidden treasures are themselves; guardian and father having chosen this method to bring about marriage between them, they having previously refused in the most obstinate manner to consent to meeting one another by arrangement of the contriving parties.

The story, an unlikely, although not an impossible one, has originality. The same quality has been demonstrated in the producing of the picture. It also has an individuality of atmosphere which is felt throughout.

HE SAW THE POINT TOO LATE.

Arthur Ashley is some soldier. A Thanhouser Company was taking a picture over at Fort Schuyler and utilizing some of Uncle Sam's boys. Director Carroll Fleming saw a chance to get a good "closeup" of Mr. Ashley, who plays a lieutenant in the new picture, marching with regular troops. A whisper to a lieutenant and Mr. Ashley was in the position of the regular officer. The camera was grinding away and Director Fleming was happy. Ahead was a barbed wire fence. The company of which Mr. Ashley was in "command" was making straight for the obstacle. The soldiers never flinched—they didn't know their lieutenant had given way to a picture actor. When the distance between the marching company and the fence was too small to permit the customary "fours left," a grizzled sergeant, convinced that the affair was up to him, shouted out a command, just as Mr. Ashley advised his men to "do as you blame please, and hurry."

Vivian Martin

VIVIAN MARTIN, who makes her third appearance as a World Film star, in "The Arrival of Perpetua," to be released on March 15, has won a remarkable reputation as a motion picture actress in a short space of time. It was in "The Wishing Ring," based upon Owen Davis' play of the same name, that she made her debut. In this charming idyll of English life of a past century Miss Martin easily showed the possession of histrionic gifts, which, added to the utmost daintiness of face and form, at once established her as one of the most refined and beautiful of ingenues in filmdom.

Vivian Martin.

Her success in "The Wishing Ring" was followed by her appearance with Lew Fields in the World Film's "Old Dutch," in which she took the part of Violet Streusand, the daughter of the old inventor, whose adventures and misfortunes are the bases of play and film. In this offering Miss Martin was pretty to look at and she acted with great charm and earnestness.

"The Arrival of Perpetua" is the first production of Mons. Chautard, the new director of the World Film Corporation, who has but recently arrived from Paris to take up his new duties, and it is expected that in this photoplay she will make still further advances in popularity.

Miss Martin's experiences on the legitimate stage included appearances with Charles Warner in "Drink," and with Andrew Mack. She was in the children's company that Charles Frohman put out to interpret the Barrie masterpiece "Peter Pan." Work with W. H. Crane in "Father and the Boys" and Wallace Eddinger, "The Only Son," was followed by appearances in "Officer 666," "Stop Thief," "The Call of Youth" and "The High Cost of Loving."

Miss Martin comes of an old English acting family, and her future work in the screen world will surely be watched with the greatest interest.

VITAGRAPH PLAYERS IN TEXAS.

The Vitagraph players in Texas send back glowing letters as to the joys of living at an army post, but evidently pleasure has not been allowed to interfere with work, for the company has already completed a strong one reel picture, "His Bunkie." As may be guessed from the title, the picture is of a military subject, and Darwin Karr and Eleanor Woodruff are said to have an unusually good opportunity in the leading roles. It is interesting to note how these two players came to be chosen to play leads with the company that was sent "to the end of the earth." Darwin Karr gained the important post by reason of his success in the previous military pictures taken in collaboration with the army officials and shown at the Vitagraph Theater, but with Eleanor Woodruff it was different. She had just joined the Vitagraph Company, coming from Pathe, when the Texas trip was decided upon and the Brooklyn firm's officials had not yet had an opportunity of viewing her work in a Vitagraph picture on the screen. But they had kept a close eye on her studio rehearsals and their conclusions may be guessed from her final selection to head the Texas company.

"The Country Boy"

Another "Broadway Success" Done Into Motion Pictures by the Jesse L. Lasky Corporation.

Reviewed by W. Stephan Bush.

IF CHARACTERIZATION alone can carry a film play into popular favor no one need have any fears about the feature of "The Country Boy." Every character in the play is absolutely real. As to the men and women of the city as portrayed in this film, we know them at first sight and really meet them almost every day. The contrast to the men and women of the country is as striking as any contrast ought to be. Pathos and humor are well and thickly scattered through the four reels. There is only one thing lacking, or almost lacking, and that is the plot. It might furnish forth a short story in a magazine, but it can hardly be accepted as a substitute for a screen-drama. What there is of it is skillfully woven, but it is as thin as a spider's web.

"The country boy," a most likable sort of a fellow, well portrayed by Marshall Neilan, comes to the city to accept a position as clerk in an office. He "leaves a girl behind him" in the country and immediately upon his arrival in the city falls in love with a chorus girl. He neglects his work and is discharged. Two fellow boarders with whom he had cultivated friendly relations, win a large sum of money at roulette and the three of them, i. e., the country boy, the newspaper man and the ticket speculator, start for the country boy's home town where they launch a newspaper. It is all splendidly done, but one cannot help feeling that if there had been fewer digressions in the early part, and if the crowning adventure in play had been "painted out" in greater detail and with a little more plausibility the play as a whole would have been the gainer.

In the creation of the proper atmosphere the pictured version is beyond all praise. The scenes in the boarding house, at the stage entrance, in the chorus girl's dressing room, in the restaurant were all true to life in every detail. At times one gets the impression that things are taking place a little bit too far away from the camera and that more "close-up" work might have added perceptibly to the strength of the plot as well as of the characterization.

Splendid work has been done by every member of the cast, but three characters deserve special mention outside of the man in the leading part. Loyola O'Connor was a most pathetic and convincing mother, Florence Dagmar made a charming "Jane Belknap" and Dorothy Green acquitted herself finely as the chorus girl. The chorus girl was a most finished piece of acting and betrayed talents of a more than ordinary calibre. H. B. Carpenter gave a very clever impersonation of Merkle, the newspaper man, and Edward Lewis was "to the manner born" as the wide-awake but somewhat cynical city-bred ticket speculator.

CRAIG KENNEDY NIGHT AT UNIVERSITY CLUB.

The University Club of Brooklyn had a "Craig Kennedy" night on Saturday, February 13, and the Glee Club of the organization sang a song especially composed on "The Exploits of Elaine." Among the guests were Arthur B. Reeve and Charles Goddard, collaborators in the authorship of the drama, Arnold Daly, who stars in it, Jas. K. Hackett, Will Foster, the artist, and E. A. McManus, of the International News.

William F. Haddock

WHEN asked as to an approximate statement as to his age, William F. ("Silent Bill") Haddock remarked that he was born between the last days of the Civil War and the opening of the Spanish-American conflict. Portsmouth, N. H., was the place. Mr. Haddock was educated at the Boston Grammar School and Boston High School and Burdette College.

Mr. Haddock's first theatrical engagement was with the Castle Square Stock Company in Boston. Later he went on the road with "The Man from Mexico," "Sign of the Cross," "Lovers' Lane," "Alice of Old Vincennes," and other well-known stage productions. For four years he was stage manager for Edward E. Rose, the dramatist.

W. F. Haddock.

For the past seven years Mr. Haddock has been making pictures, and he has put over many good ones. He began his screen work with the Edison Company. He has also produced pictures for Melies, Eclair, and the Holland Film Company of Boston. He made "Paid in Full" for All Star and "The Banker's Daughter" for the Life Photo. In the course of these seven years he has made pictures in all parts of the United States, in Canada, in Mexico and in Cuba.

Mr. Haddock is a charter member of the Screen Club, of which for one term he was recording secretary. By his associates in the photoplayers' organization he is best known as "Silent Bill." The significance of the appellation may rest in the four-floor reverberating manner in which collectively he greets his fellow members upon entering the doors; otherwise there would seem to be no gentle sarcasm in the nickname. "Silent Bill" is strong for pinochle in leisure moments, and, in spite of the fact that he comes from New England, has often been known boldly to assail at rotation pool players who are conceded his superior in skill. He is always known as a congenial companion—and as a man who knows the business of picture production from all angles.

VITAGRAPH THEATER PROGRAM.

A story in which the mysticism of the Orient sways the lives of its principal characters, entitled "The Breath of Araby," will be the feature picture of an attractive program at the Vitagraph theater for the week commencing Sunday, February 21. Helen Gardner will be seen in the character of Clothilde, the wife of a wealthy aristocrat, who is loved by many, but really loves but one, whom she cannot attract, is given an opportunity to display her power of emotional expression and gives a convincing portrayal of one of the most trying characters an actress is called upon to assume. "The Breath of Araby" was written and produced by Charles L. Gaskill with a cast supporting Miss Gardner that includes L. Rogers Lytton, Paul Scardon, Templer Saxe, J. Herbert Frank and numerous others.

The shorter pictures of the program are of more than passing interest, as they not only introduce many of the Vitagraph stars, but embrace subjects in which the comedy element predominates. They include: "Two and Two," a one-part comedy story; "A Man of Parts," a riotous comedy in one part; "Peggy of Fifth Avenue," a comedy-drama in one part, and a special dramatic feature in two parts, "Roselyn."

"DID you ever see anything like it?" said a puritanical lady pointing out a fashionable New York woman who was decollette to the breasts. "No," said her escort, "not since I was weaned." Whether or not you have seen something like "Shorty Among the Cannibals" since you were weaned, I never did, and that is going some. I was even puzzled to subtitle this review. Shorty's experience is merely that of a dream, a nightmare brought on by assiduous reading of "Robinson Crusoe," but that is all a minor consideration. What he experiences has more coherence than the average dream, but all probabilities of time, place and circumstance are so cheerfully violated that we recognize something akin to our own myth-making during sleep.

Dreams are true while they last, and Shorty takes all that comes to him with that distressing seriousness we instantly recognize, the acute distress from which we waken with gasping relief. Shorty falls into the hands of pirates, while in dreamland, and is made to serve under a murderous cook in the galley. He devises a scheme of double revenge on cook and pirate chief for the injuries they have done him, and is fiendishly successful; but he is compelled to fire the vessel in order to escape. All this done aboard ship in the open sea. While they are still unaware of their peril, the murderous crew chase Shorty all over the vessel, out on the bowsprit, and back by the martingale, up the shrouds, out on the topsail yards, until he swings monkey-like back and forth at the end of a loose sail sheet, knocking pirates down like so many tenpins as he sweeps the deck, a human pendulum.

Shorty is caught, however, and compelled to walk the plank, but, at the crucial moment, fire is discovered and he turns disadvantage into advantage with a skill some European generals might study. He escapes from the burning ship and is cast away on a tropical island inhabited by opera-bouffe cannibals. His experiences with them constitute a clever satire on theatrical moving pictures. In one case a well-aimed spear is driven straight through Shorty, but he survives, as the villain does a volley from cowboys' revolvers at short range. One hair-raising escape after another leads to a desperate canoe chase, one very much more exciting than the chase of any melodrama yet shown, involving actual skill and actual peril.

He is rescued by Robinson Crusoe and presented to "Friday," but this brings him no luck. After a desperate battle with the cannibals he is recaptured and put in the pot to make cowboy stew, when he wakes up. "Shorty Among the Cannibals" is naturally funny, and will, therefore, appeal to all classes and conditions of men, women and children.

Animated Jack Cohn

AT THE Imp-Universal studio, 573 Eleventh avenue, New York City, there is a moving picture pioneer, a man who has done much to uplift the business, but who has been content all along to stay in the shadow while the other fellow spends his time and energy basking in the spotlight. This man is Jack Cohn, editor of the Animated Weekly news pictorial.

It would take more space than is available here to tell all that Jack Cohn has done for the moving picture business. Through his able management the Animated Weekly has sprung to the fore in the field of news pictorials. No event of any importance "breaks" in any part of the world, from the fever-infested jungles of the Orinoco to the frozen plains of the Arctic and Antarctic but some one of Jack Cohn's camera reporters is "on the job" to take it. The organization he has built up is so well drilled that nothing gets by it. Some of the most recent "scoops" or "beats" include the New York subway disaster, the Italian earthquake and the bombardment of Scarborough and Hartlepool, England, by the German fleet.

Jack Cohn.

Jack Cohn has seen service in almost every branch of the manufacturing end and has been with Carl Laemmle for many years. He has worked up successively through the various divisions until he has reached his present position. In addition to being editor of the Animated Weekly, Jack Cohn is also the editor-in-chief of the Eastern Universal. Every foot of film that is produced in the East by the Universal passes through his hands for final inspection. His is rather a delicate job as it requires considerable experience and knowledge of every branch of the film business to be able to keep a one-reel story within a thousand feet and not hurt the story. Also this is one job of which the public is not cognizant but which nevertheless plays an important part in giving the fans what they want.

ALLIANCE PRODUCERS AND EXCHANGEMEN MEET.

Monday, February 15, saw the second of the series of conferences recently projected by President Cobe at the Alliance Films Corporation.

Among the exchangemen present were: Felix Feist, of the Celebrated Players Exchange of Chicago; A. A. Weiland of Pittsburgh, Herman Rifkin of Eastern Feature Film Co., while M. H. Blackwell of the Favorite Players and Frank J. Baum of Oz Film Co., New York, represented the producers contributing to the Alliance Programme.

Mr. Cobe, at the termination of the meeting, said: "This is the second of the get-together meetings, and I am highly gratified at the results. It is from this interchange of ideas between the exchangeman and the producer that we form our plans.

"We hope by this method to bridge the gulf which has hitherto kept the producer and the exchangemen from understanding each other, and that the production of better and more successful pictures will result."

KLEINE AMERICAN SUBJECTS BOOK HEAVILY.

That George Kleine's new American-made subjects are meeting with unprecedented enthusiasm is shown by the unusual quality of advance bookings received for "Du Barry" and "Stop Thief," by the various Kleine offices. The usual number of working positives has been doubled for "Officer 666," "Du Barry" and "Stop Thief" and from present indications an additional supply will be necessary to care for the steadily growing demands of the latter subject.

"The Wheels of Justice"

A Frankly Melodramatic Four Reel Production Released by the Vitagraph Company.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

THIS production is at times so frankly melodramatic that we see a vision of the director's smile faintly outlined on the screen. There is "Tug Riley," the toughest convict in the prison, a hulky, blustering brute. Mention his mother to him and he melts immediately, giving utterance to this sweet and homely sentiment: "I had a mudder onct." Most of the titles are in the supposed pathos de Bowery. It is in four reels and was the feature last week at the Vitagraph Theater.

What lifts the production above the commonplace and the conventional is the acting of Eulalie Jensen, who gave a very effective portrayal of the adventuress. I do not remember that she sat on the table with her legs crossed or that she smoked cigarettes. Instead, she impersonated with unvarying skill a dissatisfied scheming woman married to an older man and eager to gratify the cravings of her heart by looking for a more sincere and natural love. She carried off all the tense and big moments in the play. She had the admiration and at times the sympathy of the audience in all her work.

While here and there the action moved, as it were, to the rhythm of melodramatic ragtime, the plot on the whole was decidedly strong. It grew in strength toward the end when events crowded upon each other's heels. The final denouement was original in conception and very cleverly executed. The play abounds in thrills, which carry atmosphere. The scenes in the prison may have been too conventional and too plainly melodramatic, but the escape from the prison was quite realistic, and the chase was genuinely exciting. The escaping convicts had "commandeered" an auto in their flight. The road by which they traveled lay across a drawbridge. The tenders of the drawbridge are notified of the escape of the convicts and they swing the bridge into midstream. The escaping prisoners, intent upon watching their pursuers, do not notice the open drawbridge before them until it is too late to stop the auto, which, with its striped freight, plunges into the river. This scene is very realistic.

Like all good old-fashioned melodramas, the play points the ancient moral that virtue will always win in the end, while vice and wickedness are punished in this world as well as in the next. It must be added, too, that the moral is not pointed in any tame or lame fashion, but that it comes with a crash. It is a real final "punch."

"The Caprices of Kitty"

Elsie Janis Plays in Bosworth Five-Reel Offering.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

WRITTEN by Elsie Janis herself, this five-reel Bosworth offering gives the very young leading lady a chance to play the kind of character for which she is famous—a romping Miss who can climb a tree and then into a window in a way to make most small boys jealous. The picture is merely a series of episodes strung together to tell a continuous tale without real dramatic effectiveness, but filled with the liveliness of her own buoyant spirits. It tires a little; for the scheme of its development brings in too many things with scant human interest or reality. The story doesn't convince strongly.

The opening episode is set at a school for girls and the heroine is not to be found. A note tells that she is out with her new automobile. A tire bursts and she has a time wondering how this new tire—she can hardly lift it, for it is a big one—is to be placed on the rim. It need not be said that this heroine is Elsie Janis. The school girl's name is Kit. Kit soon has an offer of assistance made by a dashing man (Courtenay Foote) who quite fills her mental picture of hero as set forth in a book "Love at First Sight." To get back to the school building without the teachers knowing how late she is, she climbs a tree and then clambers in through a window to her room. The next time she goes out, she is accompanied by a chaperone whom she contrives to leave by the roadside for a time. Circumstances bring it about that the man is needed to take both her and the teacher back to the school in his automobile and from this comes an engagement. But her guardian makes her sign an agreement not to see her new fiance for six months. She disregards it and manages to see him several times in disguise through which he himself doesn't always see. It turns out that by her father's will, she would have lost her fortune otherwise since it would have shown that she preferred the money to the lover. She has proved that she doesn't and so her guardian turns over to her the fortune left by her father.

A LETTER FROM CHARLES H. WESTON.

The Moving Picture World has received a letter from Charles H. Weston, of the Weston-Finn Film Publishing Company, 225 Queens Road, Bayswater, West, London, England, in which the writer expresses the annoyance caused him by the confusion of his name with that of another American of a somewhat similar name, who, the former says, last summer came into collision with the authorities. Mr. Weston was at one time a producer for the Reliance and Majestic companies and organized the Punch comedy company which he took to Florida. He had other motion picture affiliations as well as a long connection with the legitimate stage. In England Mr. Weston is now equal partner in the making of Regent, Piccadilly and Pussy Foot subjects.

"Through the Enemy's Lines"

Dramatic Episode of War Told in Pictures by the Great Northern Players.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

IN ALL respects neutral, even to flags that designate no existing nation and uniforms that might be worn with equal impunity by Germans, or Frenchmen or Russians, this four-part war picture, produced by Great Northern, has no propaganda to present, no argument to enforce. It was made in Norway, probably before the outbreak of European hostilities, and is especially pertinent now merely because audiences have an abnormal interest in exploding shells, rattling artillery and fields strewn with the dead and dying. With a slight flight of fancy one may see Belgian trenches, and forget that the guns are not loaded and that the men sprawling in the dirt will walk away when the director is through with them. Regarded in this fanciful fashion, the picture is very much a thing of today and vividly real.

A commissioned army officer is credited with the direction of the maneuvers of the two hostile armies, the bayonet charges of infantry, the shelling of positions, the attacks and repulses of troops that march and fight like genuine soldiers. Locations for the engagements—broad plains broken by shallow trenches over which the men level their guns, country roadways and the banks of rivers—are excellent, and in the quest of realistic atmosphere a quantity of powder was burned. Each reel has its battle and its thrill that may be appreciated with, or without the story, a passable bit of fiction of a character tested and found adequate in war films.

Lieutenant Oscar is captured by the enemy. He escapes and gives himself up again to save his father who is sentenced to die in his stead. But Oscar's sweetheart, Ellinor, remembers the promise of aid in time of need, given by the opposing general, because the lieutenant once saved his life. She rides to the enemy's lines that she may remind the general of his promise, and together they race back in an automobile while Oscar is standing against a white wall, facing a row of guns. The guns, needless to say, are almost, but not quite, discharged.

Scene from "Through the Enemy's Lines" (Great Northern).

A. Blutecher, playing the part of the young officer, has the carriage and manner of an army man, Ebba Thomsen, the Ellinor of the story, makes a pleasing heroine and a brave one, as the fall from her horse on the cross-country ride testifies. For the rest, it is a satisfactory cast; but the first appeal of the picture is in the battle scenes, rather than the story or the individual performances.

CENTRAL AFRICAN PICTURES AT PRINCESS.

Beginning Monday afternoon, at the Princess Theater, the first showing of the six reels taken in the heart of Central Africa will be an event of importance in scientific and natural history circles. The pictures were taken by James Barnes, explorer and war correspondent, who spent thirteen months in Africa under the auspices of the American Museum of Natural History. Accompanied by his moving picture operator, Cherry Kearton, and about one hundred native porters, Mr. Barnes started from Mombassa on the Indian Ocean and penetrated 4,000 miles across the Dark Continent, coming out on the Belgian Congo. About 1,400 miles of the route carried them along the exact route taken by Explorer Stanley in 1889.

"The Sign of the Rose"

Feature in Which George Beban Appears in His Favorite Role About Finished by Director Tom Ince.

UNLESS unforeseen conditions arise to destroy the smoothnes of the schedule to which he is clinging, Thomas H. Ince should establish a precedent for speed and celerity in the production and release of multiple-reel features. Such a statement is inspired by the fact that, according to reliable information, "The Sign of the Rose," which Mr. Ince is producing for the screen, will be ready for presentation within the next few weeks. Less than six weeks ago, George Beban arrived at Inceville and immediately went to work before the camera. This week there comes from the shores of the Pacific the announcement that the production is more than half-finished.

Prior to the noted actor's arrival, everything possible had been done to permit of a ready commencement of activities on the international masterpiece, and to this fact, in a great measure, is ascribed the reason for such unprecedented swiftness in motion picture manufacture. Supplemental to this, however, is the careful method employed in his work by the director-general of the New York Motion Picture Corporation.

Scene from "The Sign of the Rose" (Kay-Bee).

In "The Sign of the Rose," Mr. Ince has tackled a job of mammoth proportions. The piece, it will be remembered, was used by George Beban as the vehicle for his remarkable triumphs of the vaudeville stages of England and America for five years. So internationally-popular did it become that Klaw and Erlanger produced it as a four-act play on Broadway and it is this version of it, with some revisions, that Mr. Ince is converting into a drama for the screen.

While the burden of the acting throughout the story rests on the shoulders of Mr. Beban, a strong cast is working in support of the celebrated star. Virtually the entire company of principals, in addition to Mr. Beban, was sent from New York to appear especially in the Ince production.

DID ANYTHING FUNNY EVER HAPPEN TO YOU?

Prizes totaling $500 will be given for the best stories of five hundred words each about the funniest event of your life. The $500 will be divided into four prizes, as follows: First prize, $175; second prize, $150; third prize, $100; fourth prize, $75.

Stories must be told in five hundred words or less. They will not be considered if longer. Put your name and address on a separate piece of paper, enclosing it in a plain sealed envelope, and put your manuscript and the plain envelope in another envelope which you will address to Contest Editor, Right-Off-the-Reel Page, Chicago Tribune. The contest will close at midnight of May 2.

The prize winning stories will be made into scenarios by the Selig Polyscope Company and will be produced at the Selig Company's earliest convenience.

The prize winning stories will be printed in the paper when a decision has been reached by the three judges, who are: William Lord Wright, George Fitch, the famous Peoria humorist, and B. L. T., the "funny man" of the Chicago Tribune.

The Selig Polyscope Company reserves the right to buy at market rates any stories aside from the prize winners that may seem desirable for production. No manuscripts will be returned.

No doubt many fresh and true situations will be turned up by this contest to show the freakishness of human nature.

Film Business Outlook Optimistic

So Says Jesse J. Goldburg Following Return from a Trip Covering the Entire Country in the Interest of the Life Photo Film.

MY TRIP, just completed, from coast to coast and from the Canadian border to the Gulf, has revealed a condition of affairs in the motion picture industry which one studiously sitting at his desk in New York could never possibly anticipate.

The object of my visit was essentially to determine the present condition and future prospects of the industry from the viewpoint of the producer, the exchangeman and the exhibitor, with the ultimate object in mind of definitely determining the policy with respect to the manner of disposing of the features of the Life Photo Film Corporation and to test out one of two theories: whether it were more profitable for my concern as well as the exchanges to release through a combination or program concern, or, on the other hand, whether it were wiser to contract direct with reputable, responsible exchanges, controlling the various territories in the country, for the output of features of the Life Photo Company.

In the first instance, it might be stated that the condition of the industry today can well be likened to that of a reptile shedding its skin. The industry is not, contrary to the reports of some uninformed individuals, in a chaotic state. The growth of the business has been so rapid, and so many innovations of magnitude and new departments crowding one upon the other have been inaugurated that within the past year manufacturers and exchangemen were in a continuous turmoil, not knowing exactly the growth or source of their output, the demarcation of territory or the price to be charged.

I took it upon myself to visit every large exchangeman, whether allied with a combination parent releasing concern, or independent, as well as every exhibitor operating a playhouse with a seating capacity of 900 or more, in the cities of Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Detroit, Chicago, Minneapolis, Kansas City, Denver, Salt Lake City, San Francisco, Los Angeles, El Paso, Dallas, New Orleans and Atlanta.

The present condition of the market briefly might be likened to a large structure, erected about a year, and finally settling. The future of the industry, from the standpoint of every one engaged in the business, is not alone decidedly optimistic, but plans are all over being arranged for a definite settled policy along these lines:

First.—The distribution of five-part features, adaptations from stage plays or popular novels, with a legitimate stage star, actor or actress featured in the leading roles.

Second.—To release these features in motion picture houses where the minimum price of admission, day or evening, is 10 cents.

Third.—A consistent policy of advertising appealing directly to the public, including the billing and posting of feature productions along the lines of legitimate attractions.

Fourth.—The elimination of flaring, sensational lithographs and the substitution of artistic high class posters.

Fifth.—The eradication of posters from "all over the front of the house" and the refined decoration or display in the lobbies of theaters.

Sixth.—The total elimination of false or misleading advertising matter.

With respect to the character of the productions that are in demand, the consensus of opinion appears to be that costume plays were the least attractive of all productions. The society drama, that teaches a moral as well as adorns a tale, is in greatest demand on the part of the public.

The demand on the part of the exchanges for features of high order is positively astounding. Regardless of the numerous programs on the market there appears to be an almost unlimited field for the sale of features on a state right basis.

It was with little or no difficulty that the Life Photo Film Corporation entered into contracts with the largest and most responsible exchangemen in the United States, providing for the delivery of features, one a month, for a year, covering every state in the Union, at prices so far in advance of those realized on productions of a similar character a year ago as almost to challenge belief.

Exchanges, however, appear to be more anxious to do business on a percentage basis, with a substantial advance on account to the manufacturer, than the purchase of productions outright on a state right basis. This indicates a healthy condition of affairs. It means that the exchangeman is willing to safeguard the producer by advancing on account of the percentage, and a partnership, is in effect formed, that compels the producer to deliver the best character of productions with the best of workmanship, and to assist the exchangeman and exhibitor in his scheme or medium of advertising, so as to create patronage on the part of the public, and, on the other hand, compels the exchangeman to use every endeavor on his part to book the productions at the highest possible terms, and with as little break in the number of bookings as possible.

The day of the fly-by-night concern, whether producer or exchangeman; of the cheap, sensational productions, of lying advertisements, of deception, of chicanery and territory jumping, is rapidly drawing to a close, if it has not already passed away.

The forecast of the future, if one might be so bold as to make it at this time, bids fair to be realized in this statement: that all present-day reputed feature manufacturers, whose organizations are not based on sound finances, and not pursuing its business with fidelity to business ethics, will, within the space of the next six months, be eliminated. Realizing that there are many such concerns, I might not be overstepping the mark to predict that of the numbers engaged in the producing business today, manufacturing features, not more than seven will be in existence at the close of this year in the United States.

The scale of admission to photoplay houses running features would be enlarged so as to eliminate the 5 cents admission fee. Censorship will have to be elevated to a consistent and workable theory throughout the entire country.

With respect to the medium of advertising, out of 38 of the largest exchanges in the country, 102 of the largest photoplay houses in the country and 58 individuals otherwise engaged in the various branches of the motion picture industries, such as publicity managers, motion picture supplymen, directors and cameramen, it was somewhat of a revelation to note that of all the publications, either exclusively devoted to motion pictures or running a separate department concerning the affairs of that industry, the Moving Picture World was read by all, the other trade papers and magazines being read and followed here and there, diminishing in popularity as the locality became further from New York City, conceded to be the motion picture center of the United States.

The columns that are read most, or looked upon with the greatest interest, might be indexed in the following order: First, under all circumstances, advertising matter! second, reviews of features; third, news items; fourth, editorials, and, last, technical articles.

To epitomize my impression gained and the lesson learned as the result of the trip, I can state, without fear of overshooting the mark, that the motion picture industry has in effect seen its natal hour, and that the future is replete with prospects so bright and conditions so favorable as to justify the most optimistic impressions.

Wilmington Theaters Defective

Inspector Says They Do Not Comply With Law—Mayor Orders Changes Made Immediately.

MAYOR HOWELL, of Wilmington, Del., at a conference recently with the members of the City Council told that body that Building Inspector Anderson reported to him that eight of the nine motion picture theaters in the City of Wilmington were not constructed in accordance with the law. Subsequent to the conference with the Council, Mayor Howell issued an order directing Inspector Anderson to call upon each one of the houses whose construction is in violation of the city regulations and request such improvements necessary to place them in conformity with the law. The responsible head of each one of the defective houses will be consulted and given a reasonable length of time in which to make the alterations indicated with a stipulation that if they are not completed within that time that the structure will be closed and must remain so until the necessary improvements are finished. To further impress upon the managers and owners that their theaters were improperly constructed the Mayor, following the conference with the Council, ordered his secretary to send a letter to the erring parties stating that the building inspector would call upon them and tell them what is to be done.

The building inspector will specify in writing his orders. There will be three copies of each specification made, one of which will be left with the responsible person at the theater to be altered, and the other two will be filed in the Mayor's and building inspector's offices.

"The Hound of the Baskervilles"

Film Version of Sir A. Conan Doyle's Novel Made by Pathe Freres Has Interesting Side.

Reviewed by M. I. MacDonald.

IT WOULD be impossible to base a film production on any of the sensational works of the novelist Sir A. Conan Doyle, without it being in some measure entertaining; nor can the excitement prevalent in the adventures of detective Sherlock Holmes fail to thrill the average human being to the very marrow of his bones. In choosing "The Hound of the Baskervilles" Pathe Freres can have made no mistake, for even though the film version of the story may once in a while miss a cog, or so far presume upon the author's rights as to interpolate a scene or situation of which the original story is not guilty, the production has evidently been robbed of very little if any of its weirdly thrilling characteristics.

The filming of the story on the continent, presumably in Germany, interferes to some extent with the English atmosphere intended to be portrayed. This is perhaps as noticeable in the mannerisms of some of the players as in any other way.

According to the film story Sir Henry Baskerville, upon the death of his uncle, whose estate he inherits, comes to Baskerville and falls a prey to the intrigues of Stapleton the caretaker of Baskerville and who, it later divulges, is the disgraced nephew of the deceased Sir Charles Baskerville seeking to gain possession of the estate. He it is who keeps the Great Dane in concealment, rumors of which have terrified the neighborhood; and he it is that intercepts the letter of Sir Henry to Sherlock Holmes, impersonating the famous detective himself. Later, however, the real Sherlock Holmes appears on the scene, and the events which occur when the great detective commences his investigation of Baskerville and its surroundings are as sensationally interesting as anything one would care to see. There is a marked similarity between the men playing Stapleton and Sherlock Holmes; the difference between them is just enough to explode the idea that one man may be doubling on the parts.

The production is an acceptable one, and where a spectator is unfamiliar with the story we cannot conceive that there could be any adverse criticism.

CHICAGO KRITERION EXCHANGE OPENS MARCH 1.

During the past week, arrangements were made for the opening of an exchange in Chicago which will handle exclusively the Kriterion Service. Messrs. Belford and Leverton, two well-known film men of the Windy City, are interested in this new venture. These gentlemen formerly operated the Lea-Bel Company, a concern dealing in feature films exclusively.

The entire third floor of the Schiller Building has been leased by the Chicago Kriterion Film Exchange. A large exhibition room is being installed, which will accommodate one hundred seats and other modern equipment, is being arranged for, so as to make this exchange as complete as possible.

The exchange will open on March 1 with several copies of each release that has been made by the Kriterion manufacturers. Advance exhibitions of Kriterion releases will be given each week in the Chicago exhibition room for the benefit of the theater owners in and about Chicago.

Rosetta Brice

MISS ROSETTA BRICE, of the Lubin Manufacturing Company, is titian-haired, ambitious, fond of outdoor life, inspired by months spent in the foothills of the Rocky Mountains, and only twenty-two years old. These attributes may not make a motion picture actress, but they go a long way toward it. Nearly all red-haired persons succeed, ambition force, success and love of the outdoors is almost essential to the player before the camera, and twenty-two — well, twenty-two means that one has a whole life left in which to realize all the hopes of childhood.

Rosetta Brice.

Miss Brice is a Washington girl although her birthplace is Sunbury, Pa., and she lived there for some years as a child. It was in Sunbury that she decided she wanted to go on the stage. For years Miss Brice could see but one path to success, the legitimate stage. When sixteen she played leads in a stock company, the name and place of which she is not so keen to talk about now, for they gave "two-a-day" performances, performances that meant swinging from the flies on ropes over terrifying chasms and being rescued by the hero.

But the call of the pictures came, came to her because she had lived in the open vastness of the great west and had come to love outdoor life. The close confinement of stock work crowded and stifled her, so she joined the Lubin force playing leads in productions then being made at Betzwood farm.

Among the Lubin productions in which she has played the roles that appeal to her are those recent productions under the direction of Barry O'Neil, the heavy in "The Sporting Duchess," supporting Rose Coghlan; Josie Lockwood in "The Fortune Hunter," and especially did she enjoy Flora Wiggins, the character comedy part in "The College Widow." These three roles have done more to emphasize her versatility than any others she has played, Miss Brice thinks.

METRO PICTURES ANNOUNCES PLANS.

The directors of the Metro Pictures Corporation announce that the company's plan of action has been decided upon. At its offices, 1475 Broadway, it was said the Metro designs to eliminate unnecessary expense in the distribution of film and to put the amount saved into the quality of production. While the term of agreement between the Metro and its several producers is for a long period, there is provision for the scrutiny of each subject by a board selected by the directors. This supervision will begin with an examination of the script. The board will be composed of three exchange men, three laymen and three successful exhibitors, and it will be authorized to reject any picture that fails to meet its approbation.

The Metro, which is a close corporation, is capitalized at $300,000, paid in, and has no stocks or bonds for sale. All the participating members of the company are exchange men. Richard A. Rowland, of Clarke & Rowland, Pittsburgh, is president; George A. Grumbacher, of Portland, Oregon, is vice-president; James B. Clarke, of Pittsburgh, second vice-president; Joseph Engle, of New York, treasurer, and Louis B. Mayer, of Boston, secretary. Otto N. Davies is also a member of the board.

The Metro will release one picture a week. Dates not supplied by contributing companies will be filled by purchases in the open market. It is announced that no figure will be too high if the subject be deemed worthy. The company invites communications from producers.

It is said that the identity of associated companies, together with a list of titles of forthcoming productions and their release dates, will be announced shortly.

Music for the Picture

Conducted by CLARENCE E. SINN

MUSIC FOR "NEPTUNE'S DAUGHTER."

Selections to Fit the Universal Feature Suggested by Nat E. Solomons.

"Neptune's Daughter."

NAT E. SOLOMONS of the Maryland Theater, Cumberland, Md., sends us his program for the music to the seven-reel sea picture, "Neptune's Daughter."

Entrance March—"By the Beautiful Sea." By H. Carroll.
Selection—"Chimes of Normandy." Planquette.

First Reel.

1. Egyptian Intermezzo. "Mermaid of the Nile."—Sylvio Hein. Moderately slow tempo; played through steamboat scene.
2. Persian Dance. "Girl of the Orient." Thos A. Allen. From opening of witch scene until King meets Annette.
3. Waltz. "One Wonderful Night." C. N. Jones. Slowly and well tempered; from meeting of Annette through water scenes.
4. "Tell Her I Love Her So." (Old love song by DeFae.) Moderate tempo (first half of song) until end of reel.

Second Reel.

5. "Tell Her I Love Her So." (Last half of song.) Moderate tempo, once through.

24. Polka. "De's Clowns." (G. Allier.) Moderately fast; once through.
25. March. "Dashing Cavalier." (F. H. Losey.) Moderately fast, once through.
26. March. "Danse de Poisons." (Uriel Davis.) Moderately fast. Played until last death in dual scene.
27. Prayer. "Cavallieria Rusticana." (Mascagni.) Concert style; once through.
28. Romance. "Traumerei." (Schumann.) Concert style, once through.
29. Sea song. "If the Sands of the Sea Were Peerless Pearls." (Johnson & Marion.) Slowly, once through during old witch scene.
30. "The Island of Roses and Love." (Neil Moret.) Chorus only, slow waltz tempo; begin at red sunset scene and play until finish of reel and for exit of audience.

In conclusion I wish to say a few words complimentary to the five young men (my assistants) in the orchestra. Without their help my work would not be so successful—they are always ready and willing to assist me in bringing out the picture effects.

Sincerely,
NAT. E. SOLOMONS,
Musical Director.
Maryland Theater, Cumberland, Md.

In the tag of his letter Mr. Solomons says a mouthful. Every member of a picture theater orchestra must ge always ready and always willing; the leader cannot do it all. His assistants must keep pace with him—not be dragged after him; must help to buoy him up—not weigh him down. Mr. Solomons has chosen a happy expression when he calls the members of his orchestra "my assistants."

MAKING THE PICTURE FIT THE MUSIC.

Our old friend Bruce says: "All of us have been neglecting your department lately and I imagine a great many are like the writer, who reads every article published in 'Music for the pictures' but depends upon the other fellow to do the writing. However, I am hereafter going to write whenever anything comes up pertaining to our part of the business; heres hoping others will do the same, for there is much to be learned by 'swapping' ideas." [Much? Practically all! About all the knowledge any of us has about anything is made up from the discoveries, deductions and experience of a lot of other people.—C. E. S.] "It seems strange to me that all the big film companies have not been able to see the value of having real music when making ballroom scenes. Some of them do and it is refreshing." [I presume you mean that when the characters are actually dancing to real music when picture is being made they will necessarily keep step and time, making it practical for a pianist to accompany them with appropriate dance music.—C. E. S.]

Mr. Bruce continues: "Another fault that all have is that in making war films (war stories), and a scene happens to show a trumpeter playing 'Taps,' 'Reveille' or any trumpet call, the scene is only shown about one-fourth of the time it takes to play the call. If they would only realize that nine-tenths of the theaters employ real musicians, and that they can improve the story fifty per cent. if given something to work on.—I am writing this to your department with the hope that some of the guilty ones may see it. Ordinarily I think music should run entirely through the pictures, but in 'The Pit' which we run recently I found an exception. In the third part the scene is in the mansion of Jadwin, and shows the keyboard of a real organ; the hostess and her guest go in to dinner; after dinner they are back in the music room—she asks him to play—he consents. While they were at dinner I quit playing entirely, and started again when he began playing. I believe this was effective. (In other words, you made a distinctive pause between your musical accompaniment and your sound effect to lend effectiveness to the latter. This is good technic.)

"Everything is humming along merrily out here in the Paradise of the Pacific. The big Hope-Jones Unit Orchestra at the Liberty in Seattle (cost, $30,000) is said by some to be wonderful; others say it isn't. Will write my opinion of it when I go to Seattle.

"THOMAS BRUCE, organist Rex Theater,
"Aberdeen, Washington."

Sure thing. Come again. Give us your opinion about anything you run across which looks as if it might interest the clientele. As to that part of your letter which says "with the hope that some of the guilty ones may see it"—you know, friend Bruce, that many of the producers have shown themselves willing and anxious to aid the exhibitor in every way regarding the showing of the pictures. Others don't care and won't care. A manager of one of the prominent companies once told me he didn't care a snap what kind of music was played with their pictures or whether any was played at all. Said he: "Our sales are guaranteed—our pictures are sold before the exhibitor gets them. What he may do with them is his business, not ours, and if he thinks music will help his show—well and good. It couldn't possibly make a dollar's worth of difference to us one way or the other."

To some extent he was right; the exhibition of the pictures is the business of the exhibitor and not of the producer. Many manufacturers, however, recognize the fact that anything tending to make their pictures more attractive to the public helps to foster a demand for their own particular wares. Some of them have had music arranged for certain pictures. Others have engaged musicians to view the pictures and make suggestions for musical accompaniments. Neither experiment has met with encouragment from exhibitor or musician. Producers have shown a willingness in many cases to accept suggestions from outside the studio.

Those from musicians usually take the form of complaints too ambiguous to be of any practical value. Your suggestion is at least definite. I don't think it would hurt the picture to make such scenes as you mention a little longer and so give the musician a chance to contribute his bit to the show. Though really it is not necessary in every case. If the bugler, for example, were shown playing in one scene, and the next scene was one in which he could still be heard, you could subdue your music, giving it the effect of being heard in the distance. The same occurs when musicians are shown playing in one scene and the intermittent scenes are near enough so that the music might be heard from a distance. The music need not stop altogether, but be merely subdued when the performer is not seen, and brought out when he is.

UNIVERSAL'S EQUIPMENT FOR RAILROAD PICTURES.

OWING to the number of railroad dramas which the Universal has been called upon to produce in the last five years it was decided, four months ago, to construct a complete railroad coach, open at one end, so that scenes showing the interiors of Pullman cars and railroad coaches could be reproduced. Herewith is shown the special coach which has been built at Universal City for the staging of such interiors. The car is built for actual use and rests on trucks and wheels which in turn, are on real rails.

A section of track duplicating a railroad yard has been installed near the great Universal outdoor stage with semaphore, block signals and the old-fashioned frying-pan signal system. Two hundred suits of overalls and railroad men's jumpers have been purchased and the Universal is now prepared to stage railroad dramas on a large scale within the confines of Universal City. President Laemmle is now negotiating for the purchase of a locomotive which has served its best days on a western railroad and which will be remodeled in replica of the great locomotives of the New York Central and Pennsylvania system.

Railroad dramas of the 60's and 70's are now possible in Universal City as a ramshackle old wood-burner has been put into good shape. A new boiler was installed, together with a stack of the inverted-cone shape familiar to old railroad men. Coaches of the type now used by construction gangs for "boarding cars" were purchased for almost nothing, and these have been sent to the carpenter shops and remodeled so that now they look much as they did when they first came from the car builders' shops fifty and sixty years ago.

When these coaches are filled with crinolined ladies and actors dressed in the masculine costumes of the period even the most captious critics will be unable to object to the lack of "local color" in the staging of the ante-bellum war dramas which the Universal now has under consideration.

The scene reproduced herewith is from "Their Hour," a two-reel western drama featuring Joe King and Cleo Madison, who are seen in the foreground. "Their Hour" will be released under the Gold Seal brand on March 2.

BUFFALO KRITERION EXCHANGE MOVES.

The Empire Kriterion Film Exchange of Buffalo, N. Y., has just completed arrangements for two floors in the Erie Loan and Savings Bank Building at 39 Erie street, which will open February 22.

Miss Edna Flugrath

The "Star" of the London Film Company.

THIS beautiful, versatile and highly talented young American actress has attained an eminence in the profession of motion picture acting reached by very few. Miss Edna Flugrath distinguished herself and established an enviable reputation as a motion picture actress in the service of the Edison Company and when she saw her opportunity to forge her way to the front with the London Film Company she lost no time in connecting with that concern, whose pictures are now well and favorably known to American exchanges, exhibitors and audiences through the publicity given them by the Cosmofotofilm Company, sole American distributors for the London Film Co.

Among the best known features in which Edna Flugrath has starred are "England's Menace," in which she very cleverly enacted the leading part of the daughter of the Home Secretary; "The Two Columbines," in which she was "one of them," and in which role she evinced exceptional ability; "A Christmas Carol," Charles Dickens' well-known story, and conspicuously in "The Victorian Cross" as Alice Bilson, daughter of the money lender and sweetheart of the hero of this beautiful story. Her latest appearance as far as American release dates are concerned is in "Incomparable Mistress Bellairs," in which she takes the title role.

It is impossible to see any film in which Miss Edna Flugrath appears without feeling drawn irresistibly to her by her wonderful magnetism and winsome beauty.

DONALD MACKENZIE ACTIVE FOR PATHE.

Donald MacKenzie is making for Pathe a picture which gives every promise of being particularly fine. It is a three-part drama, and is being acted by an excellent cast, most of whom are making their debut in pictures.

Miss Thais Lawton is the leading woman, and this picture marks her entrance into the motion picture field. She will be remembered as the leading actress with the New Theater Company, and also for her work with John Drew, Henry Miller, and Robert Mantell. She has had some of the best parts the stage has to offer, and her work on the screen will be watched with much interest.

Percy Standing (son of Herbert and brother of Guy Standing), late leading man with Ethel Barrymore in vaudeville, and formerly with Nat Goodwin and Mrs. Fiske, is another star stolen from the stage by Mr. MacKenzie to work in this picture. Howard Hall, who played important parts in "Damaged Goods," "The Poor Little Rich Girl," "Within the Law," "The Stranger," and "The Climax," and the complete list of whose successes is as long as one's arm, is another to make his first appearance in pictures. To round out this fine cast is W. T. Carleton, famous for years as an opera star, and now achieving new laurels on the screen.

The scenario was written by George Brackett Seitz, the Pathe scenario editor, who, before he went into picture work, was a successful short story writer, and playwright, having written "The King's Game," James K. Hackett's starring vehicle of the season 1908-9. Mr. Seitz has written hundreds of the Pathe photoplay hits.

REALISM FOOLS REAL POLICEMAN.

During the rehearsals of "The Balance," a Mutual-Reliance drama, the real police force got into the game. Shots were being exchanged, and the real policemen came pelting down a side street and began firing also. Horrified, the director called a halt. The crook ambled back and the situation was explained to the astonished "coppers."

World Film Gives "Beefsteak"

Hungry Gathering, Amply Appeased, Listens to Encomiums of Selznick and His Confreres.

THE World Film Corporation entertained nearly sixty guests at its first birthday party—a beefsteak dinner—in the jungle room of Healy's restaurant, Monday evening, February 15. It was an optimistic, well-fed, cheerful party with never a suggestion of business depression, psychological or otherwise. Good meat sizzled on the fire, good beer poured into the steins, tobacco smoke sifted through the semi-wildness of Healy's jungle, and in the open space between the tables young women danced and sang. The closest approach to thoughts of war came with the introduction of "Tipperary" and a volunteer male chorus of some fifty voices. But that was early in the evening, before Assistant General Manager and Toastmaster A. S. Kane started to call the roll of speakers.

Some responded by wishing the World Film Corporation many happy returns of the day, and let it go at that; others rehearsed the past and looked into the future. Nobody detected any clouds. Nearly everybody eulogized Vice-President and General Manager Lewis J. Selznick.

Seated at the table with Mr. Selznick were Van Horn Ely, president of the World Film Corporation; Briton N. Busch, treasurer; William A. Brady, C. F. Zittel (better known as Zit), Mr. Kane, Charles K. Harris of "After the Ball" fame, Arthur Loew, Gustave Frohman, Hon. Joseph L. Rhinock, W. Alden Pratt and Geoffrey Konta, World Film directors. Facing the tables running down both sides of the room were World Film employes, representatives of the allied producing companies and members of the trade press.

Mr. Ely did not take long to express unbounded confidence in the sagacity and business acumen of his vice-president and general manager, whereas Mr. Harris pretty much confined himself to congratulating the V. P. and G. M. on his safe return from the West. Then the toastmaster gave Mr. Selznick a chance to speak for himself. It was a heart-to-heart talk by a pastor to his flock, ninety per cent. of which, according to the speaker, is loyal and ready to be enthused, as he is enthused, by the possibilities ahead. For this ninety per cent. the sky is the limit, whereas the other ten per cent. may become loyal, or disappear, whichever it prefers. Mr. Selznick made that clear.

He traced the astoundingly rapid rise of the World Film Corporation from an unassuming infancy, and among others he thanked Congressman Rhinock for support in the early days. Soon alliances were made with the Peerless Film Company, the Shubert Film Corporation, William A. Brady, the Colonial Motion Picture Company, the Dryeda Film Company and finally Gustave Frohman. The announcement that in the week ending February 13th the collections were $8,000 in excess of any preceding week gave substance to an optimistic forecast. Mr. Selznick wished to settle once and for all rumors that some one might steal him from the World Film. His answer is a yearly income of $100,000, on which he is able to live quite comfortably, thank you. And he wants every one in any way connected with the concern to enjoy a fair share of its prosperity, just as he does himself—hence the profit-sharing system for employes and the low rental rates for exhibitors.

The speaker said that his ideas had been ridiculed freely enough, but that he didn't really care what people said as long as he was the subject of conversation. He intends that every exhibitor handling the company's product shall make money, not from quixotic motives, rather because that is the way to build up a solid business. Charging the top price may be an expensive boomerang, according to Mr. Selznick. In commenting on his experiences in the West, the speaker said that he was greatly impressed by the remarkable effectiveness of Jacob Wilk's publicity work in making his name known wherever he went. Having successfully standardized the names of Selznick and the World Film Corporation, one of the immediate aims of the publicity department is to convince exhibitors of the need for advertising their pictures more extensively.

M. E. Hoffman was referred to in flattering terms as a valuable man who did not want a title, and Mr. Selznick cited several incidents to show that it is not necessary for an employe to play politics in order to win advancement. Work, and work alone, counts, and there is no such thing as a friend at court. A case in point is that of a salesman by the name of Lamb who, it seems, is slated for an advance although he has no idea of a change in fortune. "My religion," said Mr. Selznick, in closing, "is the World Film Corporation," and up and down the lines of tables his expression of faith was applauded.

In response to the toastmaster's call, Mr. Wilk urged the need of inducing editors of daily newspapers to give pictures more liberal space in departments resembling those now devoted to sports. Congressman Rhinock recalled a somewhat similar gathering five years ago when he had a hand in organizing Loew's Consolidated Enterprises. At the present time he is on the board of directors of fifteen corporations and not one of them, he said, takes precedence over the World Film in point of solidity and promise.

Following a few remarks by Mr. Pratt, Mr. Brady voiced with characteristic vehemence an opinion that carried particular weight in view of his knowledge of amusement matters. "The boundless possibilities of pictures will not be realized," he said in effect, "until the system of production is bettered. Financial backing is limitless, but the producing end (speaking generally, of course) should be improved." "Zit" quoted William Randolph Hearst as saying recently that pictures are destined to surpass the press in influence. Incidentally, the speaker hoped that the Hearst papers throughout the country soon would exploit World Film releases.

Other speakers were Mr. Busch, Mr. Konta, Mr. Hoffman, Mr. Frohman, Fred J. Beecroft of the Dramatic Mirror, W. A. Johnson of the News, Wen Milligan of the Billboard, Maurice Torneur, director of several popular World Film dramas; William L. Sherrill, director for Mr. Frohman; "Wid" Gunning of the New York Evening Mail, Alex Lorimer and Lewis J. Bamberger.

Those present were: Lewis J. Selznick, Geoffrey Konta, W. Alden Pratt, Van Horn Ely, A. S. Kane, C. F. Zittel, Albert Loew, Joseph L. Rhinock, Briton N. Busch, Gustave Frohman, William A. Brady, Charles K. Harris, J. Parker Read, J. Searle Dawley, Alec Lorimer, Bide Dudley, William L. Sherrill, Thomas Bedding, H. G. Segal, J. Friedberg, Edward Davidow, W. B. Graham, S. J. Berman, George Biehoff, J. A. Hayden, P. B. Newman, Al Lichtman, M. E. Hoffman, F. J. Leary, F. W. Knolhoff, Harry Haven, Harry Ennis, A. Claflin, J. Grisewood, F. H. Crane, E. Chautard, Maurice Tourneur, Henry Bayard, Milton R. Lowenthal, Eugene Kelcey Allen, Tarleton Winchester, J. V. Ritchey, George W. Bell, G. J. Schaefer, L. J. Bamberger, Frank Paret, G. A. Huhn, Jr., Warren Thorpe, Wen Milligan, James L. Hoff, Fred J. Beecroft, Charles Condon, Jacob Wilk, "Wid" Gunning and Lynde Denig.

Famous Players Plans

Many Notable Dramatic Successes and Important Stellar Additions Included in Next Three Months' Program.

Maintaining its policy of constantly adding new stage favorites to its already imposing list of stellar celebrities, the Famous Players Film Co. will introduce to the motion picture public, on its next quarterly contribution to the Paramount program, such prominent stage personages as John Mason, William Elliott, and Charles Cherry, in subjects specially selected and pre-eminently appropriate for their screen debuts. In addition, three former Famous Players stars, who have rapidly assumed a supreme position as screen favorites, Marguerite Clark, John Barrymore, and Hazel Dawn, will return to the Famous Players screen.

As an appreciation of the popularity which she has won through her former Famous Players' productions, the Famous Players will present Marguerite Clark in two subjects within this period, first in an elaborate screen production of Grace Livingston Furniss' famous comedy-drama, "Gretna Green," to be released March 11, and subsequently in an impressive film version of Frances Hodgson Burnett's celebrated novel and play, "The Pretty Sister of Jose," produced in California.

John Barrymore will gladden the hearts of the many film followers in an indescribably funny picturization of Leo Ditrichstein's celebrated farce, "Are You a Mason?"

John Mason will appear in the thrilling dramatic success, "Jim, the Penman," by Charles L. Young. William Elliott, the famous actor-manager, who is at present winning a tremendous personal success in the dramatic sensation, "Experience," will appear in "When We Were Twenty-one," by H. V. Esmonde. Charles Cherry in F. Hopkinson Smith's powerful story, "The Tides of Barnegat," and Hazel Dawn in a subject that will display, in the greatest degree, her charm and talent, "Gambier's Advocate," by Ronald MacDonald, will complete this notable series.

It is of interest that during February, the shortest month of the year, the Famous Players Film Co. will release five subjects.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

"PATSY'S ELOPEMENT" (Lubin).

This chapter in the adventures of Patsy Bolivar is a veritable romance. After the continuous bad luck that follows him at every turn of fortune, who would ever believe that he would have the courage to be a party of the first part in an elopement; but, wonderful to relate, Tilly Grace, who really is Sykesy's sweetheart, is so impressed with Patsy's heroism that for a few hours she transfers her love and agrees to skip with Sykesy's rival. The elopement is fraught with many misfortunes and accidents calculated to do bodily harm, and, finally finding a village minister, their dilapidated appearance is so much against them that the good man could not think of tying the knot. Driven to despair, Tilly resolves that the whole adventure was a mistake, and, getting cold feet, quits. The faithful Jane, ever on the alert for Patsy's safety, tracks him, and, mounting him upon her horse, carries him to safety. The admirable cast are still doing justice to Clay Green's humorous story, which may truly be classified as the acme of "the pathos of comedy."

Scene from "Patsy's Elopement" (Lubin).

COMING BOSWORTH RELEASES.

The releases of the Bosworth-Morosco productions for the next six months have just been received from the Los Angeles studio. They include the names of some very prominent stars, including Miss Elsie Janis, Fritzi Scheff, Dustin Farnum, Lenore Ulrich, Peggy O'Neil and many other prominent people. The schedule of releases is as follows:

"The Caprices of Kitty," Elsie Janis, March 8, Bosworth star.

"Sunshine Molly," March 18, featuring Miss Weber, Phillips Smalley and Hobart Bosworth.

"Pretty Mrs. Smith," Fritzi Scheff, March 29, play by Oliver Morosco and Elmer Harris, Morosco Photoplay Company in association with Bosworth, Inc.

"Captain Courtesy," Dustin Farnum, April 19, play by Edward Childs Carpenter, Bosworth.

"Help Wanted," April 29, play by Jack Lait, Morosco Photoplay Company.

"Little Sunset," May 6. Story by Charles E. Van Loan, a Bosworth production.

"Betty in Search of a Thrill," Elsie Janis, May 17, Bosworth production.

For the last quarter of the year the plans include among other productions for the Morosco Photoplay Company, "The Judge and the Jury," by Oliver Morosco and Harry D. Cottrell; "Wild Olive," by Oliver Morosco and Elmer Harris, and "The Society Pilot," by Oliver Morosco and Dr. C. C. Bachman. In the latter, Lenore Ulrich will star, while Peggy O'Neil, another Morosco star, will appear in "Wild Olive."

WARNING TO EXHIBITORS.

We have been given to understand that certain parties in New York state are writing the exhibitors stating that they intend releasing Paramount pictures through their service. This statement is absolutely false, as Paramount productions can only be secured through the Wm. L. Sherry Feature Film Co., Inc., 130 West Forty-sixth street, New York City. We have no offices whatever up the state, and the only two agents that we have are J. A. Traub and W. Ayrault. Outside of this office direct these are the only representatives who have any authority to book Paramount Service.

We are sending this letter as a warning, in case anyone else should try to book you pictures and claim that they are Paramount.

W. L. SHERRY FEATURE FILM CO.

"YOUR BABY OR MINE" (Reliance).

"Sheriff" Arthur Mackley is producing "Your Baby or Mine," by George Hennessy, at the Hollywood studios. This Reliance production, released in the Mutual program, appeals to children. In it a little boy, chagrined at the arrival of a baby brother, trades it to a playmate in exchange for a toy automobile.

MAX FIGMAN IN "JACK CHANTY" (Alliance).

Max Figman in "Jack Chanty" is announced as the next release on the Alliance Programme. This is the third production made by the Masterpiece Film Company, to be released under the Alliance banner, and was adapted for the screen by Elliot Clawson from the widely read novel of the same name by Hulbert Footner.

The story deals with the exploits of "Jack Chanty," alias Malcom Piers, who, after becoming a bankrupt, seeks to recoup his fortunes in the wilds of the Canadian woods.

This is by far the most ambitious film production Mr. Figman has yet appeared in. Most of the scenes were taken among the densely wooded foothills or on the peaks of the Sierra Madre. Several views of great beauty were obtained from these points, which are over seventy-two hundred feet above the sea level. For nearly a week the entire company lived in the open and the camp material purchased for the production was put to practical use.

In the wood scenes several wild animals stalk across the natural settings. A puma and a number of young bears were caught unawares by a camera man in ambush and were cleverly worked into the story. A contingent of Mojave Indians including squaws and papooses appear in the mob scenes. In the company supporting Mr. Figman were Lolita Robertson, Edwin Harley, H. A. Livingston and Antrim Stewart.

"A NIGHT OUT" (Essanay).

There is literally a riot of fun when Charles Chaplin takes "A Night Out," the title of his second Essanay two-reel comedy, released February 15. With Ben Turpin he goes to a hotel, where they proceed to make the town dry by drinking up all the liquid refreshments to be had. After spilling a pie over a "dandy" and a Welsh giant and being nearly choked to death they are hurled out into the street.

Scene from "A Night Out" (Essanay).

They manage to zig-zag their way up to their rooms where they are horrified by running across a woman in pajamas, with a poodle. The dog insists on following Chaplin into his room and the pajama-clad woman rushes after it. The terrified Chaplin takes refuge in the bathroom.

In the meantime the husband of the pajamas returns and looks for his wife. She sees him through the crack of the door and slams it and hides. After the distracted hubby rushes downstairs Mr. Chaplin kindly escorts the dog and the "lady" back to her room and is about to leave when the husband again appears. Chaplin takes refuge in the bed where he is promptly sat upon by friend husband when he starts to take off his shoes.

The innocent Mr. Chaplin is dragged out and faces death from a bullet, but the husband decides that death by hurling his victim against the wall is more meet. Chaplin strikes the bathroom door and lands in a tub full of water, head down. He comes up spouting like a whale, after which matters are satisfactorily explained. Mr. Chaplin decides that a night out once in a long, long time is quite sufficient.

Though the scenes themselves are full of fun, it is Mr. Chaplin's unique antics that raises the comedy into the class of comic masterpieces.

MASON OPENS EXCHANGE IN ATLANTA.

H. R. Mason, pioneer exchange man of the South, has opened offices in the Rhodes Building, Atlanta, Ga. While operating only three weeks he has built up a lucrative business, due, no doubt, to his popularity among the Southern exhibitors with whom he has been dealing for the past eight years. He has made a remarkable record with "Cabiria," the twelve reel Itala spectacle, and reports only a few dates open in March and April on this subject. "Treasure of the Louzats," another Itala feature, which is just being released, is destined to prove very popular with the exhibitors on account of its featuring "Cabiria" actors and actresses. Mr. Mason has signed up with several manufacturers of note for the exclusive handling of their productions, details concerning which will be given upon request.

"THE CONSTABLE'S DAUGHTER" (Beauty).

Joseph Harris, Fred Gamble, Virginia Kirtley and Webster Campbell are all members of the excellent cast appearing in "The Constable's Daughter," the latest Beauty release in the Mutual program. The story tells the constable's adventures with a chicken thief and his efforts to put a quietus on his daughter's beau. Virginia Kirtley plays the daughter and her young man is Webster Campbell. Joseph Harris as the thief and Gamble as the detective are excellent in this lively comedy.

"THE ECHO" (American).

In staging "The Echo," Thos. Ricketts, of the American studios, has captured a charmingly illusive bit of romantic picturing, with delightful glimpses of lake and hillside, wood and meadow, through which Miss Rich and Mr. Lythgoe wander with idyllic freedom. They both have a way of fitting wonderfully well into natural surroundings and portray their parts in masterful fashion. Jack Richardson, as an ambitious father, and Harry Von Meter, as a designing count, afford an effective foil and characterize their roles perfectly. Mr. Von Meter's poise and hauteur of bearing are distinguished. As a hospitable farmer and his wife, Perry Banks and Louise Lester are beyond comment, Miss Lester warming up to her scenes with her usual heartiness. Reaves Eason does a vigorous rowing stunt as the ferryman.

Both in scenic splendor and admirable acting "The Echo" will absorb interest until the end.

"THE ROSARY" (Selig).

"The Rosary" will be released in the near future by the Selig Polyscope Company. The story is taken from the soul-stirring drama written by Edward E. Rose who also wrote the film version. Miss Kathlyn Williams and her supporting company will be featured.

"THE LOVE OF WOMEN" (Lubin).

Adrian Gil-Spear has written a powerful story under the above title, the keynote being the love of a temperamental woman. Many strong characters appear in the drama, and the tale is quite absorbing. Alan Baird, a young artist, engaged to Muriel Phillips, falls a victim to the charms of Laura Carew, a beautiful actress. Guy Manners, her leading man, seeks revenge by ruining Alan at cards. David, Alan's brother, determines to save the boy, but finds that he himself must struggle against the fascination of Laura's beauty. Laura, in turn, finds in David her ideal among men, and though she has determined to enslave him she sacrifices herself by attempting to disillusion Alan by acting the part of an adventuress in his presence. David is heartbroken, but Alan is only more determined to win the actress.

Out of funds, he robs the safe of Government funds entrusted to David. These Guy promptly wins from him. Then, Alan sobered at last, decides to take his life. David, seeking him, goes to Laura, and there learns her real love for him. He overhears Guy confess that Alan robbed the safe at his suggestion and in a fight David recovers the money. He and Laura start in search of Alan. Meanwhile, Alan's father has discovered the robbery and with Muriel has started for Alan's studio. They find the boy just about to shoot himself. The old General, instead of preventing the self-murder, demands that his son clear his name by carrying out his purpose. At this moment David and Laura arrive. David announces that he and the actress are to be married at once, and as they are starting away immediately he has taken the money from the safe. Alan is reinstated in his father's good grace, and David and Laura start upon a life of happiness together. Lilie Leslie and George Soule Spencer play the leading roles, assisted by a very talented support.

"A COAT'S A COAT" (Nestor).

In "A Coat's a Coat" Eddie Lyons, the versatile Nestor director, has produced a comedy which does not depend upon slap-sticks and stair-case fights for its humorous effects. Written by Eugene Spofford and produced by the Universal Film Mfg. Co., it is a masterpiece of "polite" farce. Those of us who have had the experience of watching our coats in the one-arm and nickel-in-the-slot restaurants will appreciate the dangers and difficulties of wearing a coat which has no distinctive earmarks. One can hardly be cross with the man who dons one's coat by mistake providing he is able to prove that his own coat on the same rack is identical in style, color and workmanship. Mr. Spofford and Eddie Lyons, working together, have extracted all the humorous possibilities out of the theme with side-splitting results.

STURTEVANT FAN LITIGATION.

The patent suit brought against the B. F. Sturtevant Company, of Boston, by the Sirocco Engineering Company, which has been in the courts for the past six years, has just been decided by the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit, in favor of the Sturtevant Company.

It was claimed that the Sturtevant Multivane Fan infringed the Sirocco Company's patents, and in the lower court this claim was sustained. The Court of Appeals, however, reversed the former decision and held that there was no infringement. The Court of Appeals further decided that the Sirocco patents in suit were void in view of the development of the fan building art prior to the alleged inventions upon which these patents were based.

As there are probably more Multivane Fans in use than any other make, the monetary consideration at stake was large.

KANSAS CITY TO HAVE KRITERION SERVICE.

Kansas City and the surrounding territory, commencing with March 1, will be served with the Kriterion Service by the Kansas City Kriterion Service Co., which will soon open offices in that city. This venture is backed by the same people who have arranged for the Chicago territory. Messrs. Belford and Leverton, who have exhibited their features in the past in this Southern territory, are two of the gentlemen that are behind this exchange.

Quarters have not as yet been selected, but it is expected that suitable offices will be found within the next week. This exchange will also be equipped with everything modern, including an exhibition room where advance releases can be shown.

"IN THE WARDEN'S GARDEN" TO BE RELEASED MARCH 4.

A powerful story of crime and criminals in which a virtually innocent man is shown to fall a victim of stool pigeons is to be released by the Domino Co. March 4 under the title of "In the Warden's Garden." Many of the scenes take place within the walls of a prison and these were enacted in the historic East Side jail at Los Angeles. Howard Hickman plays the lead and is ably supported by a strong cast.

ENLARGE THEIR LABORATORIES.

Owing to the new business received in the past three months, the Commercial Motion Pictures Co., Inc., have been forced to increase the size of their laboratories, as well as their factory equipment. In the past eight weeks the little factory at Grantwood, N. J., has turned out over 2,400,000 feet of perfect positive prints. Letters of recommendation and praise speak more for the quality of their work than all the tongues of their salesmen put together.

The combination of tints and tones used, under the personal supervision of Charles Hirliman, the laboratory superintendent, has made a great reputation for the concern. Manufacturers, directors and cameramen who have had the advantage of seeing the "Commercial Color Reel," which shows in detail every color and shade used by this enterprising company, have had nothing but praise for the idea and for the beautiful effects obtained, and when watched carefully, were seen jotting down this and that color combination, which no doubt they intend using in their future prints.

ATHLETIC SERIES BY SELIG.

Beginning in April, the Selig Polyscope Company will release a series of athletic films which will realistically depict feats of endurance and skill. One reel will be released weekly through the General Film Company. One innovation will be a series of visualized lessons on the art of physical culture. It is believed that parents who desire that their little ones shall become healthy and hardy men and women will appreciate the lessons which will be clearly demonstrated and easily followed from week to week. All important details of physical culture art will be shown. These lessons will cost the public but five or ten cents each, while similar lessons given by an instructor would cost untold dollars. The leading exponents of the art of physical culture have been engaged at great expense by the Selig Polyscope Company to direct and act in the physical culture demonstrations.

"MINERVA'S MISSION" (Majestic).

A college girl's effort to reform her home community is shown in "Minerva's Mission," a two-reel Majestic release in the Mutual program. Dorothy Gish is featured. The production was made by Paul Powell. Minerva finds that it's hard enough to get all the men to quit smoking and drinking, but when she starts teaching a mother the proper way to raise children she finds real trouble. Cora Drew, W. E. Lawrence and James Gorman are also in the cast.

"THE OATH OF SMOKY JOE" (Eclair).

A fast-moving, red-blooded Western drama without a single interior scene is somewhat of a novelty, and the two-part story, "The Oath of Smoky Joe," issued by Eclair on Wednesday, March 3, should therefore be hailed with delight by exhibitors as a relief from the stereotyped saloon, sheriff's office and other interior scenes which seem necessary in the making of all western moving pictures. The story itself is different, too, as it is minus a hero, a crowd of cowboys and a few other attributes of the usual western film. Nobert Myles, Edna Payne and H. Stanley form a clever trio in this story, and their work is most convincing.

"A CHILD OF THE PRAIRIE" (Selig).

"A Child of the Prairie," a Selig Western melodrama, written and directed by Tom Mix, and in which production Mr. Mix takes the leading role, will be released on Monday, March 1. The production is in two reels, and every inch contains exciting action and beautiful scenic effects showing the Western plains and mountains.

Scene from "A Child of the Prairie" (Selig).

One feature of this unusual picture play is the fact that a frontier village of the days of the fifties was especially constructed to give realistic local color to this Western production.

OF INTEREST TO TRAP SHOOTERS.

Pathe Weekly No. 10, which has just been released, includes a section that will interest all gun bugs. It shows John Philip Sousa, the march king, and one of the best known amateur trap shooters in the country, shooting at targets thrown from a hand trap by Jack Fanning.

The film was staged at Mr. Sousa's home at Port Washington, New York. One section of it shows ten or more trap shooters lined up, with Fanning in the middle operating the hand trap.

The hand trap is not a new contrivance, but Fanning's method of operating it is decidedly new. When a trap is held firmly against the breast and the trigger pulled, an easy target will be thrown about 40 to 50 yards.

Fanning has discovered that by swinging the loaded trap at arm's length and pulling the trigger near the end of the swing he can add 25 to 40 yards to the travel of the target. This is of interest to all trap shooters, because it makes possible a more difficult target than is thrown from the regulation stationary targets, and also pictures the possibilities of a portable trap shooting club requiring no club house, trap house or trap boy.

Trap shooters who have a chance to see this film should not lose the opportunity.

MARY FULLER IN EDISON FEATURE FILM.

As the third feature on the new Edison program of putting out weekly a feature film in the regular service, "The Master Mummer," in which Mary Fuller is featured, will be released Monday, March 15th. The film was made when Miss Fuller was with the Edison company and was done in five parts. It was intended to place this feature out as a five-part feature in the special service of the General Film Company, but with the change of program to include weekly features, the exhibitor will profit by Edison cutting this down to three parts, retaining the vital movement and big situations of the play. It is taken from the popular book by the noted author, E. Phillips Oppenheim. The story is one of royal intrigue around youthful romance, with the Princess reduced to poverty but still battling for the royal throne. The play gives Miss Fuller splendid opportunity to play a part which she won much success in.

As the fourth offering in weekly features, Edison has secured the rights to the four-act sterling melodrama, "A Deadly Hate," which has passed into theatrical history in England and in the English colonies as a classic in genuine thrillers of a wholesome type. The play, however, has never been played on the stage in this country and will afford a good opportunity to see the best play of the noted dramatist, George Roberts, who has also written the successful plays, "The King's Highway," "At the Mercy of the World," "A Night's Folly," "An Irish Girl" and "Shamus." This photoversion will be done in three parts and released the latter part of March.

Such plays as these, as well as Mrs. Fiske's success, "In Spite of All," previously released, being placed in the regular service programs, will no doubt add a new element and problem to the special feature market.

SENNETT'S PLANS FOR KEYSTONE.

Mack Sennett, Keystone's chief director, has made known his list of comedy creators for the coming season and leads off, of course, with fun's old standby, Mable Normand. Charley Murray, too, has signed again with the Keystone aggregation, while Harry Gribbon, formerly with Morosco, is an addition from the legitimate stage. Ford Sterling, too, has been received into the fold again after having had his fling at vaudeville. Sid Chaplin, of the famous English family, wall-eyed Chester Conklin, and Mack Swain, as well, remain on the Keystone list.

These players will be seen in single and two-reel comedy releases in the Mutual program, with Mack Sennett in command of productions. Sennett's ability to cut up and put together a film after the pictures are taken, as well as his capacity in directing, have done much to make Keystone popular. Keystones are seen only in the Mutual program.

NEW CINCINNATI QUARTERS FOR WORLD FILM.

The Cincinnati branch of the World Film Corporation is now located on the third floor of the Savoy block on East Sixth street. Manager Clay Brehm finds that the increasing business has made the change to larger quarters necessary.

TWO NEW DOUBLE-REEL DRAMAS.

Santa Barbara Motion Picture Company have completed two double-reel dramas. They are entitled "Back of the Shadows" and "Sand Rat." William Robert Daly directed and featured Fritzi Brunette and Edward Alexander. They will be released through the Kriterion Service.

STEPPLING IN "THE DECISION."

John Steppling, who plays the part of Judge Clarke in the American-Mutual release, "The Decision," recently had an embarrassing experience while rehearsing in that two-reel drama. Word somehow got around that a man who had drank too much (as Steppling is supposed to have done in the story), was coming out of a club to walk across the square to the Santa Barbara court house. A crowd gathered, and when Steppling appeared began a hoot and yell and run at his heels.

Scene from "The Decision" (American).

Then the mob saw the camera, and so many members of it wanted to get their pictures taken at once that it was impossible to see Steppling, which, of course, spoiled the effect.

"Now, if you wanted a crowd," said Director Henry Otto, disgustedly, "and wanted it to behave that way, you never in the world could get it."

Dorothy Louise Ziegler

AMONG the promising aspirants for honors among the children of the screen may be recorded the name of Dorothy Louise Ziegler, the four-year old daughter of Dorothy Van Horenberg Ziegler, a former clever stock actress. Despite her tender years little Dorothy possesses talent of a kind that promises a notable future for her in the motion picture world. She is a wonderful little impersonator of grown-ups and shows that she has been carefully and intelligently trained, and her naive performance has elicited much praise from those who have seen her at work.

Dorothy Ziegler.

Account must be taken of inherited, or inborn tendencies, with which Little Dorothy is unmistakably endowed. Added to whatever she may have inherited from her mother the influence goes back to her paternal great grandmother, who was renowned as an amateur tragedienne and might have won laurels upon the public stage in her day had she been so disposed. From this it would seem that play-acting was Little Dorothy's birthright and one which she is destined to realize upon.

Little Dorothy is a perfect type of blonde, beautiful flaxen hair and deep blue eyes; and, for a child of four, most perfectly formed. Along with this goes a charm of manner, unusual in children most likely to be spoiled with petting and coddling. But Dorothy has come through it all so far without loss of her baby simplicity and naturalness of manner and she still likes to play with her dollies after a strenuous day of posing and rehearsal.

Just now Little Miss Dorothy is resting, but in the early spring she will begin an engagement with one of the important producing companies.

BROADWAY THEATER SHOWING PARAMOUNT PICTURES.

The Broadway theater will open on Saturday, February 20, with "The Country Boy," the Lasky production. A large sign across the front of the house states that the Broadway will show the entire Paramount Program, changing each Monday and Thursday, at prices of 10, 15 and 25 cents. The stage is undergoing extensive alterations. There will be an orchestra of twenty pieces and an Austin organ. Jules E. Aronson will be the house manager, while the theater will be under the supervision of the Stanley Company, of Philadelphia, of which Stanley V. Mastbaum is managing director.

At the office of the Famous Players Film Company it was intimated that the Famous Players would proceed on the lines indicated by President Zukor in his statement of two weeks ago—with the exception that the Broadway theater would not be the New York house at which the larger Famous Players productions would first be shown.

OKLAHOMA CITY GETS NEW ORDINANCE.

The Safety First Movement is responsible for the enactment of another ordinance regulating motion picture theaters and other houses of amusement in Oklahoma City, Okla. This makes two ordinances affecting amusement purveyors. The old ordinance states that a theater manager subjects himself to arrest if he allows his aisles or passageways to become crowded or blocked. The new law provides not only for the prosecution of managers who allow insistent persons to stand in the aisles of theaters but the patrons who violate the ordinance as well. It further states that no manager is permitted to sell more tickets than for which he can furnish seats. The new ordinance was passed recently by the board of city commissioners of Oklahoma City, and was drawn with a view to further safeguard against fire and other disastrous contingencies.

"JIMMY VALENTINE" SHOWN AT SING SING.

When the Peerless Company made "Alias Jimmy Valentine" for the World Film Company, it was found advisable to take some of the scenes at Sing Sing prison. Accordingly, permission having been given by Warden Thomas Mott Osborne, Director Maurice Tourneur took his company of players to the prison and staged some realistic scenes. Robert Warwick had the part of "Jimmy Valentine" and spent several days hobnobbing with the inmates in order to get the proper "atmosphere." He got on quite friendly terms with some of them and promised that an opportunity should be given them to see the picture when it was finished.

It was in the keeping of this promise that the World Film Corporation arranged an exhibition which took place at Sing Sing on Sunday, February 14. A special car was attached to a regular New York Central train and the party in charge of Jacob Wilk, the World Film publicity man, left for Sing Sing shortly after eleven o'clock Sunday morning. Representatives of the trade papers, officials of the World Film and several of those players who took part in the making of "Alias Jimmy Valentine," including Robert Warwick, the star of the picture, were in the party. The exhibition was held in the big assembly hall of the prison, and over 1,700 inmates were present. They were first shown a reel of "Bertlevyettes," a series of cartoon pictures by Bert Levy. Then came the big number, "Jimmy Valentine." The subject was followed with deepest interest and elicited repeated applause. Mr. Osborne's portrait, shown at the beginning of the picture, was also cheered. Mr. Warwick was also given a generous reception.

The trip up and back was a very enjoyable one and appreciated by all who were fortunate enough to be included in the party.

KANE RESIGNS FROM WORLD FILM.

Arthur S. Kane, assistant general manager of the World Film Corporation with special supervision of the World Film exchanges, will leave that company about March 1. Mr. Kane tendered his resignation about January 15, but decision on the matter was held in abeyance until the return of Mr. Selznick from his recent western trip. While Mr. Kane has definite plans which will become operative about June 1, he proposes to devote the next few months to a tour of the country, visiting the various exchanges and exhibitors and renewing his acquaintance in those branches of the industry.

Notes of the Trade.

C. A. CHIVERS, who for some years past traveled in the South, is now with the World Film Corporation. Mr. Chivers is most popular with every exhibitor in the South, who wish him great success in his new affiliation. His territory will embrace the States of Georgia, Tennessee, Alabama, Florida, North and South Carolina.

Max Asher, with his funny German make-up, in company with Gale Henry as the old maid, have as able assistant fun-makers two nice, fat, wooly black bears! All this happens in "Back to School Days," a Joker comedy. That school-room scene is worth the price of admission any day, by the way.

There is a real-for-sure sand storm in "The Carpet From Bagdad," a five-reel Spectacular Special soon to be released by the Selig Polyscope Company. This story is made from the popular novel written by Harold MacGrath and features an all-star cast of Selig players. Many beautiful scenes carrying true Oriental atmosphere are presented. An entire caravan of camels is one of the interesting details.

Mabel Trunnelle really loves the monkey which journeys with her in her wanderings as the madcap gypsy girl in the Edison "Olive's Opportunities" series. "Commodore," for that's his name, came to Miss Trunnelle from far-off India, and is the gift of an English soldier who served in that country.

The rapidly developing business of the World Film Corporation has necessitated more elbow room, and so spacious floor space has been taken in the new ornate Jaeger Building, 326 St. Catherine Street, West, Montreal, Canada. Mr. R. S. Bell, the sales manager, is worthily supported by Mr. H. Siskend, office manager; Mr. G. W. Kerr, assistant sales manager, and Mr. H. W. Talbott, salesman.

During the recent run of "It's No Laughing Matter" in Los Angeles, a fat, hearty Irishwoman attended a matinee performance and added greatly to the pleasure of those around her by her infectious laugh and sympathetic comments. When the play was ended she did not go, but settled back to enjoy it over again. When the little white dog stole Hi Judd's supper she shook with laughter. "Oh, dear," she gurgled, "He's funnier than he was the first time!"

George W. Terwilliger, the Lubin director and writer, is in St. Augustine, Florida, with a special company of Lubin players, headed by Ormi Hawley and Earl Metcalfe, and is building an old Spanish quarter in the ruins of the historic buildings burned in the big fire last year, which will enable the Lubin players to obtain attractive backgrounds for pictures.

A tiny little Miss of about four years, with wonderful dark curls and sparkling eyes, while eating jam and cake in "His Reward," Sydney Ayres' new Powers-Universal drama, looks right at you from the screen—and straightaway your heart is lost. Her name hasn't been brought to light as yet, but it is safe to predict that little Black Eyes will receive many love letters from little swains who see this thrilling drama.

Another of the famous "Flying A" Light Series has been released in the Mutual program under the title of "In the Twilight." The production was made by Thomas Ricketts and is replete with gorgeous settings, natural and artificial, and embellished with appropriate tints which enhance the artistic value of the pictures. The scenario was written by Marc Edmund Jones.

Flimflam Film Man Flees

Bert V. Brookhart, Formerly of Reading, Pa., and More Recently Manager of La France's Photoplay Manufacturing Company, of Denver, Has Fled from Scene of His Recent Operations—Is Man of Brilliant Parts and Conducted School of Acting.

By Philadelphia Special Moving Picture World Service.

BERT V. BROOKHART, of Reading, Pa., one-time member of the Sothern-Marlowe Shakespearian Company, and until recently manager of the La France's Photoplay Manufacturing Company, of Denver, Col., has recently fled from the scene of his business operations at Denver. He left behind him a wife dying of tuberculosis, sixty-seven students of picture acting, numerous creditors and a civil suit for $500, in which a stockholder of his company declares that Brookhart induced him to invest in the company on the strength of false pretenses.

Brookhart, who has resided at different times in Reading, New York, Jacksonville, Omaha and San Antonio, has been numbered among the missing for several weeks. The district attorney's office has instituted search for him.

A brilliant man, he came to Denver last September, apparently seeking to better his wife's health. October 19 he opened a studio for training moving picture actors and actresses. One month later, according to Herman Betzler, Brookhart induced him to invest $500 in the company and elected him secretary of the firm, which, he said, was capitalized at $100,000.

Brookhart recently summoned his pupils and told them he would give them a surprise the next day. Among the pupils is said to have been Fay King, cartoonist and wife of Battling Nelson. He gave them a wonderful surprise—he vanished. Each of the pupils paid him $3 per week.

OPERATORS PLANNING A BALL.

Members of the Operators' Motion Picture Union, Local 307, are formulating plans for the next motion picture operators' ball, which will be given some time in the near future. The date selected will be announced later on by the committee.

NEW TIOGA THEATER OPENED.

Tioga possesses Philadelphia's newest motion picture playhouse. It is the modern fire-proof Tioga theater, at Seventeenth and Venange streets, and its doors were thrown open to the public on Saturday evening, January 30. The new theater has a seating capacity of 1,700 and the absolute safety of the patrons is assured at all times. There are over twenty exits to the newest of playhouses and its audience can be discharged into the streets in less than ten minutes.

Architecturally the theater is a worthy addition to the playhouses of the city. Special attention has been directed to the ventilation of the theater by Sauer and Hann, the designers.

The policy of the Tioga theater will be to present the last word in moving pictures. Special concerts will be rendered during intermission by the Tioga Symphony Orchestra. The theater will be under the management of Mark Wilson, who secured Henri Bernstein's drama "Samson" for the opening night.

PICTURES IN READING.

Sketch of a Growing Business—Interesting Observations of Pictures and Audiences.

The popularity of moving pictures in Reading is rapidly increasing. A few years ago the moving picture theaters, with their limited capacity, easily accommodated the patrons of this amusement, while to-day, with the number of houses tripled, all of them are regularly filled to capacity.

No sooner had theaters been established on Penn street when places were opened in the residential sections, and now these latter places have also attained wide popularity. There are now eighteen photoplay houses in this city. These afford an opportunity of viewing more than 80 per cent. of the films manufactured. Few, if any, of the American-made productions are missed, while some of the foreign films are more frequently discarded.

Patrons who follow photoplay closely have their favorite players and class of production. The likes and dislikes of a moving picture theater audience are more varied than in any other sort of amusement. Some prefer dramas, while others like comedies. The management of the local houses exercise every care to present a varied program. While this is not always possible, there is usually one reel of comedy.

The enormous expense connected with producing the multiple reel pictures is said to have compelled the manufacturer to increase the price on the film. This fact has caused some of the exhibitors to raise the price of admission. The output of the manufacturers has increased materially. At the present time about 110 releases are put on the market every week. Nearly 25 per cent. of these are multiple-reel pictures. It is estimated that the average daily attendance at Reading moving picture houses is more than 12,000. The motion picture industry has the record for attendance in the amusement world to-day.

TO STANDARDIZE BOOTHS.

New Jersey Legislature Considering Bill to Provide for a Standard Operator's Booth.

Assemblyman Hammond recently presented a bill in the House of Representatives, at Trenton, N. J., to provide a standard for booths for moving picture machines in theaters, schools or churches. A member from Mercer county introduced another measure to give cities the power to regulate all signs and advertisements and to provide for the licensing of the same.

THEATER ENJOINED FROM SHOWING PICTURE.

Judge Patterson Grants Belmont Amusement Company Injunction Against Locust Theater.

Claiming that its contract had been violated, the Belmont Amusement Company, which operates the Belmont Theatre, on Fifty-second street, above Market, recently obtained from Judge Patterson, in Common Pleas Court No. 1, an injunction restraining the Locust Theatre, Fifty-second and Locust streets, from producing the Box Office Attraction five-reel picture, "Samson."

The court's action was based on a bill in equity filed by the Belmont Amusement Company, which had the right, under a contract entered with the Box Office Attraction Company, Incorporated, lessor of the picture, to show it on the screen of the Belmont Theatre on certain days. Under the contract the Box Office Attraction Company, Incorporated, agreed that the picture would not be leased to any other theater in West Philadelphia before it was displayed at the Belmont.

Notwithstanding the contract in question, the Belmont alleged the Box Office Attraction Company, Incorporated, leased the picture to the Locust theater, to be exhibited on a date which conflicted with the dates already contracted to them.

The Belmont Amusement Company, through Attorney George Q. Horwitz, explained to the satisfaction of the court that should the Locust Theatre be permitted to exhibit the photoplay at its theater first, it would work irreparable injury to the complainant, as it had already been advertised on circulars and printed matter furnished by the defendant company, that the picture was to be shown at the Belmont.

The preliminary injunction is also directed against the Stanley Amusement Company, which acts as the agent of the Box Office Attraction Company in the leasing of pictures to theaters throughout Phildadelphia.

Judge Patterson, after reading the affidavits and petition presented by Attorney Horwitz, decided that it was a case requiring immediate action and he granted the Belmont's petition for the injunction and required the petitioner to enter $1,000 security.

WOMAN'S HOME COMPANION HAS PICTURE DEPARTMENT

Weekly Journal Will Provide Film Comments—Will Attempt List of Best Pictures.

In the current issue of one of the largest women's magazines in the country (Woman's Home Companion), is the announcement that after next month this journal will devote a new department of the paper exclusively to motion pictures.

"In the March issue the Woman's Home Companion will inaugurate a department in which the moving picture theater will be recognized candidly as a powerful, permanent, educational influence in America."

In this department, whose purpose is frankly the encouragement of better films, the editors will present each month the most interesting facts in the development of the moving picture industry, together with definite suggestions as to ways in which the women's clubs of America may work for the betterment of the moving picture theaters in their communities. A selection—constituting perhaps fifty films or less out of five hundred released each month by the better film companies—will be attempted.

FAIRMONT FEATURE FILM TAKES NEW QUARTERS.

The Fairmount Feature Film Company recently took a step in the right direction when it removed to 1304 Vine street, in the heart of the filmdom of Philadelphia. The entire first floor is now occupied by this progressive feature exchange, directly under that of the Universal. In accordance with George Bennethum's plans, every detail has been carefully carried out, and the exhibitors can resume booking as usual. The reception room has been very conveniently located with plenty of room and the offices have been handsomely furnished in golden oak. Many new and novel ideas have been installed, one of which is for the display of posters. This has been so conveniently planned that a dozen different displays can be seen at the same time thereby insuring any exhibitors against loss of time in booking a feature. With the large assortment of production now on hand this is also not a difficult proposition.

OTHER PHILADELPHIA NOTES.

On Tuesday, February 23, 1915, J. Burton Mustin, G. Plantou Middleton and John Blakely applied for the charter of an intended corporation to be called the "Liberty Moving Picture Company," the character and object of which will be to manufacture, buy, sell and lease and otherwise deal in moving pictures, including the printing and developing.

Title has been acquired by Samuel Levick from Harry Bierns to the two-story moving picture theater at 2907 to 2911 North Fifth street, occupying a lot 15 by 100 feet, for a nominal consideration, subject to a mortgage of $18,500. The assessed valuation is $15,000.

Mr. Calehuff, of the Calehuff Supply Company, 1301 Race street, announces that he has installed two of his picture machines in a new moving picture theater opened in Bristol, Pa., by I. Rabinowitz.

The recent inauguration of Governor Brumbaugh, of Pennsylvania, will live in moving pictures and it will not be long before the new governor will be able to witness the spectacle from the standpoint of the man in the audience, if he so desires. At least two sets of films were exposed. Scenes along the route of the parade were snapped, as well as the reviewing stands, sections of the crowd and the taking, by Mr. Brumbaugh, of the oath of office. It is said that one set of the pictures will be sent to the Pan-American Exposition in San Francisco to be made part of the exhibit of the state of Pennsylvania, along with the films of the flag transfer ceremonies last summer, which are already in the hands of the exposition commission.

Churches of five denominations were represented at a union service which was recently held in the Bryn Mawr moving picture theater under the auspices of the Bryn Mawr Federation of Churches. The Rev. S. W. Smith presided. An address was delivered by the Rev. G. Calvert, rector of the Episcopal Church of the Redeemer.

Announcement was recently made in Harrisburg that the new William Penn motion picture theater, Thirteenth street, near Derry, has been leased by Heimbinder and Gold, of Brooklyn, for a period of five years. They will assume management on February 15. The theater was completed by the Bender Brothers, the owners, a few months ago and they started to operate it in October. The firm that has leased this picture house assumed control of the Family Theater, Third and Harris streets, a motion picture house, on December 1, so that the company will now have control of two theaters in Harrisburg.

Lewis M. Swaab, 1327 Vine street, now has the exclusive agency for the Miroroide screen. He also announces a decided lowering of prices for imported carbons by the firm, who have recently received a large consignment from war scarred Europe. It is rumored that two Baird machines are to be sent to Washington.

Mr. and Mrs. William V. Mong recently left Chambersburg, Pa., for Colorado Springs, Colorado, where Mr. Mong will become scenario editor of the Pike's Peak Film Company. Mr. Mong has had long experience in this field of endeavor having been with the Selig scenario department for a number of years.

JOTTINGS FROM LYNCHBURG, VA.

By Julian T. Baber, Special Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE patronage at Trenton Theater since Manager Trent decided to discontinue vaudeville and put on the Paramount program indicates that he made a ten-strike with the change. The Trenton is offering a continuous performance and an added feature in a splendid orchestra under the leadership of Leon Taylor.

The Belvedere Theater, Lynchburg's oldest motion picture house, which has always catered to the better class, is now in charge of Guy Barrett, of Washington, D. C. Mr. Barrett has been identified with a number of leading theaters in Washington. It is his intention to completely change the interior of the Belvedere. The side walls are to be decorated, new ceiling lights installed and the seating arrangement changed in such a way as to make for comfort on the part of every patron. Two new machines have been installed and pictures will be shown without intermission. Messrs. William Pratt and Perin Heresy, pianist and drummer respectively, have made a big hit with their musical accompaniments since being engaged by the Belvedere Theatre.

The new National Theater is being supplied with special features from the General program and is drawing good crowds. Pipe organ music is a special feature.

Galesburg Sunday Shows

Narrow-Minded Baptist Minister Stirs Film Men of City by Wild Tongued Sermon Denouncing Pictures Indiscriminately—Recent Candidates for Municipal Offices Challenged on Their Attitude to Sunday Shows—Reply of Exhibitors.

By Frank H. Madison, Special Correspondent of the Moving Picture World.

ONE of the most intemperate sermons ever delivered in an anti-Sunday theater crusade was that of Rev. F. F. R. Miller, pastor of the First Baptist Church at Galesburg. Some extracts follow:

"These devotees of the silver god seek, of course, to soften their attack on Galesburg's Sunday by promising to exhibit 'sacred' pictures. If there are any pictures from which we should pray to be delivered it is those called 'sacred.' They are so inaccurate, such glaring misrepresentations of Biblical fact, so crudely acted, wanting bothing in conviction and sincerity, even blasphemous in their representations of our Saviour, they are worthless and misleading. The promise to put on 'sacred' pictures is simply a bait to capture the attention of Christian people. Dr. Petrie says of the efforts of the Pathe company to make religious pictures: 'Such efforts to depict the life of Jesus must always fail, as the movies cannot convey religious convictions nor edify the soul.'

"I believe it ought to be tested in the courts as to whether an open Sunday is a question of public policy within the meaning of the law, and therefore a proper question to be placed upon the ballot."

Exhibitors were promised courteous treatment if they wished to give their arguments from the pulpit. Candidates for municipal offices were challenged as to their stand on the Sunday show.

"It is the aim, based on selfishness and the low desire to make money that has caused these people to petition," said the Emmanuel M. E. Church and Sunday school in a resolution against Sunday shows.

The exhibitors made the following statement:

"The motion picture people of Galesburg are being placed in a false light before the public. Because these people, yielding to the clamor of the theater-going public, are making efforts to let the public decide whether the 'movies' should run on Sunday, certain opponents are calling them all sorts of names, making base charges and intolerable insinuations.

"These picture men are not base wretches, murderers, white-slavers or bootleggers. They are plain, ordinary, every-day citizens who pay taxes and obey the laws. They did not try to sneak anything over on anyone. They simply asked that the public show whether it wanted Sunday movies or not.

"No campaign will be made to bring about the Sunday opening. The matter is in the hands of the people and their decision will be final. The public, rather than a few opponents of Sunday opening, should decide this matter.

"The question of Sunday amusements is not for political candidates to settle. It is not for a handful to decide. It is for the people to decide.

"The accusation that among the pictures shown in Galesburg are scenes of murder, rapine, robbery, assault and such acts —the charges are absurd."

INVESTIGATING PICTURE SHOWS

Activities of the Drama League at Jacksonville may include the motion picture shows of the city. Prof. J. G. Ames of Illinois College and Miss Mary Anderson of the faculty of the Illinois Woman's College were appointed to investigate this phase of amusements.

ADVANCE PRICES IN DIXON.

Increased film rentals and the higher cost of carbons are given as reasons for the raised admission prices in Dixon. Effective February 1 the Dixon opera house and the Princess theater advanced to ten cents and the Family theater will get ten cents the first three nights each week and ten and twenty cents the last four.

MORE ILLINOIS NOTES.

Film on Passenger Trains

Pittsburgh Railroad Officials Lay Down Rules Against Carrying of Film by Passengers—Result of Chicago & Northwestern Fire—No Danger with Well Packed Films, but Carriers Are Often Careless.

By Pittsburgh Special Moving Picture World Service.

LOCAL motion picture men who receive films daily from different railroad points, are greatly interested in the latest action of the Pennsylvania railroad to effect more stringent enforcement of the law relative to carrying picture films on passenger trains.

There has been no complaint or violation as far as the safeguard in shipping the films by express and checked baggage is concerned, but the recent explosion of a film carried by a passenger resulting in the loss of two lives near Chicago, Ill., has caused circulars to be sent to the passenger and station officials asking for the exercise of more care in allowing the films to be carried.

It is understood by the railroad officials that the greatest danger lies not in the carriage of the films in baggage or express cars, as the law covering packing is generally complied with in these cases. Passengers, however, whose habits as messengers for picture shows, has been to carry films with them on trains without taking precautions against accidents, will be more carefully watched in the future. The law provides that no passenger is allowed to take a film on a train or even inside a station unless it is packed in metal container, properly marked outside and declared to the railroad agent. Persons carrying films in packages not properly provided against danger will be arrested. The Pennsylvania railroad has also made a regulation against the checking of a film under any circumstance in a parcel checking room.

WILL BUILD NEW THEATER.

A $20,000 moving picture theater will be built at once on the H. J. Heinz lot, at the forks of the road, Penn avenue and Thirty-fourth street, Pittsburgh, Pa. The owner will erect the building for a client. The building will supplant a signboard, the size of the lot being 50x100 feet. The seating capacity of this theater will be 1,000.

PICTURES OF PENNSYLVANIA'S INDUSTRIAL PROGRESS.

Films for Panama Exposition Shown—Some Fine Views of Pittsburgh.

Motion pictures showing the civic, industrial and educational progress of Pennsylvania, which are to be exhibited in the Pennsylvania state building at the Panama-Pacific Exposition, San Francisco, were given a press view in a Fifth avenue theater Monday, February 8, before city officials, members of trade organizations and newspaper men. Immediately after they were shown they were shipped to the Pennsylvania Exposition Commission to be incorporated in the state exhibit.

In the Pittsburg section there is more than 1,200 feet of film, which has been made during the past three months under the direction of the Pittsburgh Industrial Development Commission. This is the first time comprehensive motion views of Pittsburgh have been made and the result is a complete series of pictures illustrating the history of Pittsburgh from a pioneer outpost to a municipality of metropolitan importance, the growth of its industries, the development of its transportation facilities and the superior attainments reached by its institutions being depicted in graphic style.

The exhibition opens with a motion picture view of "Pittsburgh in 1758," showing the forks of the Ohio and the ramparts of Fort Duquesne. This is followed by a remarkable panorama taken from Monument hill, Northside; a view from Herron hill, showing the civic center at Schenley Farms; the Floomfield and the East End residence districts. Downtown scenes are shown from Mt. Washington and from the tops of office buildings. Familiar scenes introducing the coal and gas industry follow, with pictures of coal fleets.

Every phase of the iron and steel industry is given a place on the film. The wealth of Pittsburgh is shown by charts giving financial statistics, comparison of tonnage figures and the magnitude of the value of Pittsburgh manufactured products. The parks and boulevards, schools, churches and residences constitute an important feature of the exhibition. Considerable space is devoted to views of the Carnegie Institute, Memorial hall, the University of Pittsburgh, the Carnegie Institute of Technology, the Allegheny county court house from the new city hall site and the residence sections in various parts of the city.

A SOCIALISTIC PICTURE FILLS LYCEUM AT PITTSBURGH.

The Socialist drama of industrial life, "From Dusk to Dawn," was exhibited in the Lyceum theater, Sixth avenue, Pittsburgh, Pa., Sunday afternoon, February 7, to a packed house. Hundreds of persons were unable to gain admittance to the theater, and there was some confusion in seating the clamoring crowd which stormed the doors. The lobby was crowded to suffocation half an hour before the doors were open. Good order was maintained despite the pressure of people, and there was no trouble from the police interfering with the Sunday showing of pictures.

William J. Van Essen presided and delivered a brief introductory address. It was announced that owing to the illness of James Larkin, the Irish revolutionary leader, the address scheduled for Sunday afternoon, the 13th, was indefinitely postponed. Instead, the people of Pittsburgh got another chance to visit this theater on Sunday to see the repetition of the motion picture, "The Lost Paradise."

Sunday afternoon, February 21, Irwin S. Tucker, of Chicago, with the aid of motion pictures, will lecture on "Socialism and the Family." He will be followed February 28 by Fred D. Warren, former editor of The Appeal to Reason, on "The Power of the Press."

HUNT DROWNED MEN WITH SLIDES IN THEATER.

The Department of Public Safety, Pittsburgh, Pa., recently placed an order for one hundred slides to be made by the Pittsburgh Commercial Motion Picture Company, which offer a $500 reward for the recovery of each of the bodies of Thomas Mooney, William F. Neehaus and Robert M. Oliver. On January 13 these three young men were drowned in the Monongahela river at the Smithfield street bridge, Pittsburgh. These slides have been sent to all the motion picture houses in the towns along the Ohio river to be shown to the public.

OTHER PITTSBURGH NOTES.

The value of pictures as an aid in explaining safety appliances and the avoidance of accidents was the substance of an address delivered last week in Thaw hall, University of Pittsburgh, by J. D. Ayres, safety superintendent of the McKeesport plant of the National Tube Company. Mr. Ayres said that the limitations in the vocabulary of many workmen often mean that printed instructions are wasted effort, but that motion pictures at once had their attention and carry home the idea that is intended.

J. A. Hardy has taken over the Comet theater, Ohio street, Northside, Pittsburgh, Pa. Mr. Hardy will make some decided improvements in this house.

Mr. Bender, proprietor of the West End theater, Pittsburgh, Pa., has installed a Marquette automatic piano.

A moving picture lecture on the manufacture of automobiles was given by Prof. H. E. Dyche of the University of Pittsburgh in the East Liberty Y. M. C. A. last week. The lecture was free and the public was invited.

A. A. Weiland, who handles the Alliance program in Pittsburgh, has completed arrangements for establishing a branch office in Cleveland, Ohio. He has secured a location in the Flatiron building.

A. Minsky, of the Star theater, Wylie avenue, Pittsburgh, Pa., has announced that he will discontinue vaudeville and will hereafter show moving pictures exclusively.

Charles Cochard, a former Pittsburgh manager, recently wrote Charles Seltzer that he is now in Los Angeles, Cal., and expects to take charge of a film concern here soon.

The Pastime theater, Market street, Pittsburgh, Pa., recently installed a Seeburg Motion Picture Player, Style S, and is reported to be giving great satisfaction to the management.

Messrs. Bender and Williams, of the Colonial theater, Troy Hill, Pittsburgh, Pa., are rebuilding their house.

James Delves, state secretary of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, is enthusiastic over the results of the convention held in Harrisburg recently. It is the intention of the local organization to amalgamate with the national association as soon as matters can be arranged.

Manager France of the film department of the Feature Film & Calcium Light Company, Pittsburgh, Pa., reports that "The Master Key" is booked solid until the first of April.

The William Penn theater in McKeesport, Pa., recently installed a Seeburg Motion Picture Player, Style H, from the Seltzer Automatic Music Company of Pittsburgh.

J. S. Stewart, proprietor of the Grand theater, Huntington, Pa., has ordered a new Powers 6-A machine, motor driven, with Gundlach lenses, at the Feature Film & Calcium Light Company. The New Opera House, at Clearfield, Pa., also has purchased a similar outfit.

The moving picture shows in Ellwood City, Pa., have adopted the eight-reel plan. The Savoy and the Majestic, both are showing eight reels lately.

The suffrage film, "Your Girl and Mine," was shown at the Columbia theater, Erie, Pa., last week, under the auspices of the Erie Equal Suffrage Society.

With the consent of the imperial German government, official motion pictures of the German side of the European war were shown in the Schenley theater, Pittsburgh, Pa., last week, with four performances daily. These scenes embrace a long period of the war, beginning with Emperor William's reading of the declaration of war to his people from the imperial palace and covering actual hostilities throughout the struggle and up to within the last two weeks. Later pictures are being added daily to this record of the German soldiers.

Manager of the United Service of Pittsburgh, Harry A. Lande, reports a big interest in this firm's daily service and states that the following theaters took on their service during the past week: Broadway, McKees Rocks; Garfield, East Ohio street, Pittsburgh; Star, Wilmerding; While Away, Federal street, Pittsburgh; Lyric, Windber, and Grand, Johnstown, all in Pennsylvania.

J. B. Gallagher, of Freemansburg, Pa., who for several months has been supervising renovations in the auditorium of Fraternity hall, which he will convert into a motion picture theater, has that place nearly finished.

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

NOTICE:—Every Exhibitor should read and sign this, whether member of the League or not.

Where Do You Want the Convention?

National League President Pearce Asks All Exhibitors to Help Select the Place of Meeting.

IN THE present administration of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, the opinion of every exhibitor in the United States is of value—is wanted—and National President Pearce is asking for it here!

Preparations for the next annual convention are already under way. A city must be chosen. This city must be one that meets the approval of the greatest numbers. Without your definitely expressed view on the point, it is impossible to decide on a city to suit the majority, hence President Pearce wants both League members, and non-members, so long as you're an exhibitor, to express yourself by means of the coupon attached hereto, and MAIL TO HIM TODAY!

This is the psychological moment for us to "put across" the strongest, solidly-welded organization our League has ever had the opportunity to become! Many things have made this the time to put on pressure, i. e., the extremely harmonious conditions of all interests enjoyed at present; the fight on the war tax at Washington; the adverse legislation that has been enacted and forced in various States. These are all contributory factors toward convincing every exhibitor that they should become a member of the League. We've the "big chance" right now! Let's strike while "the iron is hot" and have the sort of League we've all wished for—powerful enough to get what it wants for all its members, influential enough to demand and attain every honorable thing it may deem well to have.

A Different Sort of Convention—that's what this one's going to be! Don't forget that! it's mighty important! Conducted strictly along business lines; avoiding the dissension and wrangling that only retards progress and putting the loud pedal on every helpful influence that will make this Convention one worth holding and one worth you taking your time to attend.

Displays that tell something; a thousand hints and suggestions that are worth money to you; information galore that you can take back home, turn to the increase of your own personal business, benefit by, profit by and result in increased profits for your own personal purse! That's the sort of Convention this is going to be—the very best the League ever had anything to do with!

Where shall we hold it? That's the important thing! We won't know what you think till you tell us and we just care enough about what you think to furnish the coupon for your convenience. Your opinion is valuable in deciding this city. Prompt results mean prompt action. Tomorrow you may be busy, and forget—and we can't list your good intentions.

Don't run the chance of overlooking it, but FILL OUT NOW THIS COUPON and mail it to National President Pearce. You'll be doing a good thing for yourself—a good thing for the League—and we'd appreciate your interest.

The "all for one, and one for all" policy was never more timely than right here in this. Get on record. We'll appreciate your opinion—and most important of all, DO IT TODAY!

MARION S. PEARCE,
National President,
Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America.

Supply Houses Fleeced

San Francisco Supply Houses Recently Bilked by Irresponsible Concern Operating a Picture Actors' School—Were Given Printing Work, but Payment Was a Check Only—Schemers Hoped to Book Amateur Film—How It Was Worked.

By T. A. Church, Special Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

SEVERAL San Francisco supply houses and concerns engaged in film developing and printing work have filed complaints in regard to the treatment accorded them by a firm operating a school for the training of motion picture talent at Oakland, Cal. One prominent firm has been fleeced out of $136 and it has since developed that several others have had a similar experience. The methods of the so-called school are well illustrated by the experience of the firm losing the amount stated. A few days ago a representative of the school called and left a roll of film to be developed. The work was completed and accepted after a screen examination of the print and the bill paid by check. The next day another roll was brought in and to get the print out in the time specified it was necessary to work a force on Sunday. The work was accepted and paid for by check and shortly afterward the two prints were returned by express and the checks came back with the notice that payment on them had been stopped. A notice was sent that the work proved to be inferior and could not be accepted. It later developed that the managers of the school had taken the prints to a number of leading houses around the Bay and attempted to secure bookings, but had not been able to secure any, owing to the amateurish character of the acting, which had been done by beginners. Supply houses are being notified to be on the lookout, as a number have already had unsatisfactory experience with the promoters of fly-by-night schools.

SELZNICK AND SEELYE VISIT PANAMA-PACIFIC EXPOSITION

World Film Corporation Magnates Enthusiastic Over Exposition and Coast Shows and Methods.

General Manager Selznick, of the World Film Corporation, was a visitor in San Francisco during the first week in February, coming by way of the Northwest. He spent several days in this city making a close study of business conditions and in inspecting the local branch, which is considered one of the most important in the chain of twenty-six in this country. While here he visited the grounds of the Panama-Pacific International Exposition and was so impressed with the immensity, beauty and education possibilities of the great fair that he advises all who possibly can to come and enjoy the greatest exposition in history. Mr. Selznick instructed his branch managers to have this advice printed on slides and thrown on the screens of theaters throughout the country.

While here Mr. Selznick and C. R. Seelye, of the sales department of the company, were the guests of James Keane, president of the United Keanograph Company, at a luncheon in a prominent cafe, and other guests being stockholders of the producing concern.

Mr. Selznick was much impressed on his recent visit by the manner in which Coast exhibitors take hold of the very latest ideas for carrying on the moving picture business and declared that in this respect they are ahead of the rank and file of exhibitors in the east and middle west. He said: "I came west with the expectation of showing you people something about the motion picture game, but I find that there is nothing I can show you. Your advertising methods are superior to those in the east; your picture houses are more attractive; your lobbies look better and your whole appearance bespeaks good times."

Mr. C. R. Seelye, of the sales department, said that the newspaper and billboard campaigns carried on here would be a revelation to most eastern exhibitors and could be imitated with profit. Moving picture houses in this territory are much more generally patronized than they are in the east and middle west, that is, a much greater percentage of the population attend amusement places of this kind each week. "At San Francisco I find that fifty percent. of the population, men, women and children, attend moving picture shows each week, and other Coast cities show an attendance in proportion. I spent three days in Seattle and will spend seven days in San Francisco and three days at Los Angeles in making a study of the methods employed by leading exhibitors."

NEW COMPANY INCORPORATED.

The Crescent Amusement Company has been incorporated at Los Angeles, Cal., with a capital stock of $500,000 by T. J. Quinn, S. H. Friedlander, M. Hertz, B. Shaw and S. E. Whitney.

OPERATORS' UNION BALL.

The Moving Picture Operators' Union of Oakland held a grand ball in that city on the evening of February 6th that was widely attended, many coming from San Francisco to join in the festivities. The event was well advertised throughout Alameda County by attractive screen announcements in the leading theaters and by billboard posters.

SAN FRANCISCO BRIEFS.

Herman Wobber, of the Progressive Motion Picture Company, has returned from a hurried business trip to New York, having made the round trip in twelve days.

Motiograph projection machines have been installed in the Sunset theater erected on the Exposition grounds by the Southern Pacific Company, also for the Hawaiian Promotion Committee in the Hawaiian Building, and in the Illinois Building.

C. M. Connors, an operator at the New theater on Polk street, has made an improvement on the shutter on the Motiograph machine used that is attracting considerable attention locally, the leading feature of which is the increased illumination secured.

Wells, Fargo & Co. have received a Powers No. 6A Cameragraph from the New York office, and will install this in a theater that has been set up in the Transportation building on the Exposition grounds. A large amount of film of an educational character has also been received.

The Peninsula theater, located near the county line, which was badly damaged by fire a short time ago, was completely wrecked last week by a heavy wind storm.

The moving picture exhibit of the Pennsylvania lines at the Exposition will be in charge of "Doc" Bennett. Two Edison machines have been installed.

Jesse Goldberg, of the Life Photo Film company, is on the Coast on a business trip.

Sol L. Lesser, president of the Golden Gate Film Exchange, Inc., has left for New York to secure feature films and will be absent for several weeks. The business will be under the direction of M. Calmy during his absence.

The management of the Portola theater has broken away from its regular custom and has extended the engagement of "A Fool There Was" to a second week run to accommodate the crowds that could not be cared for during the first week.

The Tivoli Cafe on Pacific street is again showing moving pictures, there having been a call for this class of entertainment.

The Alcazar theater is to be devoted to moving pictures early in March when "The Clansman" is to be featured there at prices ranging from 25 cents to $1.

The Moving Picture Operators' Union of San Francisco has been supplied with several machines by manufacturers and these are now being rented out with operators. The Savoy theater was furnished with an outfit during the recent engagement of "Ten Nights in a Bar-room" and the German war pictures.

Frank Smith, a well known operator employed at the Empire theater, and for a time in the employ of George Kleine Attractions, was the victim recently of a miscreant who is operating here much after the fashion of the well-known Jack the Ripper. He was slashed about the face and body at the doorway of his home and was so severely injured that he will not be able to attend to his duties for several months. Other persons have been injured in the same fashion of late.

The Union theater at Twenty-third avenue and East Fourteenth street, Oakland, Cal., has been sold to W. A. Tremp.

George Schlessinger, formerly of Susanville, Cal., is now owner of a one-half interest in the Pastime theater at Fresno, Cal.

F. O. Little and E. L. McMurray, of Los Angeles, Cal., have secured a lease on a building at El Secundo, Cal., and will open a moving picture house.

Franklin B. Conway of Mill Valley and Joseph P. Hayes of Camp Tamaplias have opened a moving picture theater at La Verne, Cal., known as the Tamalpias theater. Entertainments will be given on Wednesday and Saturday evenings.

The new management of the Star theater at Colusa, Cal., has purchased a new Powers No. 6A Cameragraph and has installed new seats throughout, as well as making other changes. The house was formerly known as the Criterion.

Al Smith, who conducts a moving picture house at Lakeview, Cal., recently showed "The Spoilers" at the Orpheum at Altauras to large audiences.

A. B. Jones, formerly of Shelbyville, Tenn., has leased the old Music Hall at Dinuba, Cal., and has opened a moving picture theater.

C. C. Kaufman, of the Gem theater, Colusa, Cal., recently made a trip to San Francisco and while there purchased a new projection machine. A new screen has been installed and next summer the theater will be enlarged.

IOWA STATE COLLEGE UNDERTAKES FILM CIRCUIT.

By the Midwest Special Moving Picture World News Service.

WISCONSIN'S example in furnishing films to the schools of the state will be followed to a certain extent by the Iowa State College at Ames. The films will lay stress upon the value of a course in the engineering department, showing industrial processes and, in story form, the advantages of higher education along industrial lines.

High schools, especially in Iowa cities, are urged to provide themselves with projection apparatus. A circuit will be made up of those so equipped. Machines will be loaned to schools which possess none, the transportation charges to be paid by the borrower.

IOWA ITEMS.

J. C. Collins has sold the Cozy theater at Bellevue to James M. Dowdel of Muscatine and has purchased a moving picture house in Los Angeles, Cal.

The Creston Amusement company has sold the Gem theater at Creston to L. W. Hurlburt & Son who have moved the show to a new location.

Manager Moreland, re-opening the Empire at Storm Lake after his recent fire, plans to use fifty reels a week.

Don Scroggin has opened a three-nights-a-week show at Portsmouth.

A new show has been started at Knoxville by M. Osman of Montezuma.

Ed Killion of Algona has been contemplating the purchase of a moving picture house in Iowa or Minnesota.

LIGHT IN ALABAMA.

Authorities in Birmingham Told How Valuable in a Community Are Good Sunday Pictures.

By the Midwest Special Moving Picture World News Service.

THE operation of moving picture shows in Birmingham, Ala., one Sunday for the benefit of the unemployed is believed to have strengthened the cause of those fighting for a permit to show censored pictures regularly on Sunday. A petition by twelve operators was filed with the city commission. Doctors Fielder and Walker, speaking before the board, favored the shows. Commissioner A. O. Lane said the patronage at the benefit shows left no doubt that the people wanted seven-day shows. He said he had made inquiries among young men, given to patronizing less beneficial places on Sunday and found that the benefit to them alone would be of inestimable value. The Pastors' Union has gone on record against the move. A local editor comes out: "We hold that there is no more harm in seeing a funny moving picture than it is to read the comic section of the Sunday pictures. You, who object, explain the difference if you can."

LUMBER FILMS.

Moving picture theaters will be used by the new Southern Pine Association to urge the desirability of that construction material. At the recent meeting in New Orleans, La., when the organization was formally launched, it was planned that one of the divisions of the advertising and publicity department should be: "Moving Picture Exchange of Southern Lumber Conditions."

SHOWS LIFE AT WOMEN'S COLLEGE.

School life at the Florida State College for Women, at Tallahassee, Fla., is shown in the film, "Our College Girl," recently made by C. L. Chester, Inc., of New York.

OTHER ITEMS FROM SOUTH.

The Auditorium at Atlanta, Ga., has been running moving pictures on Sundays to raise a fund to take the local artillery to the San Francisco fair.

Frank Westfall is now in full control of the New Dixie theater at Kissimmee, Fla. This house will play pictures and vaudeville.

The Diamond and Belevedere theaters at Tuscaloosa, Ala., have increased their shows from three to four reels.

The Colonial theater on Magnolia avenue in Daytona, Fla., conducted by C. E. Johnson, was closed on a writ of attachment issued by Mrs. Katherine S. Smith, who claimed that the sum of $625 was due for rent of the building.

Charles F. Morfott, who recently opened the Vaudette theater at Griffin, Ga., has been giving four reels of pictures and some vaudeville for five and ten cents.

W. W. White has been making arrangements to open the Mutual theater in the Alexander building at Commerce, Ga.

George B. Wallace, of Tampa, Fla., announced that he would erect a motion picture and vaudeville theater building seating 600 at Manatee and Fairview avenues in that city.

William F. Howell is new lessee of the Bijou at Pensacola, Fla. Five reels will be given for five and ten cents.

W. S. Veal has taken over the management of the Ideal theater at Conyers, Ga.

Mr. and Mrs. H. Law Davis have purchased the Bonita theater at Carrollton, Ga.

J. M. Meffert bought the Temple theater at Ocala, Fla. He had an agreement to resell to E. C. Bennett, who has been managing the house, and Charles H. Lloyd, and it was sold again.

W. J. Wooten's canvas Airdome picture show at Shelby, Miss., was destroyed by fire.

The new Star theater at Leesburg, Fla., was opened early in February

Club Chooses Quarters

Jacksonville's Newly Formed Theatrical Club About to Open Permanent Home—Finely Appointed Rooms—Theatrical Folk and Business Men Comprise Membership—Transient Actors in Jacksonville Welcome—Officers Elected.

By Leon Louiso, Special Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE Theatrical Club, the new organization in Jacksonville, has taken quarters and its home is the scene of busy workers. The club's quarters are in the center of the city, and the theatrical district, at the southeast corner of Laura and Adams streets. Under the personal supervision of Mr. C. K. Rettick, to whom much credit is due for the rapid advancement of the work, the two floors of the building are undergoing changes and improvements which will soon put the quarters into condition for the installation of the furnishings.

The quarters will include a reading-room, a library, a billiard room, ladies' parlor, cafe, buffet and a ballroom. The woodwork is being done in cherry finish, with light walls. Electric chandeliers and brackets will furnish the lighting.

Mr. Rettick, seeing the need for an organization, with quarters of this kind, interested local men and eventually the project became a realization. The club is open to members of the theatrical profession and persons in business allied with it. A part of the membership include local business men. Managers of local theaters are boosting the proposition as are many of the hotel men of the city. The organization is backed by many active and important people and its success is assured. It is open to the use of all transient members of the theatrical profession and they are urgently invited to make it their headquarters while in the city.

On the committee in charge of the opening night's program is Mr. Guy Coombs, of the local Kalem studio; Mr. A. D. Hotaling, of the Lubin studio, and Mr. Chas. A. Leach, Jr., manager of the Orpheum vaudeville theater, who will invite members of his bill for that week to assist.

The officers of the organization are headed by Mr. George Mason, manager of the Mason Hotel and originator of the Florida movement for a State Fair in Jacksonville, as president; Mr. W. L. Whitehead, manager of the Savoy motion picture theater, vice-president; Mr. Chas. A. Leach, Jr., secretary-treasurer. The board of governors consists of D. J. Prince, C. F. Rettick, L. A. Mitchell, Chas. A. Leach, Jr., and Harvey Carmen, chief clerk of the Seminole Hotel. Mr. C. F. Rettick will be the manager of the club.

OTHER JACKSONVILLE NEWS.

C. Carl Smith, manager of the Republic theater, has returned from Atlanta, Ga., where he has made arrangements for bookings for the theater. The policy has been changed from Universal to four days of features, and three days a week of mixed program. The regular picture program will be supplemented by an added attraction consisting of a novelty entertaining act. The present act is the "Four Musical Cates." Following, in two weeks, Walter Geary, late of the Pink Lady company, will be the added attraction for two weeks.

P. A. Engler, traveling representative of the Atlanta Ga., office of the General Film company, was in the city recently. He called on some exhibitors on the East Coast and reported that business was good.

The Imperial theater is making preparations for a complete new interior decoration. Hugo Oliver, tenor, is the present added number. He is pleasing the patrons who enjoy good singing.

The Grand recently played "Your Girl and Mine" and the assistance of local suffragist sympathizers in selling tickets helped business.

"The Exploits of Elaine" are taking well and are considered by some as one of the best of the serials pictures.

The Prince is entertaining big crowds with pictures of the Paramount service.

STUDIO NOTES.

The Peerless company, under direction of Director O. A. C. Lund, finished some scenes at their specially constructed oil well settings at McGoits Creek. The climax of the scenes at this location was at the burning of the oil wells and derricks.

A photographer, John Spotswood, from a local newspaper, the Times-Union, took some "shots" of the oil well fire and some of these were used in the Sunday edition, Feb. 7, together with a story about the Peerless company.

F. J. Marion, secretary-treasurer of the Kalem Company, is spending a few weeks with his family at their home, which they have taken for the present on Riverside avenue. He will return to New York in a week or two.

Miss Ruth Snow of the Kalem studio has left for Boston, having sailed on the "Mohawk." She will likely remain there for the rest of the winter for a visit with relatives.

NEBRASKA NEWS LETTER.

By the Midwest Special Moving Picture World News Service.

ALTHOUGH the present lease make the project still two years away, plans for a large, exclusive motion picture theater on a site on Farnam street in Omaha, just purchased by Jacob E. Schlank of the Hipp have been made. A frontage of 137 feet has been secured and a theater and business building costing about $300,000 is contemplated. The theater proper will seat about 2,000, and Schlank himself will operate it.

Coursin Brothers of Omaha have purchased the Joy theater at Florence from Joseph Lyons.

F. Van Valkenburg has sold the Palm moving picture theater at Rulo to L. Roycroft.

No one was hurt in a film fire scare at the Elite theater at Fourteenth and Douglas streets in Omaha.

M. G. Campau has been making arrangements to erect an opera house in Oconto.

MICHIGAN NEWS ITEMS.

By the Midwest Special Moving Picture World News Service.

D. R. Salisbury of Owosso has leased the Serr building at Corruna for use as a moving picture theater.

"The New Franklin March" was played for the first time by the orchestra at the dedication of the new Franklin theater in Saginaw. "The Spy" was the moving picture feature in connection with the vaudeville bill.

The North Saginaw Amusement company which will erect a moving picture theater and office building on West Genesee avenue has elected W. F. Hemmeter president, W. A. Schmeck secretary, W. H. Miller treasurer and H. A. Otto, E. A. Snow, E. Schust, Dr. A. V. Linton, James Bagley and William Mertz directors.

The Lyric at Ishpeming, now under new management, has cut matinee prices to five cents for all. Profit-sharing coupons worth one cent each are given with regular tickets.

A new moving picture theater has been opened in the Paul Vettere building at Leslie.

"Tillie's Punctured Romance" did a bigger business at the Family than the management expected. For laughing purposes it certainly "kills all signs of the blues."

Pictures and Politics

In the Northwest Experiences of Picture Men with State and Municipal Regulations Vary from the Best Possible Conditions in Tacoma to Irritating State of Affairs in South Dakota Where Law May Forbid Cigarette Smoking in Pictures.

By Frank H. Madison, Special Correspondent Moving Picture World.

EXHIBITORS in the Northwest will be, to a certain extent, on the defensive as the result of their precipitation into state and county affairs.

The bill introduced into the lower house of the North Dakota Legislature providing for a state board of censors has some friends among the newspaper publishers. One paper not only advocates the passage of the bill, but would bar all films showing the smoking of cigarettes, inasmuch as smoking in this form is prohibited.

Operators in Seattle, Wash., asked the city council to pass an ordinance which would circumscribe the hours worked by any operator and also would touch upon safety conditions in the theaters. A board of examiners is proposed, each operator passing to pay a registration fee of $2.50 and $1.00 for each year thereafter. It would be illegal, under the measure to require an operator to work more than six and a half hours without relief and to work more than eight hours in twenty-four.

Instructions were given to four moving picture theater proprietors in Couer D'Alene, Idaho, to cut more exits, to widen the aisles and the spaces between the seats. This was after an inspection by the police and fire chiefs.

The Social Service Board of Tacoma, Wash., has given the exhibitors there a clean bill of health. The inspectors for the Board found the managers willing to show good pictures and stated that one had eliminated part of a reel deemed objectionable. "Many films have worse titles than views," said Mrs. W. H. Udall. "Of course there are many suggestive pictures that we cannot order stopped."

E. B. Parks, a member of the city council at Eugene, Ore., prophesies that the matter of Sunday theaters will be a live issue in that city before long. That the exhibitors will have a strong champion is evidenced by his statement: "Eugene is losing $2,500 or $3,000 a month that it might have if it were not for its closed picture shows. I know of Junction City people who go regularly to Albany on Saturday night to spend Sunday. The traveling men begin leaving Friday and Saturday. We're driving people away from Eugene. Other cities in Western Oregon have their picture show open on Sunday and they're just as clean towns as Eugene is. There is no more wrong in sitting down to see a good picture than to take my machine and spend the day on the banks of the McKenzie.

IS NATIONAL CENSOR BOARD GROWING CARELESS?

Seattle's Local Board Thinks Picture Should Have Been Cut by New York Body.

Is the National Board of Censorship getting tired of its job and growing careless? A member of the local board in Seattle, Wash., has his suspicions. The Seattle board had almost barred "A Fool There Was," which was booked for the Alhambra, but passed it after quite a little trimming. Regarding this film Dr. Arthur R. Proelss, a board member, is quoted: "The film was bad enough when we got through with it, although artistic and interesting. I do not understand how it got past the National Board. That body is composed of a hundred and fifty professional men and educators who serve without pay. Many of them are among the biggest men in New York. As a rule they are pretty careful, but several films have made their appearance lately which, in my opinion, should have been suppressed. Possibly the members are becoming tired of their jobs and growing careless. If so, some other steps should be taken by the government to censor films."

IMPOSSIBLE PROFITS.

"One Hundred Per Cent. a Year Dividends Can Easily Be Made" is the alluring catch-line of the Satchwa Film Corporation of Salt Lake City, Utah, which has been advertising in smaller Utah papers that it has a few shares of stock left for sale. Announcement has been made that various sections of the intermountain country will be used for backgrounds for the pictures. "This city and surroundings will be used * * *" reads an ad. "Support the home company. Share in the great profits."

MUSICAL PROGRAMS.

Musical programs in Northwestern houses are being carefully watched. The Ogden theater, at Ogden, Utah, has installed a new Foto-Player, which will be operated by Harold Fleming. The Isis in Ogden had an eight-piece orchestra to accompany the film "Mignon." The Liberty male trio was featured by Manager William Cutts at the opening of the new Liberty theater in Spokane, Wash. Frank Wilmington, who has been in the Hub theater orchestra at Casper, Wyo., has accepted a position with the Princess theater at Douglas, Wyo. Max Frolic is the new violinist at the Hub.

LOCAL FILMS GO STRONG.

The popularity of the "Made-at-Home" moving picture is not waning. The Grand theater at Virginia, Minn., had turnaway business with its local films.

George A. Killan, of the York theater company of Denver, Col., was at Cripple Creek, Colo., where he filmed some of the larger mines in that famous district. The films will go to the San Francisco fair and a strip was slated for one of the weeklies. Arrangements have been made to show the 15,000 feet of Idaho views, which were made for the exposition, to Lewiston residents.

Two Northwestern home-talents have practically assumed the dignity of travelogs. William Bruce Leffingwell, the well-known lecturer and travelogist, is using a reel showing the 1914 Cheyenne (Wyo.) Frontier Days celebration. This reel, which was made by the Hearst-Selig company, is loaned to the lecturer by the celebration committee. Although the committee could have sold the filming privilege, it feels the publicity the city gets offsets this monetary loss.

The Campfire Club of America sent from New York City to Pendelton, Ore., to borrow the motion picture record of the 1914 round-up. The "days of yore" films and the industrialog are just as much in evidence.

The Shubert theater at Minneapolis, Minn., had a special show for the Dovre Singing society of the 4,500 feet of pictures which J. Holmbloe, of Bismarck, N. D., made in Norway last summer. This film carried the Scandinavians from the saengerfest at Chicago to the Centennial celebration at Christiana. Norwegian national songs were a feature of the program.

Films of the Yale-Harvard game were shown the Harvard men at their banquet in Minneapolis. The film, "The Pipe Rush," or "When the Worm Turned," made at Northwestern University, Evanston, Ill., was booked by Ray Bagley of the Empress, at Missoula, Mont., because Carl Glick, who wrote the script and played a lead, is a Missoula boy. The Dime, at Walla Walla, Wash., was given over for a special corset-fitting romance matinee.

PICTURES IN MINNEAPOLIS PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

The Bremer school at Minneapolis, Minn., was refused a permit by the city building inspector's department to operate a moving picture show. Principal O. H. Miller says the refusal of the permit is based on the report of an inspector who is opposed to schools entering the moving picture show business in opposition to regular exhibitors. It had been planned to give educational shows to the children without admission fee. Parents of the pupils declare the objections are only technical. The building is fireproof, but the roof is not. This is forbidden in moving picture houses seating 800. Principal Miller said it was intended to seat 350, but the building inspector could not see that others might not be admitted. The loose chairs constitute another objection.

Each public school in Minneapolis which uses moving pictures must act as its own censoring board, according to an edict of Assistant Superintendent B. B. Jackson.

NEW GIRL ARRIVES AT VON HERBERG'S.

John von Herberg of the Liberty, Alhambra and Mission theaters at Seattle, Wash., has a new girl at his house. His friend on the bright weekly Argus declares that if the girl is as pretty as the ones Von Herberg picks out for ushers at the Liberty she will sure be some kid.

PICTURES FOR UNCLE SAM'S JACK TARS.

Much emphasis is being laid by naval recruiting officers in the Northwest on the fact that life aboard a training ship is one long moving picture show. R. A. Bailey, chief yeoman, on a recent inspection trip to Eugene, Ore., made a statement that each ship is to be equipped with a projecting machine and 300 reels of pictures.

ROMANCE BUDDED AMONG THE PICTURES.

A moving picture romance, the settings of which were shifted from Muskegon, Mich., to Cheyenne, Wyo., is revealed with the announcement of the marriage of Edward Kelley, operator at the Amuse, and Miss Alice Hurst, pianist at the same house in Cheyenne. The couple met in one of Carl Ray's houses back in Michigan and went with him to the Cheyenne theater.

SELZNICK IS AGAINST PRICE RAISING.

In a between-trains stop in Portland, Ore., Louis J. Selznick, president of the World Film Corporation, discussed the price question. "I think it is a mistake on the part of some of the exhibitors," he said, "to attempt to raise the price. The ten-cent house made motion pictures and put them on a firm basis. The exhibitor will have a hard time making a success of a show where he charges more money."

LITTLE CRIPPLES SEE FILMS.

Fifty-three little inmates of the Phalen Park Home for Crippled Children in St. Paul, Minn., made up one of the most appreciative crowds that ever witnessed a moving picture show in that city. Few had seen moving pictures and were puzzled. Afflicted arms and legs and twisted little bodies made applause difficult, but nevertheless it was not lacking. The five-reel program at Minnehaha hall was under the auspices of the Progressive Club, Degree of Honor.

HAIR CLIPPERS IN THEATER.

Tresses have been clipped from the heads of girls in a moving picture house at Cripple Creek, Colo., but the police do not believe a regular "Jack the Clipper" is at work. Boys are suspected because the hair was cut unevenly and not near the head, as would have been done if the miscreant desired to sell the hair. Not long ago a clipper was at work in a theater in Victor, Colo.

BELIEVES IN SUNDAY SHOWS.

Defeat of the bill introduced into the Washington state senate to close moving picture houses on Sunday is urged by the Aberdeen World. "The majority sentiment of the state," it says, "will not support such a law. * * * It is not conducive to morality, nor does it serve any good end. This state ought to have advanced in intelligence by this time beyond the stage where such a law could be considered seriously."

PENNY ADMISSION IN DENVER.

"Denver long ago earned the title of the Nickle City of the West; it now looks as though it shortly would be known as the Penny Town." This is the comment of a Northwestern paper on the announcement that the Hippodrome theater, on lower Sixteenth street, in Denver, recently hung out a sign offering fifty general admission tickets for fifty cents, good at any time.

NORTHWESTERN BRIEFS.

Arnold E. Voelker of Spokane, Wash., who purchased the Casino theater at Coeur d'Alene, Idaho, from H. J. Quimby has been making plans to remodel the house.

W. H. Stoothoff has sold the North Branch (Minn.) Review and will devote his time to his moving picture interests.

Fulton Cook and C. Jones have purchased the Bungalo theater at St. Mary's, Idaho, from J. H. Sommers.

Emil C. Smith of Endicott, Wash., has bought the Gem theater at Dayton, Wash., from O. A. Barr.

Construction of the building adjoining the Ogden theater, at Ogden, Utah, has begun. A portion of the ground floor will be used to increase the seating capacity of the theater.

The Rose theater, at Anacortes, Wash., which has been operated by J. O. Ryckman, has been taken over by the Northwest Amusement Company, the Anacortes concern operating the Empire. The Rose will be operated as a strictly ten-cent motion picture house. The Empire will be devoted to feature films, vaudeville and road shows.

B. F. Frazier, proprietor of the Rex, at Hutchinson, Minn., has taken over the management of his house, suceeding Geo. Jacobson, resigned.

"The Montana American," a new live weekly at Butte, Mont., will review moving picture feature attractions deserving praise or censor. No passes will be accepted.

County officials at Price, Utah, stepped in and closed the saloons on Sunday and the city officials threaten to tighten up still more by shutting the picture houses on Sunday.

The Cord Theater Company, of Pasco, Wash., has filed a petition in voluntary bankruptcy.

The Star Amusement company, of Sandpoint, Idaho, just incorporated by residents of that place, plans to give moving picture shows under canvas next summer in the smaller towns of the state. The company is to issue sixty shares of stock at $100 each. The stockholders are H. H. Nagle, J. Herbert Miller, William Abbott, directors; D. W. Henderson, H. E. Brown, R. F. Fisher, S. K. Patterson, A. E. Cherry, M. F. Leeman, Charles Ragland, W. S. Mason, H. S. Halverson and Peter Johnson.

Ben Proffitt, who was badly injured when he was attacked and robbed one night at Chehalis, Wash., has given up the management of the Bell theater because of his physical condition.

The Hippodrome Amusement company, which has taken over the Lyric theater at Fourth and Stark streets, in Portland, Ore., has been incorporated with a capital stock of $1,000 by Thomas W. Murphy, John Fitzpatrick and Mary Doxey. The Lyric is now giving five acts of vaudeville and four films for five and ten cents.

Walter Hall is now operating the Colonial theater in addition to Dreamland at Delta, Col. Both houses will be open on Friday and Saturday nights; the Colonial on Mondays and Wednesday and the Dreamland on Tuesdays and Thursdays.

A new moving picture theater has been opened at Gillette, Wyo.

The Glendive Opera House company of Glendive, Mont., has filed its charter. The company is authorized to have capital stock of $40,000. The incorporators are C. R. Byce, William F. Ullman and Arthur Bouchman.

The Osran Amusement company has had plans drawn for a new theater at Bremerton, Wash. The specifications call for a photoplay theater seating 900 and so constructed, that if desired, theatrical attractions can be played. The title Osran is coined from the names of Manager Oswald of the Dream theater and his associate, Mr. Rantz.

H. L. Thompson of Seattle, Wash., has assumed the management of the Arcade theater at Hoquiam, Wash., succeeding Otto Roesner.

F. M. Behrndt has sold the Gem theater at Adrian, Minn., to John Masgai of Worthington, Minn.

An enclosed smoking room, with full glass front, affording an unobstructed view of the curtain, is a feature of the unusual little motion picture theater which Dr. R. C. Kelsey has been constructing at Gold Hill, Ore. The seating capacity is 200.

S. A. Harper has sold his half interest in the Pastime theater at Prosser, Wash., to Fred McNeill, who is now sole proprietor. McNeill's brother, Allen, will assist him in conducting the house.

Victor Anderson has sold his moving picture show at Brown's Valley, Minn., to John Pesava of Hutchinson, Minn.

Bailey & Ratchford have opened the new Motio theater at Hinsdale, Mont.

John Seifert's new motion picture house, erected on the site of the old Princess, at Tacoma, Wash., will be called the Liberty. The seating arrangement is such that latecomers will not disturb other patrons.

Dr. H. C. Fulton and former Manager Irvine of the Pastime at Asotin, Wash., have opened a new modernly equipped moving picture house in the Fulton block in Asotin.

George Abernathy, proprietor of the Index theater, at Index, Wash., has let the contract for a new theater 30x70.

Feature pictures at ten cents will be used largely at the Lyric theater, Second street and Lakeside avenue, Cour d'Alene, Idaho, slated to open February 15, by Earle P. Browne, president of the newly incorporated company. A local store displayed the new 1915 model Simplex machine.

Robert Hansel has sold the Electric theater at Eddyville to David Mahaffey.

L. G. Finch has opened a moving picture show at Greeley.

Manager A. B. Hager of the Orpheum theater at Baker, Ore., is not the first small-city manager to use a whole page in a newspaper to advertise an attraction, but he is one of the few who have kept the announcement from looking like a public sale bill. His liberal use of space in a local daily heralded the coming of Mary Pickford in "Hearts Adrift" as the first of the Paramount bookings. Manager Baker gets 10 and 20 cents for these attractions.

IOWA LEGISLATURE HAS CENSORSHIP BILL

New Measure Puts Censoring of Pictures in Hands of City Authorities.

By Midwest Special Moving Picture World Service.

A MOVING picture censorship bill has been introduced before the Iowa state legislature at Des Moines by Representative Horchem of Dubuque.

The measure provides that all theaters shall be licensed by city authorities with the chief of police as inspector to see that no pictures with immoral, indecent scenes, or scenes depicting violence are shown. Any city may create a board of censorship. The penalty for the first violation of the law is suspension of the license for three months and for second offenses the revocation of the permit to show is permanent.

SOME PEOPLE ARE MEAN.

The resignation of Rev. W. B. Godsell, as pastor of the Congregational church and erstwhile moving picture exhibitor at Westfield, is reported. The picture shows are blamed. The story runs that the ministerial salary was hardly large enough and the pastor was given permission to add to it by conducting a moving picture show charging admission. Criticism by some of the members and a report by the official report which said that films were shown which inspired the youngsters to "emulate cowboys" followed. The outcome was the withdrawal of the pastor.

OTHER IOWA ITEMS.

J. Vannoy, who with H. H. Eidson operated the Quality theater at Fremont has sold his interest to William Drake.

W. C. Earle has been elected president of the company which is erecting the new Barthell opera house at Waukon. B. L. Robey is vice-president, M. P. Barthell, secretary-treasurer, and A. Thierling, T. Erricson, R. J. Alexander, R. W. Erwin and John T. Lee directors.

E. B. Powers has sold his moving picture show at Maxwell to C. A. Bralley of Kellogg who assumed charge February 1.

Edward Willey has sold the Bon Ton moving picture theater at Mt. Ayr to Loren Blair who has had experience.

The Smiths have named their new moving picture house at Fonda the Muzu theater. The place is well furnished, the equipment including an electric light plant in another building and an electrically operated orchestrion. A seven-reel show was given for the opening.

Charles Berkell has severed his connection as manager of the Elite theater in Davenport to devote his entire time to his various amusement enterprises. Ernest Wilckens, the new manager, had the house in the hands of the decorators a week, installed two new machines and re-opened with a policy of continuous moving picture shows.

The opening date of the new Electric theater at Winfield, now under construction, was fixed for March 1.

The Elite Theater, in Burlington, opening as an exclusive feature house, gave "East Lynne" as its initial offering. Four changes a week will be made. Ten cents will be charged for week days and matinees. Evenings, children will be ten cents and adults fifteen.

The Best theater has been opened at West Liberty.

Damage of $1,000 was caused by fire at the Lyric theater at Garner. Three films were destroyed. Manager Realey had just finished running two reels of "The Trey O' Hearts" for some clubwomen, stepped out of the booth and was in the west end of the building when the flames were noticed. If the door has been closed the fire could have been confined to the operating room.

The Family theater at Davenport had two matinees for children when Mary Pickford in "Cinderella" was shown. These were held at 4.30. Even the mothers and grownups were requested to attend the earlier matinees as arrangements had been made to care for the youngsters.

Lexington's Sunday Law

Resuscitation of Old Sunday Law in Kentucky Used as Club to Force Exhibitors to Sign Agreement to Keep Closed During Certain Hours on Sunday Evenings—Indictments of Prominent Picture Men Plentiful—Law Will Be Contested.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Special Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE Sunday closing proposition in Lexington, Ky., is proving a very interesting study to motion picture men all over Kentucky. The city authorities at Lexington are waging a warm fight against the exhibitors and the latter are putting up a strong resistance. The Fayette County Grand Jury filed a report on February 6, showing nineteen indictments returned. Included were several moving picture men. It was rumored around the courthouse that the probers would continue their activities until all violators of the Sunday-closing laws had been indicted.

It is said that the indictments will include, in addition to motion picture shows, all newspapers, street cars, interurban cars, milk wagons, cigar and drug stores. In fact, the old "blue laws" which made Connecticut famous two hundred years ago may be closely approached in discovering violations.

The Colonial Amusement Company, which operates two motion picture theaters, and J. H. Stamper, owner of the Orpheum Theater, were indicted on charges of conducting their amusement houses on Sunday. Nelson Van Houten Gurnee, of the Gurnee Amusement Company, which operates the Ada Meade theater, hurried to Lexington from Columbus, O., to appear before the Grand Jury to show cause why he should not be indicted. He was given until Monday to decide whether he would sign an agreement to close his theater on Sunday during the prescribed hours.

Managers of the moving picture houses, who had been indicted, announced later in the day that County Attorney Hogan Yancey had informed them that while the Grand Jury had indicted them for running open house on Sunday he would see that these indictments were annulled if the moving picture exhibitors would sign an agreement to cut out the shows between the hours of 7:00 and 8:30 o'clock Sunday evenings. The show men declined Mr. Yancey's proposition, and declared that they would fight the indictments to a finish. The moving picture men argue that if it is wrong to operate during certain hours it is wrong to operate at all on Sunday.

J. H. Stamper, Jr., one of the indicted men, is a very prominent member of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Kentucky and also of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America.

RECALLS EARLY PICTURE BEGINNINGS IN LOUISVILLE

Louisville Times Prints Interesting Account of First Steps of Infant Film Business.

The Louisville Times, one of the leading daily papers of Louisville, Ky., co-operated with the motion picture men to the extent of a "good story" on February 5. This day, it was stated, was the forty-fifth anniversary of the moving picture invention, and the paper reviewed the early efforts in Louisville to present moving pictures and the success which attended them. The chronicle is as follows:

"In view of the fact that to-day is the forty-fifth anniversary of the moving pictures, their advent in Louisville is of unusual interest. While variations of the original device had been shown as curiosities, it was not until 1903 that actual moving pictures were shown in Louisville. They served to foreshadow what has since been accomplished.

"The first moving pictures were shown in Louisville by Robert ('Bob') Gray and the 'auditorium,' where Klein's restaurant now is on Fourth street, was in the form of a sight-seeing car seating about fifty people. The pictures shown were street scenes in New York, London, Paris and other large cities and the admission was five cents. During the same autumn the Dreamland theater was opened by two ex-circus men. This theater had a seating capacity of 150 persons and was located on the south side of Market street near Fifth, and is said to have been the third theater in America to have a specially built front. Not more than 1,000 feet of film or one reel was shown and the admission price was ten cents.

"From these beginnings the business grew rapidly. 'The Crystal' took the place of Robert Gray's original house on Fourth street; the 'Bijou' (now the Columbia), was opened by Judge W. A. Kinney, Irvin Simons and Alex Kremer in 1905 and these were shortly followed by the 'Marvel' and the 'Princess' (now the Orpheum), the transformation of the Hopkins' theater into a moving picture house and the opening of 'The Casino' in the spring of 1908.

"On Christmas day, 1908, the first Majestic Theater was opened by R. S. Brown, L. J. Dittmar and their associates, with a seating capacity of 150 persons. This was replaced by a new building in November 1911, with a seating capacity of 1,200. Since the beginning the number of picture theaters, urban and suburban in Louisville has grown to twenty-two, with an average daily attendance of 22,000 persons.

"The first moving pictures, as shown in Philadelphia, February 5, 1870, by Henry R. Heyl, the inventor, were extremely crude, but they served to establish the principal on which the marvels of today are built. Back in 1870 the flexible ribbon films and instantaneous exposures were unknown, and it was necessary to limit the views to those that could be taken by time exposure on wet plates. These pictures were taken with care and great patience, and were reproduced on very thin glass plates. The device for holding them consisted of a skeleton wheel, divided into eighteen parts, into which the plates were fastened. The wheel as it revolved threw upon the screen, by use of the crude magic lanterns of those days, the various pictures in succession. Of course the movements were limited and there were few plates, and the continuous turning of the wheel brought nothing but repetition. However, the effect had been produced and human imagination had for the first time seen a man dance on a screen."

PICTURES HELP TO SET RIGHT INSANE MINDS.

One of the most interesting uses to which motion pictures are put in Kentucky is that employed by the Central State Hospital, of Lakeland, Ky. The hospital is a large insane asylum located about twelve miles from Louisville. About two years ago the officials of the hospital purchased a Standard machine and introduced comedy films. Every Tuesday night four reels of comedy are shown in the big auditorium for the benefit of the white patients. Every other Wednesday night four reels of comedy are shown to the colored inmates. It has been discovered that high grade comedy is more interesting to the patients than feature material, but great care is taken in selecting the films used. These films are being supplied by the S. & P. Film & Supply Company, of Louisville. Feature material in many cases would be too hard for the patients to follow, and interest is lost quickly. The films, however, have the effect of educating the patients to some extent and get their minds working in normal channels. The patients talk about the films from week to week and ask frequently about the shows to be given. More interest is being displayed all the time and the officials of the hospital feel that the moving picture investment is one of the best they have ever made. The shows generally start about 7 o'clock in the evening and wind up shortly after eight o'clock.

COLORED PEOPLE HAVE OWN PICTURE HOUSE.

C. H. Chandler, colored, of Berrytown, Ky., a colored settlement near Anchorage, Ky., has interested a number of the colored brethren in his community in a moving picture house. A building has been erected, a gas machine installed, and moving pictures are now being run regularly. This colored settlement is composed of the highest class darkies in the vicinity of Louisville. Many of them are servants of wealthy white families living along the Louisville & Eastern Interurban line. The house is being conducted in a high class manner and is said to be doing nicely.

FARMERS' FILMS.

It has been announced at Henderson, Ky., that moving pictures of especial interest to farmers will be shown at the opera house on February 25 during the session of the State Farmers' Institute. These pictures will cover the last annual meeting of the Kentucky State Fair Association, good roads work in Kentucky and strawberry-growing in Warren county, near Bowling Green. These pictures are real moving pictures, interesting and instructive from an educational or agricultural viewpoint and are expected to make a big impression.

AMATEUR NIGHT MAKES TROUBLE FOR EXHIBITORS

Louisville Will Enforce Child Labor Law—Children Attracted by Amateur Night and Bad Effects Noticeable.

The smaller motion picture houses of Louisville which have specialized on amateur vaudeville performances, etc., have been warned that they will be prosecuted if they allow juvenile performers to appear in their houses. Disguised in a shawl, heavy-rimmed spectacles and an old coat, Miss Madge Nave, Woman Labor Inspector of Kentucky, entered the Norman moving picture theater, at Twenty-First and Portland avenue, on Thursday night, February 4, and prevented a "singing act" in which eight children were to have participated. Miss Nave announced the next day that a warrant would be issued for the owner of the theater for alleged violation of the Kentucky Child Labor Law and that the children would be placed in the custody of the Juvenile Court to see that they do not appear again. According to Miss Nave it has been necessary for her to adopt a disguise when visiting a theater where an amateur performance has been scheduled, as the act is oftentimes cancelled when she is seen to enter a theater. She has prepared numerous disguises to meet the situation. "The amateur night evil was practically dead in Louisville," said Miss Nave, "until several weeks ago, when reports came to me that troups of children were appearing on the stages of several of the theaters in the East and West ends. I went to these theaters several times with other witnesses, but no children appeared. We found from the audience that the children had been expected to sing and dance, and knew that our presence prevented it. I went to the Norman theater in disguise after receiving word that the amateur performance was scheduled. The Juvenile Court reaps a harvest of the children who become 'amateurs.' They soon learn the manner of the cheapest class of vaudeville actors, their voices become hard, and a change comes over them. Aside from the effects of the light and excitement, there is the actual danger in the fact that many amateurs come to the theater alone and leave it alone. The songs and dances generally ape the worst features of vaudeville—they are love-making songs of a very low order, and the children who give them mostly are between the ages of 14 and 16." Miss Nave stated that all moving picture managers who had given "amateur nights" in their theaters after the new child labor bill went into effect will be brought into court. It has been suggested that Miss Nave would make a high class subject for a moving picture melodrama act.

NEW THEATRE IN NEW ALBANY.

M. Switow, president of the Switow Amusement Company, of Louisville, which operates a string of theaters in Louisville, New Albany, Ind., Jeffersonville, and other points in Kentucky and Indiana, has announced that he will erect a new $20,000 theater in New Albany. The new theater will occupy the present site of the Victoria Theater, on Market street, a short distance east of the Daisy Depot. Work on the structure will begin early in the spring. The Victoria theater building was erected by Mr. Switow five or six years ago on leased ground. Mr. Switow has now closed a deal for the land and for six additional feet on the east side of the building. The new theater will be of brick and concrete and will seat 1,000 persons. Mr. Switow has leased a motion picture theater on Vincennes street, near King, which he will operate while the new theater is under construction. This leased theater is the old Home Theater owned by J. C. McManus. The fixtures, machines, etc., will be transferred. C. E. Hampson is manager and part owner of the Victoria.

LOUISVILLE BRIEFS.

C. C. McClure, of Clearfield, Ky., proprietor of a moving picture house, has been confined to his bed with an attack of pneumonia. He is reported to be somewhat better and his ultimate recovery is practically certain.

Rowland Clark, proprietor of the Arista Theater, of Lebanon, Ky., which was recently severely damaged by fire, has rebuilt the theater and now has a first class show house. A Wurlitzer orchestra, equal to a five-piece orchestra, has been installed.

The Columbia Theater, of Frankfort, Ky., was practically destroyed in a fire shortly after midnight on February 3. The damage to the theater and the building in which it was located is estimated at $6,000. The origin of the fire is unexplained. The theater had been closed for over a week under an execution in the hands of the sheriff and no one is known to have been around the theater. The house was used as a combined moving picture and vaudeville establishment but did not prove successful.

The Colonial Amusement Company, of Lexington, Ky., which operates the Colonial and Star theaters and the Alamo Theater, of Paris, Ky., is about to close a deal with C. H. Berryman, representative of the estate of the late John B. Haggin, for a lease on the Lyons building, at the corner of Main and Limestone streets. It is proposed to erect a fine new moving picture house on the property.

The new "Queen" theater of Mt. Sterling, Ky., was recently opened to the public. The first crowds were large and it was impossible to handle all the people who wanted seats. The interior and exterior of the theater has been fitted up exceptionally well for a town of the size of Mt. Sterling and it is said to be one of the best country houses in the state.

The enterprising managers of the Star theater of Russellville, Ky., have purchased, through H. C. Hill, the newest and most complete electric lighting plant that has ever been seen in the section. This equipment consists of a 6-h.p. I. H. C. "Mogul" oil burning engine, belted to a 3½-k.w. Willey electric generator, complete with switchboard, meters, etc. The new machinery was placed in operation on Monday, February 1. Matinees will start at 2 o'clock hereafter.

The Dixie theater, of Russellville, Ky., has been showing some very high class productions to packed houses. The most prominent of these productions were "Judith of Bethulia," "The Wolf," "Blood Will Tell," "The Lion and the Mouse" and "My Friend From India." The price of admission remains unchanged at five and ten cents.

A number of prominent business clubs, manufacturers, etc., of Kentucky, recently received letters from the "Made in U. S. A. Industrial Film Exhibits," of New York, in which the film concern tried to interest Kentucky manufacturers in films of local color to be used in a nation-wide campaign to bring American merchandise to the front. J. Alexander Leggett, general manager of the concern, is the American industrial agent for Pathe Freres, and he will direct and supervise the production of the "Made in U. S. A." films. It is understood to obtain 1,000 feet of film from each community. This 1,000 feet of film to be of ten units of 100 feet, each unit portraying some product in interesting phases of manufacture. It is proposed to circulate the pictures so that they will be seen by five million people in various parts of the country. Manufacturers will be asked to pay $265 per 100 feet for the film. The original cost will include the exhibitions in various parts of the country, extra copies, etc.

The Columbia theater, of Frankfort, Ky., was recently reopened as a vaudeville and motion picture house. The theater is now affiliated with the Gurnee Amusement Company, of Lexington, Ky., through which it obtains most of its vaudeville bookings. Universal and other service is being used with a change daily. The vaudeville program is changed semi-weekly. The first picture shown was the two-act Universal drama, "The Coward," featuring Dorothy Phillips. A first-class orchestra has been provided and admission fixed at ten cents for adults and five cents for children. The only cheap thing about the theater, according to Manager Schmidt, is the price. Business has started off nicely and the management is very well pleased.

Bopp & Bartles, proprietors of the Majestic theater, of Cannelton, Ind., are not satisfied with drawing trade on their own side of the Ohio river, but also advertise in the newspapers of Hawesville, Ky., which is located directly across the river from Cannelton, and is connected by ferry. The theater is drawing fairly well from the Kentucky side and is doing a good Indiana business. "The Million Dollar Mystery" made a big hit at this theater and the forty-reel "Zudora" is now being shown.

MISSOURI.

The initial performance was given at the new Sharp theater at Richmond, Mo., last week. The decorating work was done by an artist and is delightfully attractive, and shared interest on first view with the pictures. The house was filled and each person that attended was given a carnation by the management.

The Landers theater at Springfield, Mo., had the Lyman H. Howe films, showing the American navy of 1915. The pictures are Mr. Howe's latest, those featuring the life of the sailor on and off the ship. The effect of the American occupation of the Philippine Islands, particularly the military life, and the last part showing the firing of torpedo tubes and big guns, were absorbingly interesting to citizens of the interior of the country.

The Aladdin theater, "House Cozy," at Springfield, Mo., is advertising the first releases of Biographs, Vitagraphs, Lubins, Pathes, Kalems, Essanays and Edisons.

MISSOURI FILM MEN BUSY.

Kansas City Film Men Say Business Is Feeling Upward Lift.

By Kansas City Special Moving Picture World News Service.

Most of the film companies in Kansas City say that the bookings have increased rapidly in Kansas City and the reports from the branch offices in Missouri and Kansas have been very good. That business will be larger this year is the belief of all of the Kansas City film managers, though the lists of visiting film people last week was smaller than it has been for some time. There is also a lull in the announcement of new theaters projected within the city limits. In the surrounding territory many theaters are being built or remodeled. There seems to be a great deal of competition in the small towns, while the business seems on a tolerably permanent footing in the cities. Many of the managers after keeping their patrons warm all winter are now puzzling their heads about how they are going to keep them cool this summer.

C. S. Edwards, Jr., manager of the Pathe Exchange, Inc., peeked out from behind a pile of papers and letters that loaded his desk last week, offering only the explanation "good films and better service." Mr. Edwards says that he has been so swamped with business that he cannot leave the office five minutes during the day. "The Exploits of Elaine" have been meeting with a big success wherever they have been shown. This picture has been booked extensively in Kansas City. Here are some of the engagements that have been arranged for this picture: Richlynn Amusement Co., Wonderland theater; Richlynn Amusement Co., Subway theater; F. A. Britton, Glory theater; W. G. Jones, Merit theater; O. G. Snyder, Colonial; W. O. Burkey, Troost theater; C. H. Burkey, Summit theater; Walter Quade, Bonaventure theater; C. W. Lamar, 29th Street theater; J. G. Hiatt, Gladstone theater.

MORE MISSOURI ITEMS.

M. H. Goode has been placed in charge of the branch office of the Mutual Movies, opened at 301 Hanson Building, Omaha, Neb., last week.

The Willis Wood theater is offering a choice bit of comedy this week—Lew Fields in "Old Dutch."

The Pathe pictures, "The Life of Our Saviour," have been received with a great deal of admiration by Kansas City moving picture fans.

Another print has been ordered made of "A Fool There Was." This Box Office Attraction has received a great deal of attention, part of which may have come from the commotion caused by the censors during an engagement of the picture in Kansas City. Many are of the belief that this was simply a great little press agent stunt. If it was it has to be admitted that it was very cleverly pulled off, and is still adding business to the houses that show the film.

Ethel, Mo., will soon have one of the best decorated and safest moving picture theaters in the state. The work of remodeling this theater is nearly completed. Messrs. Townsend & Humphrey, the two men who will operate the theater, have secured the Universal film service and will have their shows three nights each week.

The Lona theater at Sedalia, Mo., recently had Daniel Frohman's movie dramatization of Prof. William Hervey's book "Aftermath," and the Vitagraph comedy, John Bunny in "Such a Hunter." Robert Edeson in "The Call of the North" and Mary Pickford in "The Eagle's Mate" will soon play for Sedalia patrons.

"The Cross on the Desert" headed the bill at the Star theater at Butler, Mo., last week. The Broncho features are very popular in the small towns.

The Star theater at Hannibal, Mo., presented "The Italian" last week.

Tax on Tickets Now

Legislative Committee of Montreal's City Council Passes Clause of Theater Bill Levying Tax of 5% on Each Ticket Sold—Money Will Go to City's Hospitals—Burden Will Fall on the Exhibitors—May Result in Organization.

By Gerald Gallagher, Special Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE authorities have passed that clause in the Montreal Bill relating to the taxing of theater tickets and this is likely to result in the formation of an association of exhibitors to fight such blindly considered legislation. The clause referred to makes theater tickets liable to a tax, the proceeds to go to charity and, as amended and carried by the Legislation Committee of City Council, it empowers the City to levy a tax not exceeding five per cent. of the value of each ticket. The revenue from this tax is to be devoted exclusively to the Montreal hospitals. The City may even exercise its right to sell the tickets.

Of course, it is expected that the patrons will pay this tax; but five per cent. of five cents is so small a sum that, in the competition of the business, the difficulties of adjustment will throw the burden wholly on the houses. Five dollars a day on every hundred, will amount to a considerable sum at the close of the year.

Managers of many of the legitimate theaters and of picture houses have signed an agreement to fight this especial measure together and have arranged to contribute to have a lawyer conduct their case. It is hoped that this temporary organization will result in a permanent body to care for the interests of the picture business. The fruits of such an organization as was recently formed in Toronto are at once apparent. There is a kind of man in every community who will always stay out of new organizations and reap the benefit from the labors of others; but let such be forgotten; the need and profit of an organization here is incontestable.

WIDE-AWAKE EXHIBITORS DOING GOOD BUSINESS.

Business is not up to the usual mark in Montreal these days. Most houses are complaining of a falling-off in trade. Besides hard times, one important cause may be that the winter season is now in full swing and people are taking the opportunity to indulge in the many out-door sports for which Canada holds an enviable position. There are, of course, those houses which always seem to weather any storm. The secret of their success and popularity is that they come across with the right stuff at the right time. When a lull in business is felt, instead of cutting down expenses by curtailing their programs and advertising space, the wide-awake manager fights all the harder and literally pulls the reluctant patron into his show. A faint heart never won success, and this is just as true of the show business in Montreal at present, as of anything else; for example, the question of a local organization of film men.

NEW THEATER TO BE BUILT IN MONTREAL.

Columbia Amusement, Ltd., Incorporated—Will Build Theater to Seat 2,500 People.

The Columbia Amusement, Ltd., has been incorporated under the laws of the Province of Quebec with a capital of one million dollars. The company contemplates the erection of a twenty-five hundred seat vaudeville and moving picture theater on Mansfield St. near St. Catherine Street. The subscription books are open, a prospectus has been issued, and though money is very tight the promoters are sanguine in their hopes that the stock will be speedily subscribed for.

A Board of Directors has been formed with Frank A. Veitch as president; J. N. Arcand, vice-president; T. G. Bertrand, secretary-treasurer; and Z. Renaud as the managing director. The other directors are Alderman Menard, H. Colbourne, Jos. Richard, and A. Cloutier. Mr. Z. Renaud will manage the new theater. He is a man of vast experience in the moving picture game, his last position being that of manager of the Strand theater in this city.

The site for the erection of the proposed house is an ideal one, being in the heart of the shopping district, within a few yards of all the large hotels and railroad stations, and easily accessible by the street-cars from all parts of the city. Figuring on low estimates, the prospectus states that the first year's profits should be $91,000.

The advent of the new theater will be awaited with curiosity by the local film men. The proposed house will be in opposition to the Strand, and will to a great extent liven up the competition between the many houses in the vicinity.

MONTREAL BRIEFS.

F. H. Warnicker, formerly connected with the Mutual Film Corporation and the General Film Co., is now one of the World Film army in the Jaeger Building. Work has been carried on with great speed at the new quarters with the result that this feature firm has one of the finest offices in the city, and quite in keeping with its growing business.

The wildest and most majestic of Canada's mountains, those on the famous Mount Robson route through British Columbia, were shown in a scenic film of exceptional beauty at the Imperial theater last week. The film was exhibited in Montreal before being despatched to the Panama Pacific International Exposition at San Francisco.

A recent visitor in town was J. L. Lavoie, who is associated with Geo. C. Talbot in the management of the Talbotoscope, Hull, Que. Mr. Lavoie reports good conditions in his town.

The Pathe's local office's latest acquisition is a projection room. The booth is expensive, being fitted up with the latest style of apparatus. Three mornings a week are set aside for trade shows. Business is increasing by bounds around Mr. Ouimet's quarter.

Mr. Lubin, of the Allied Features, Inc., announces that his firm will handle the Alliance program in Canada. The aim of the Allied people is to give exhibitors throughout the country varied and high-class releases of notable features.

Recent features at local houses were: Allfeatures' "The King's Minister," Imperial; World Film's "Wildfire," Strand; United Film Service's "The Price of Crime," Colonial; Kalem's "The Cabaret Singer," Mount Royal; Famous Players' "His Last Dollar," New Grand; Victor's "His Guardian Angel," London; Famous Players' "The Man from Mexico," Casino; World Film's "The Deep Purple," Fairyland.

IN KANSAS.

The De Luxe theater at Hutchinson, Kansas, featured the Bunny Graft, "Bunny's Little Brother," last week.

Alice Brady in "As Ye Sow" was featured at the Electric theater at Emporia, Kansas, last week. "Officer 666" is the feature attraction booked for this week.

The DeLuxe theater at Hutchinson has been offering many of the best feature attractions. "The Little Engineer" was recently shown there.

NEW THEATER AT DODGE CITY.

By Kansas City Special Moving Picture World News Service.

DODGE CITY, Kansas, expects to have a new $30,000 theater very soon. Arrangements have been made by Ote and Merritt Beeson for the erection of a fine, modern, fireproof house. The floor will seat 700 and the balcony 300 people, and the stage will be 25 feet deep and 32 feet across. The construction will be of reinforced concrete, with stucco trimmings. First-class pictures will be shown frequently; the theater will also have stage engagement.

BRIEF NOTES FROM KANSAS.

The Gem theater at El Dorado, Kan., is being remodeled and is expected to be one of the best theaters in the state when finished. The seating capacity will be 500. A cooling apparatus will be installede for use this summer.

"Hot Stuff" was on the program of the Novelty theater at Winfield, Kansas, last week.

Michael Simone, owner of a moving picture show at Weir City, Kansas, opened the door of his office after the show one night last week and was confronted with three sticks of dynamite lying in the entrance with a sputtering fuse attached to them. Mr. Simone's wife and children were with him. He picked up the dynamite and threw it across the street. It struck near the curbing and exploded, wrecking the front of a restaurant and the office of the Long-Bell Lumber Co. No reason could be given for the attempted blow-up of the show.

F. M. King, representing the Kansas Panama Commission, went before the Commercial Club of Iola, Kansas, last week and urged that town to participate in the plan of advertising Kansas cities in moving pictures at the Panama Pacific Exposition. The club thought favorably of the plan until the matter of the expense was reached and they considered the advertising was not worth $500 to the town. Most of the larger cities of Kansas have already had their pictures taken by the movie mon and will be "shown" for the exposition crowds this summer.

WINNIPEG, MAN., NOTES.

By Gerald T. Gallagher, Special Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

ADVICES from Winnipeg, Manitoba, state that hard times have caused some of the exhibitors of the Western city to drop their prices of admission to a nickel.

The Marcus Loew people have given up the Empress theater, and it will be operated as a popular price picture house by Mr. Schuberg, proprietor of the Province theater.

John E. Boldt, manager of the Bellevue had moving pictures of his neighborhood taken, and later showed them on his screen. Mr. Boldt is gaining the good-will of the neighborhood by such acts as this and is doing a fine business.

The personnel of the local Universal office has been strengthened by the acquisition of H. W. McCollun. Mr. McCollun was formerly connected with the Universal's Chicago office. Several changes in the layout of the office have been made, affording greater means of efficiency in handling orders and attending to customers.

We have it from good authority that great improvements will be made to the Strand theater shortly. The Strand is one of the largest and most beautiful theaters on West St. Catherine street. The seating capacity will be enlarged and decorations improved.

Recent features at local houses were: Famous Players' "The Crucible," New Grand; World Film's "Mignon," Strand; Vitagraph's "The Little Angel of Canyon Creek," Imperial; Universal's "The Beautiful Unknown," Mount Royal; World Films' "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch," Fairyland.

ST. LOUIS NEWS LETTER.

By A. H. Giebler, Special Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

WHEN the King's theater, Kingshighway and Delmar avenue, opened its doors again at 1:30 on Saturday afternoon, Feb. 6, a line of prospective ticket buyers had formed that extended far down the street. Doormen, ticket sellers and ushers were never so busy as on that day and the next, when the King's was taxed to its utmost capacity for every performance. The opening bill was the six-reel feature, "Tillie's Punctured Romance," with Marie Dressler, Charles Chaplin and Mabel Normand in the leading roles.

The "St. Louis Republic," a morning newspaper, enabled 2,000 poor children of the city to see the Williamson Submarine pictures, on exhibition at the Garrick theater, 6th and Chestnut streets, on Saturday, Feb. 13. Two special matinees were given, beginning at nine o'clock in the morning. Many of the children were from various institutions, and a number of the little spectators were deaf and dumb. After the performances the children were taken back to their homes in automobiles.

William Sievers, manager of the New Grand Central theater, Grand and Lucas avenues, was compelled to postpone the exhibition of the feature, "A Fool There Was," on account of an agreement made between the managers of the stage production and the photoplay producers that the photoplay must not conflict with the spoken play. The stage play is booked for an early engagement at one of the downtown houses, and Mr. Sievers was fortunate to procure "The Tigress," with Olga Petrova in the lead, as a substitute.

A rather one-sided compliment was paid to moving pictures by a leading prelate of St. Louis, at morning service on Sunday, Feb. 7. He reprimanded his absent parishioners from early service for staying too late in bed on Sunday morning, caused by staying too late at shows, mostly moving picture shows, on Saturday night. He contrasts "the vision of scenic beauty, of color schemes, and emotional effects," with "the sobriety of worship, the dryness of devotion and the tediousness of the sermon."

Clarence Hyde has sold the Crystal moving picture theater at Little La Salle, Col., to Dwight McKenney.

IN TENNESSEE.

The Queen Theater, of Knoxville, Tenn., has been using a unique as well as strong line in featuring big productions in which high class actors or "actorines" take part. This line is "Another Two Dollar Star." This heading was recently used in referring to Florence Reed.

Manager Graham, of "The Theato," at Chattanooga, has closed the house and will not open it again for some time. Extensive repairs are to be made to the theater and it is not known how long it will be before pictures can again be shown.

WILL BUILD NEW THEATER IN NASHVILLE, TENN.

Tony Sudekum, president of the Crescent Amusement Company, of Nashville, Tenn., has announced that the company will build a new and handsome theater at Clarksville, Tenn., to take the place of the Lillian theater, recently burned. The activities of the Crescent Company were not crippled to any extent by the recent fire, as the shows were transferred to the Elite theater, although the latter is not as fine or commodious a house. A site for the new theater has been selected, one whose central location will make it even more desirable than the former one. The new theater will be more elaborate and handsomer in every way than the "late Lillian." Work on the new building will start shortly, it is said.

Want No Local Censors

Chattanooga Exhibitors and City's Board of Commissioners, Except Mayor Thompson, Are Against Establishing Local Censor Board—Mayor Declares It Necessary—Would Weakly Shift Responsibility from Executive to Board.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Special Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

MOVING picture men of Chattanooga, Tenn., and other points in the vicinity have been very much interested in a plan, and still more interested in its defeat, on the part of Mayor Thompson, of Chattanooga, to create a board of censors to pass on all films shown in the city. At a recent meeting of the Board of Commissioners, Mayor Thompson stated that though he was in the minority, being the only one out of five members of the board, he was just as strong as he ever was for a proper censorship of moving picture shows. He declared that this was something absolutely necessary for the moral welfare of the young people of the city. He announced that he had written to and asked the National Board of Censorship for a list of films which the board had turned down and that the list would soon be in his hands.

Following this announcement at the meeting of the city commissioners on February 1, Mayor Thompson made an attempt to establish a board of censors for the city, but his measure was defeated by a tie vote. Commissioners Sloan and Betterman voted against the measre, while Commissioner Evans voted with the mayor. Commissioner Warner was in Florida and therefore the deadlock could not be broken. In renewing the picture censorship project, which was defeated once before, a year or so ago, the mayor said that it had long been his conviction that the City of Chattanooga should exercise some sort of censorship over the photoplays shown on local screens; that now and then objectionable films found their way into local theaters, which were not good for the morals of the young people who saw them. He cited an instance of a film recently shown in the city. He received a number of letters and complaints, some by telephone, concerning this film. He declared the picture should never have been shown and would not have been if there had been a board of censors. He cited the fact that the city of Atlanta, Ga., had censorship and upon inquiry he had discovered that the said film was not shown in Atlanta, as the censors would not pass it. "So they shunted it over onto Chattanooga," said the mayor. "We have a reputation abroad as a city that allows anything in the way of a motion picture and they send anything here that cannot be exhibited anywhere else."

As a remedy the mayor suggested that the plays passed by the National Board of Censorship be taken as a standard and those not passed by the board be disallowed. He exhibited to the Board of Commissioners the reports from the National Board of Censorship, which he referred to at the previous meeting. He pointed out through the reports the reason why some of the films passed had been ordered censored as to certain scenes.

Commissioner Betterton, in stating his position, declared that he knew little about the matter himself and said that he did not wish to vote to set up any standard that would work a hardship on any local house perhaps not using films passing through the hands of the National Board of Censorship. He suggested that the local picture men be heard on the subject before the board took any action.

Commissioner Sloan stated that he knew nothing about the matter either and inquired who composed the National Board of Censorship.

The mayor read off a few of the names appearing on the board's letter head, such as Lyman Abbott, Jacob Schiff and others, and a list of the various national and New York local welfare associations represented on the board, which included both the Y. M. C. A. and the Y. W. C. A.

Commissioner Betterton remarked that, while these names were all right, he supposed they were printed more to "add tone" to the board than anything else.

The mayor remarked that he wanted a test vote on the question anyway and instructed the clerk to call the roll, with the result mentioned at the outset.

Mayor Thompson stated, following the meeting, that he had the support of the local pastors' association in his stand and that he had renewed the censorship agitation largely upon the insistence of the ministers.

It is needleess to say that the moving picture men were very much pleased with the stand taken by Commissioners Sloan and Betterton. These gentlemen came out in a straightforward manner and said that they would not vote for a proposition which they were not familiar with and which might do harm to certain persons. If legislative bodies and authorities in various sections of the country only had the spirit of their convictions as these two men have, right-minded moving picture exhibitors would have easier sailing. As is often the case, the majority is composed of a number of persons who do not understand the proposition, but will not own up to the fact and naturally vote for something which it afterwards proves harmful and takes time and money to have repealed.

NASHVILLE'S LICENSING LAW NOW IN EFFECT.

Examination of Operators Being Held by Board in Building Inspector's Office.

In accordance with a requirement of the new building laws of Nashville, Tenn., passed by the board of commissioners some time ago and just printed, examinations for licenses to moving picture operators were begun on Monday, February 8. The examinations are being held at the office of James H. Yeaman, the building inspector. A list of fifty questions was prepared for these examinations, which are being conducted by a board consisting of Mr. Yeaman, A. A. Rozatta, chief of the fire department, and C. P. Cochran, city electric inspector. The examinations continued throughout the week and on the following week no one was allowed to operate a moving picture machine unless he had taken out a license.

Moving pictures depicting scenes in Tennessee, showing the industrial as well as educational features of the state, were recently thrown on the screen at the Grand theater, of Knoxville, Tenn. The pictures were shown for three days and drew a fairly good crowd of local color seekers. The pictures were taken some time ago by S. I. Connor and Otto C. Gilmore, of the Bon Ton Film Corporation, and were made for the Tennessee commission of the Panama-Pacific Exposition.

COSTS OF CLARKSVILLE FIRE.

A recent estimate of the damage done by fire in Clarksville, Tenn., a few weeks ago placed the losses at nearly $100,000. The theatrical world was one of the heaviest losers. The damage to Joe Goldberg's Lillian Motion Picture Theater was placed at $25,000 and that of Elder's Opera House, owned by the Clarksville Theater Company, at $15,000. J. E. and M. W. Elder, who were interested in the Clarksville Theater Company, also lost a considerable amount of other property.

Studio for Cincinnati

New Moving Picture Producing Company Chooses Kentucky City as Site for Its Plant—Proposed Studio and Accessories May Cost $1,000,000—New Yorkers Said to Be Interested—Cincinnati's Advantages in Way of Backgrounds, Atmosphere and Market.

By Kenneth C. Crain, Special Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

WHILE Cincinnati has for some time been recognized as one of the leading film distributing centers of the country, especially for the South, it has up to this time been somewhat in the background as far as the actual production of pictures is concerned. Local and advertising moving pictures of high merit have been made, but film dramas have been almost wholly lacking from the production of local film men. This lack is to be remedied shortly, however, according to the plans of H. M. McGraw, who, as the representative of New York interests, has selected the Ft. Thomas Highlands, across the Ohio from Cincinnati, as the site for one of the largest motion-picture studios outside of New York and Los Angeles. The Highland Film Co. is to be the name of the producing concern, which will be capitalized at $2,500,000, and $1,000,000 or thereabouts will be devoted to the construction of the plant, on a tract of about 100 acres. The interests back of the plan desired to locate a producing company at a point convenient to the Middle West and the South, and several cities besides Cincinnati, including Cleveland, Detroit, Atlanta and New Orleans, were considered, the choice finally falling on Cincinnati. The rugged and beautiful country around Ft. Thomas, the immediate proximity of the river, with its steamboats, and of Cincinnati, where city scenes can be taken; the proximity of numerous handsome homes of the true Southern type, and of such other incidentally useful scenic settings as the famous Zoo, the equally famous Latonia race course, and so forth, all served to make the choice of Cincinnati logical. Architects Zettel & Rapp have charge of the preliminary work connected with the project, and will also doubtless design the several large buildings which will be necessary.

PRIVATE PICTURE SHOWS.

The report that the private exhibition of moving pictures is becoming more or less common in the homes of the wealthy has caused considerable interest in some circles in Cincinnati, not only among exhibitors, who are naturally inclined to wonder where this infringement of their peculiar field will stop, but among architects and fire-insurance men. A private show of this kind, which is said to have been given a few days ago, was the occasion of much discussion, the point being raised that the owner's insurance was thereby automatically cancelled, as that risk is not included in an ordinary residence policy. However, a fire did not result, so the question did not become material. The architects take the position that in view of the popularity of moving pictures for home display, a really up-to-date home should be provided with a properly equipped and protected room for this purpose. It is generally agreed that home exhibitions are a source of considerable danger unless extraordinary precautions are observed.

CENSORSHIP FIGHT LINES-UP RELIGIOUS ORGANIZATIONS.

Struggle to Repeal Ohio Censorship Law Brings Protest from Church Societies.

The extent of the interest being taken in the fight which is raging around the censorship question in Ohio may be gathered from the fact that religious organizations are lining up, some on one side of the controversy and some on the other. The sentiment of two particularly strong bodies of this sort, expressed by the Joint Committee on Law and Order of the Federation of Protestant Churches and the Hamilton County Federation of Catholic Societies, is indicated by the adoption of resolutions by the committee protesting against the proposed abolition of the State board. This action was taken at a meeting of the committee last week.

Jerome M. Jackson, a member of the firm of McMahon and Jackson, prominent in the film business, appears as the man behind the gun in the construction of a handsome apartment building, which is to cost about $200,000, with the ground. This indicates that prosperity is not entirely absent from the amusement business.

William K. Howard, who has been assistant manager of the local offices of the World Feature Film Co., has taken charge of the Forest theater of Avondale, and his friends look for him to make the house even more successful than it has been heretofore.

The Park theater, of Hyde Park (not the Park Hall, of Oakley, which is another house), is to be much improved before long, according to manager Eugene Sweeney. The Park used an adjoining lot as an airdome during the summer months, with much success; but this space is to be built over and taken in, bringing the seating capacity of the house as remodeled up to 960 or thereabouts, and making it one of the largest motion-picture theaters in the city.

CO-OPERATIVE AFFILIATION.

Leading Exhibitors of Three States States Form Co-operative Leasing and Buying Association.

The Big Time Feature Exhibitors' Association is the name of an organization of leading exhibitors of three States, owning theaters valued in the aggregate at about a million dollars, and almost unique in its scope and objects, was formed on Friday of last week at a meeting held at the Metropole Hotel, in Cincinnati. The meeting was attended by prominent moving picture men from Ohio, Kentucky and West Virginia, and a temporary set of officers were elected, as follows: President, Joseph F. Hennegan, of the Lubin Amusement Co., Cincinnati; secretary, William Howard, formerly assistant manager of the Cincinnati office of the World Feature Film Co., now manager of the Forest theater, Avondale; legal advisor, Harry L. Linch, attorney and manager of the Metropolitan theater, of Cincinnati, and a number of leading West Virginia houses. Permanent officers will be elected later. Others attending the meeting and participating in the action taken included the following: I. Frankel, of the Hippodrome and National theaters, Cincinnati, and the Hippodrome, being constructed in Newport, Ky.; Levy & Meis, of the Columbia, and the Liberty, Cincinnati; Herman Eggers, of the Clifton, Cincinnati; George Polster, of the Valley theater, Elmwood place, near Cincinnati; and McMahan & Jackson, well-known film men and exhibitors. Opportunity will be given for other exhibitors to join the organization, and several have indicated their intention of doing so.

The object of the organization, which has been in contemplation for some time, is the co-operative buying and leasing of feature films of high merit. It is stated that the association will acquire State rights on films, when it seems advisable to do so, in order to secure for its members the use of features which are sufficiently desirable. Membership will of course be confined to the owners of theaters sufficiently large to handle the kind of features which the association intends to secure. In addition to obtaining the best features for its members, the organization will, as a matter of course, also do everything in its power to encourage better standards in the production of pictures, and otherwise aid in the advancement of the business, according to Acting President Hennegan. The association will be formally incorporated under the laws of Ohio.

"It has been rumored that this organization has been formed for the purpose of fighting something or somebody else," said Mr. McMahon, after the meeting. "This is not the case; the association is intended for the sole purpose of protecting the legitimate interests of its members, and it will be sufficiently strong to do that, abundantly. If necessary, it may acquire theaters of its own, but for the present it will operate only through the houses owned by its members, who, I think, will include some of the best men in the business in this section."

BOX OFFICE ATTRACTIONS' BRANCH IN CINCINNATI.

The Box Office Attraction Co., one of the latest of the large distributing companies to establish a Cincinnati branch, has secured roomy quarters at 134 East Fourth street, on the third floor, all of which is occupied. A three-year lease has been taken, indicating the intention of the company of coming in "for keeps." "Gus" Miller, well known locally as the former Warner manager, is in charge, and is going after business energetically.

KUNSKY LIKES NEW PICKFORD BOOKING SCHEME.

By Jacob Smith, Special Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

A FEW hours after John H. Kunsky, who operates a chain of eight theaters in Detroit, returned from New York City on Feb. 5, he was seen by a representative of the Moving Picture World. "Well, what do you think of the new Mary Pickford deal?" I asked him. In response he said: "I believe it will work out very satisfactorily. No doubt many patrons will wait until the pictures become a regular part of the Paramount Program, but on the other hand there are thousands of people who will gladly pay the advanced prices. Personally, I do feel that the new arrangement will help the exhibitor in the small town who can justifiably advertise a fifty cent attraction for 10 and 15 cents."

John H. Kunsky, of the Casino Feature Film Co., Detroit, wishes to emphatically deny the report that he has given up the state rights on Paramount pictures. From the Kunsky offices comes the announcement that he has opened an office in Milwaukee at 712 Majestic theater building and is in charge of A. E. Yarr, formerly in the Detroit office. The distributing and shipping room is in the Manhattan building. Later Mr. Kunsky plans to open an office in Indianapolis to take care of business in Indiana and Kentucky. Harry Loranger has been transferred from the auditing department of the Detroit office to the position of assistant to Harry Goldberg, general sales manager of the Casino Feature Film Co., headquarters at 2206-2212 Dime Bank building.

George W. Trendle, secretary of the John H. Kunsky, Inc., and the Casino Feature Film Co., Detroit, left Feb. 14 for the West Indies to be gone four or five weeks. He will take a much needed rest.

FILM ALARM BOXES THOUGHT NECESSARY IN THEATERS.

The petition of several owners of small motion picture houses asking that the building code be amended so that theaters with a seating capacity of less than 600 be exempted from the installation of a fire alarm system was denied by the council ordinance committee. Each theater would be saved about $25 if the petition had been granted. On member of the committee said: "We can't do too much to safeguard patrons of moving picture theaters. I think that fire boxes are more necessary in small theaters than in the large ones."

LESTER POTTER ONCE MORE DETROIT FILM CENSOR.

Lester Potter, former moving picture censor in Detroit, has been put back on the job. "To be the strictest but fairest censorship in the United States" is Mr. Potter's aim. Just how long he will act in this capacity is not known, but he was told by the police commissioner to keep after all matters pertaining to the amusement business and to eliminate anything that he thought might be objectionable to women and children.

BRIEF DETROIT ITEMS.

Architects Smith & Kahner, Free Press building, Detroit, are drawing plans for a one-story theater, 30x100 feet, to be erected at a cost of $10,000.

The Medbury theater building, at Hastings and Medbury streets, Detroit, has been sold to Simon Lochman, for a consideration of $30,000. This will not interfere with the present lessees of the theater, however. Besides the theater, there are stores and flats.

Inspectors of the State Fire Marshal Department who have been in Detroit since February 1st inspecting motion picture theaters have notified managers and proprietors that they must keep their rear exits clear of ice and snow. They contend that as the rear exits would be used in case of a panic, managers must sweep the snow away and remove the bolts from the doors whenever a show is in progress.

Members of the Detroit Federation of Women's Clubs held a special meeting on Feb. 5 and listened to the views of George W. Weeks, of the Detroit Universal Film Co., C. A. McGee of the Universal Film Manufacturing Co., and Jack Klein of the World Film Corporation, relative to censorship. These men said that the surest guarantee that a picture contains no objectionable features was to look for the caption "Passed by the National Board of Censorship" on every film.

The Miles theater has changed its booking arrangement and now receives its attractions through the Affiliated Booking Offices. This does not interfere with the motion pictures which are shown preceding each week-day matinee.

The Orpheum theater, at Lafayette and Shelby streets, Detroit, has been leased for five years to C. H. Miles, who originally built the Miles theater. It is his plan to change the policy to three shows daily, with four on Saturdays, Sundays and holidays. The free pictures will continue to be given for two hours preceding each matinee, similar to the Miles policy.

The Maxine theater, at Mack and Baldwin avenues, Detroit, which opened Saturday, Feb. 6, is under the management of Eddie V. McGrath, who for many years has been very popular through his professional singing. Matinees are being given daily, two shows at night, special school matinees on Saturday, and continuous performances on Sundays and holidays. Prices are 10 cents for matinees, and from 10 to 20 at night. The Maxine will seat 1,000 people.

The Yon-Do-Ti-Ga Moving Picture Theater Co., of Detroit, has capitalized at $125,000, the principal stockholders being Charles Smith, J. W. Thomas and A. L. Clotfelter. The company, as previously announced in the World, plans a theater at Monroe avenue and Library place, that will seat about 800. Stock is now being sold for the enterprise from the company's offices in the Scherer building. The owners of the property, which the prospectus states has already been secured, deny that any lease has so far been signed, although negotiations are pending.

Charles Davies, formerly of the Wolverine Film Exchange, and lately state agent for the Alco, has formed a new company under the name of The Greater Film Co., with offices at 260 Equity building.

Maine Sunday Bill

Legislators at Augusta Discuss with Members of Religious Organizations Bill to Annul Blue Laws of Pine Tree State—Strange Attitude Taken by Several Ministers on the Money-Making Phase of Sunday Shows—They Get Salaries, but Don't Think Exhibitors Ought To.

By John P. Flanagan, Special Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

A VERY important legislative meeting took place at the State Capitol in Augusta during the past week when a committee hearing was held on the bill to annul the blue laws of the State of Maine, which practically forbid any one doing anything on Sunday except to go to church and prayer meeting. Incidentally, as recently stated in the Moving Picture World, this bill will allow moving pictures to be shown in this State after 1 p. m. Sundays.

Dr. William F. Berry, leading spirit in the Christian Civic League, the reform organization of the State of Maine, gave it as his opinion that moving pictures can be of much good on Sundays, but he believes that it is an evil to commercialize Sunday by allowing proprietors of moving picture houses to exhibit on Sunday to satisfy private greed. If moving pictures are to be shown on Sunday he believes that they should be conducted by the municipality. If it were done for the purpose of making money it would be wrong. Were it given for the purpose of benefiting the public and pointing a moral, he should consider it right.

Rev. Mr. Johonnot of Auburn spoke in opposition to the bill, saying that he felt that all workers should have one day in seven to rest. Rev. Charles Harbutt of Portland expressed the opinion that the bill as presented commercialized Sunday and considered its amusement features vicious. He said he would favor the churches of Portland uniting and presenting motion picture shows in the city hall free of charge.

Representative Greeley denied that the motion people of Maine were behind the bill, saying that it was introduced without their knowledge.

Representative Smith, of Hampden, who is a farmer and acknowledged working seven days a week, claims that the morals of seven-day workers are as good as those of any other class. He said that since the Sunday concerts in City Hall, Portland, had been instituted, Sunday crime had decreased in that city. He pointed out that the first to respond to a call of charity is always the theatrical men. Pointing to the assembled ministers he said, "These gentlemen earn their salaries by work done on Sunday. I believe it would be a benefit to the people of our cities to be attending a good picture show on a Sunday night instead of walking the streets."

PERRY ON SCHOOL FILMS.

Lewis Perry, the new principal of Phillips Exeter Academy, speaking at the meeting of the Maine Alumni of that famous institution in Portland last week, ridiculed the idea of teaching geography, literature, and other things by moving pictures, and said he had not reached the point where he believed that knowledge of geography could be acquired in twenty reels. To him the symbol of education is not a teacher wandering with pupils in flowery fields, but is a boy with an open book. Frequently boys leave school, he said, with a lot of information but no education, and such boys he terms intellectual barbarians.

FINE THEATER AT MARS HILL.

A. L. Ehrgott, Bangor manager of the General Film Company, has just returned to Bangor from a visit to Aroostook county, where he finds that business conditions are improving. Mr. Ehrgott was much surprised to find in the little town of Mars Hill one of the largest and finest theater buildings of any small community in the State of Maine, which has just been completed at the cost of $35,000. S. H. Hussey & Son are the builders, and occupy the ground floor as a store. The building is fifty feet wide by eighty feet deep. It is occupied by the Dreamland theater, William Henry lessee, and seats 600 people.

This theater has all the equipment of a modern city show house and is fully equipped with scenery and all conveniences. The Dreamland will use General Film service exclusively.

MORE MAINE ITEMS.

The Central Hall at Oldtown has just booked "The Master Key" serial.

Carl Sawyer and Guy Roberts (Graphic Amusement Company) have opened a theater in Millbridge. They will run three nights a week and will use Universal service.

The large Morse building to be erected facing the old postoffice site on Harlow street, in Bangor, by Charles Morse, will have a hall that will be equipped for moving pictures, although it is not expected that this hall will be used as a theater. This hall will when completed seat about 1,600 people and has the largest floor space of any downtown auditorium in the city of Bangor. It will be used largely for conventions and moving pictures play a large part in the proceedings of all live organizations that hold annual conventions in Bangor. The hall will be ready for occupancy by July first.

William Klenke, of Stockholm, proprietor of the Star theater, was in Bangor during the week calling on the trade. Mr. Klenke's friends are congratulating him on his narrow escape from serious injury when he fell into a tub of hot water at a mill in Stockholm. Mr. Klenke sustained painful burns on his legs, which necessitated a stay at home for a couple of weeks, during which time his theater was closed. The Star is now reopened.

The serial, "Runaway June," which was to have been shown at the Palace theater, will not be presented there owing to the fact that there was a conflict of contracts, "Runaway June" having also been booked to the Park theater, Bangor, and an Oldtown theater. The Palace announces feature, "Exploits of Elaine," which has been running at the Park.

Theodore Holman, a well known Maine exhibitor, has opened the new Boston theater at Limestone, Me., and has adopted the slogan, "Nothing too good for Limestone." He reports excellent business and finds ready patronage even though he recently increased the price from ten to fifteen cents. Mr. Holman announces the "Trey O' Hearts" and says that Limestone is the first small town in the State of Maine to secure it. Mr. Holman is one of the hustlers among moving picture proprietors of the Pine Tree State.

George Weeks, manager of the Detroit Universal Film Co., will leave here the first week in March for California to take in the Panama-Pacific Exposition at San Francisco as well as the formal opening of University City. With him will probably go a number of exhibitors from Michigan, who are favorable towards such atrip.

John R. Lakin, who for some time has been publicity representative of the Detroit Universal Film Co., has resigned and is now Michigan representative for Pathe features and the Pathe Daily News. Mr. Lakin will have a downtown office by March 1.

Censorship Bill Hearing

Massachusetts Federation of Women's Clubs Strongly Represented at Public Hearing on New State Censorship Bill—Judge J. Albert Brackett Ably Represented Association of Theatrical Managers—Difficulties of Good Censorship—No Vicious Films.

By Edwin H. McCloskey, Special Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THREE hundred women appeared before the joint legislative committee on Mercantile Affairs at the State House, Boston, last week, in favor of a bill to provide for a censorship of all motion picture films to be exhibited in the state, under the supervision of the State Board of Labor and Industries. The silent drama was roundly criticised and it was asserted that photoplays were responsible for the recent killing of a boy in Dorchester, Mass., by his younger brother.

Senator Sanford Bates opened the case for the bill, which had been submitted by Carl C. Carstens, special agent of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children. He stated that it was a matter of social welfare that pictures should be such that children might see them without moral harm, because children are bound to see them, inasmuch as the picture theaters have become a permanent institution. He asserted that a volunteer committee in Boston recently reported that of more than 600 films viewed, at least twenty per cent. were not fit for children to see.

"The city cannot adequately censure these shows," proclaimed Senator Bates. "It is enough if the city sees that the theaters are safe. The state police only censor those films which are to be exhibited on Sunday evenings. As for the National Board of Censorship, it is only a voluntary organization. Restriction of the display of unfit pictures would soon increase the business of the moving picture theaters, for many more children would be allowed to see such shows if they were properly censored."

Ralph S. Thompson, a social worker, spoke in behalf of the State Federation of Women's Clubs, representing 40,000 women, and the City Federation of Women's Clubs, representing 20,000 women. He declared that hundreds of thousands of children are in daily attendance at the moving picture shows throughout the state. He stated that the picture show is one of the chief amusements of the child, and as such it should be kept clean. He then told of the work of the voluntary committee in viewing films. He divided the objectionable films as follows: (1) showing immoral or obscene scenes; (2) showing objectionable vice; (3) films grossly degrading in character; (4) films depicting instructive steps in crime.

Others appearing in favor of the passage of the bill were: Mrs. Ripley, of the Massachusetts State Federation of Women's Clubs; Miss N. C. Nichols, of the Boston City Federation of Women's Clubs; Arthur D. Goode, who claimed to represent Cardinal O'Connell; Rev. Mr. Record, of Springfield; Martin D. Neilon, secretary of the Lord's Day League, and several others.

Judge J. Albert Brackett, representing the Association of Theatrical Managers of Boston, opposed the bill. He said that his clients did not desire to block legislation or to injure the morals of the young or old anywhere. It was his contention, however, that under the present laws the moving picture patron is safeguarded from moral harm. He said that it was more practical to have the censorship vested in the Mayor of Boston than in a state body.

"There are many points of view as to what constitutes or induces immorality," said Mr. Brackett. "The Bible or Shakespeare might be called immoral books for children to read. Censorship, after a time, gets into a realm of individual opinion, and with divided authority there would be trouble at once. All pictures now being shown in Boston are passed by the National Board of Censorship in New York. This organization is composed of many well known social workers."

"This bill has been submitted and is backed by people good at heart, but lacking in judgment. It would take at least fifteen or twenty officials to censor all the films shown in Boston weekly, and again, the bill, as it is drawn, would amount to nothing. There are always people who find fault with something here and there in a picture, and there must be some element of sin or else you won't have your story. The laws at present work for the protection of the public and the protection of the producer; but under the proposed bill, you could not reach us if we chose to put on a show against which there seemed to be objection.

"The National Board of Censorship is an able organization and made up of more representative people and people of better judgment than appear in favor of this bill today."

Corporation Counsel John A. Sullivan of Boston said that Mayor Curley did not understand that any immoral pictures were being shown in Boston and that a close watch for such had been kept. He said: "There are many regular stage shows and colored supplements in the newspapers, and news reports, particularly one of a case now being tried in this city, that do more harm than all the picture shows put together."

Clerk Slattery of the Mayor's office opposed the bill on the ground that it would take the power of censorship from the city and give it to the State.

John F. Casey, the Mayor's official censor, said that in a year he had had very few complaints against films, and that all complaints had been followed up.

PICTURE CAUSES STIR IN MALDEN.

"Neptune's Daughter" Brings Protest from Malden Women's Civic League —Finds Able Champion.

The production of "Neptune's Daughter," featuring Annette Kellerman, has caused a division in Malden, Mass., social circles after its exhibition at the Mystic theater in that city. A formal protest against certain parts termed immoral was lodged with acting Mayor John B. Robbins.

At the invitation of C. E. Robbins, manager of the theater, several of the social workers witnessed the exhibition, and at the conclusion the opinion as to its merits were divided. Mrs. Ralph M. Kirkland, president of the Malden Women's Civic League, said: "I do not think the high school boys and girls ought to be offered the opportunity to see such things." Mrs. William Blakely, wife of Mayor Blakely, was favorably impressed with the production, and she said: "I told my husband the pictures were all right."

Mrs. George M. Chisholm said: "The high dive in which Miss Kellerman is in fleshlings, by swimming to cover when people approach, gives the impression that she is nude, is suggestive and not a good thing for high school boys and girls to see. In that part, where the mermaid is turned to an earth maiden and comes out of the woods seemingly clothed only in her flowing hair, it is suggestive to the impressionable youth of Malden. It is not right that such pictures should be shown without better censorship."

Judge Bruce of the Malden District Court, accompanied by his wife, was also in attendance. The judge said: "There is such a thing as being so pure that you are impure. Not only that, but Miss Kellerman's figure is very beautiful—in fact, beautiful enough to lead other women to envy and jealousy. A moral is taught in that love and purity triumph throughout the picture. The entire film is beautiful and not at all suggestive to a wholesome mind."

Other prominent persons who joined in the protest were Mrs. Albert F. Decatur, president of the Old and New; Mrs. Willard C. Tilson, of the Edgeworth Chapel; Mrs. S. Hoberman and Mrs. Austin H. Roby.

COMPILING MORAL CODE FOR BOSTON SHOWS.

A moral code has been proposed to Mayor James M. Curley of Boston for theatrical and moving picture performances. More than three months will elapse before this code is completely compiled, because, the Mayor says, the suggestions of the delegation of ministers who visited him are so complicated and contain so much libelous matter that it is a herculean task to rewrite their draft. "Not a paper in the city could print the code if I gave it out the way the ministers gave it to me," said the Mayor, "because parts of it that are not unfit to print are libelous. Some ministers are an impractical lot of men, anyway."

OTHER BOSTON NOTES.

William H. Walsh, manager of the Scenic Temple, North Beacon street, Allston, has filed a voluntary petition in bankruptcy in the United States District Court, disclosing liabilities amounting to $1,708.84 and assets of $1,000.

F. H. Cook, formerly of the Eggleston Square Theater, Mattapan, and the Edisonia Theater, Springfield, Mass., has purchased the Glendale Square Theater, Everett, Mass., which was formerly owned by J. W. Hanify.

"Nap" Demarra, the Lawrence theatrical magnate, "put one over" on all his friends last week, when he slipped quietly away and was married. A short honeymoon was spent in New York, during which time he was registered at the Imperial Hotel.

Fred. B. Murphy, proprietor of the New England office of the United Film Service, spent last week in New York City.

Mrs. Noble has leased Washington Hall, Haverhill, Mass. It will be renovated and known as the Washington Theater. She will play feature films and road shows.

Gordon's Theater, Chelsea, Mass., and The Empire Theater, Holyoke, Mass., are now playing the features of the Box Office Attraction Company.

The World Film Corporation's productions of "Old Dutch," featuring Lew Fields, and "The Deep Purple," with Clara Kimball Young, were the attractions at the Modern Theater, Boston, last week. They were run three days each.

The Rev. John Hoff, CSSR., who has been in charge of the moving picture shows at the Mission Church, Roxbury, Mass., has been transferred to duty in Cuba. He was one of the best informed clergymen in this territory on moving pictures and was an honorary member of the Massachusetts Motion Picture Exhibitors' League.

Manager Edward J. Farrell of the General Film Company spent three days in Bangor, Maine, last week. He was entertained at dinner by A. L. Ehrgott, manager of the Bangor office.

The Pavillion Nickel Theater at Portland, Maine, has been opened by Representative James W. Greeley, a well-known exhibitor of the Pine Tree State.

A. L. Johnson of the Idlehour Theater, Hyannis, Mass., has purchased the Varnum Theater in that town and has closed it.

Moving pictures of fish and game subjects were the feature of the semi-annual meeting of the Manchester, N. H., Fish and Game Protective Association. They were presented by Dr. Heber Bishop.

INDIANA STRUGGLING WITH PICTURE CENSORSHIP

House Committee on Morals, of Legislature Holds Hearing on Two Censorship Bills.

THE moral quality of moving pictures was discussed pro and con at a public hearing in Indianapolis by the House Committee on Morals of the Indiana Legislature, which had before it two bills, one the Judkins bill providing for a state censor, and the other the Cleary bill prohibiting the exhibition of any films other than those approved by the National Board of Censors of New York. Advocates of the state censorship bill objected to the Cleary bill as insufficient. A local member of the exhibitor's association declared that the moving picture show is gradually putting the saloon keeper out of business. He said that the nickel that formerly went into the pocket of the saloon keeper, in many instances, now goes into the pocket of the show proprietor, with the result that the nickel brings happiness instead of disgrace into the family.

REPORT BY THE BELL PICTURE SHOW CHARITY.

The committee in charge of the Joseph E. Bell picture show charity fund issued its report for the first nine months, showing $6,583 received and $6,358.59 disbursed. The Bell charity fund is supported by money given by moving picture house owners, who give a part of each Sunday's receipts for the privilege of keeping open on that day. This fund was named after Mayor Joseph E. Bell, of Indianapolis, its founder, and affects picture houses in that city only.

OTHER INDIANA ITEMS.

The Victoria theater in New Albany, Ind., is to be replaced by a new amusement house by Michael Switow, owner of a string of houses in the Falls Cities. The new building will cost $20,000 and will be modern in every respect. Mr. Switow has rented the Home theater from J. C. McManus and will operate it while his new theater is being built.

Fowler, Ind., is to lose its opera house. The local branch of the Masonic order has purchased it and will remodel the building.

A stock company is being formed in Ft. Wayne, Ind., to purchase a large pleasure steamer and operate it on Lake Wawasee during the summer resort seasons. The boat, which will be built at the lake, will be ninety feet long and will have a passenger capacity of 800. It will be equipped with a cafe and a moving picture show.

Dan Erb, a well known musician of Logansport, will play the new pipe organ being installed in the Paramount theater in that city.

Wm. Tate, of Anderson, will open a moving picture theater in North Vernon, in the room formerly occupied by the Plaza picture house.

A film entitled "The Man Who Came Back" will be given by the members of the Huntington, Ind., Modern Woodmen of America lodge in their hall in that city. The pictures show the Woodmen's sanitarium, located in Colorado Springs, Col., and are exhibited to create interest in that institution.

The vaudeville house in Terre Haute, known as the Varieties, will be turned into a moving picture house as soon as the shows now being given there can be transferred to the new Hippodrome, now in the course of construction in that city. John H. Jenson, Tom Moore and Isaac Ades, who will operate the new picture house, have leased the building from the Lyric Theater Company.

If Representative Judkins' bill is passed the governor of Indiana may appoint three persons as members of a state motion picture commission. The chairman of the commission will receive $2,500 and the other two members $2,000 each a year salary.

Wants Volunteer Board

Chamber of Commerce and Federation of Churches of Cleveland Recommend That State Board of Censors Be Abolished—Would Have Volunteer Board Composed of Citizens and Representatives of the Ohio State University to Supplement Work of National Board of Censors.

By J. D. Raridan, Special Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

ABOLITION of the present State Board of Censors and the enactment of a new law permitting the judgment of a voluntary board composed of citizens of Columbus and of the faculty of Ohio State University and non-resident members in other cities was recommended at a recent meeting of the Chamber of Commerce in conjunction with the Federated Churches of Cleveland. The Federated Churches advocated the appointment of a voluntary city board constituted like the National Board of Censorship in New York and supplementing its work. The two organizations would act independently of each other.

Rev. E. R. Wright, secretary of the Federated Churches, sent a telegram to Senator Myers of Marion, author of the bill now pending to abolish the Censor Law, informing him of the action of the Federation. The recommendation of the committee on public recreation of the Chamber of Commerce was adopted. The committee investigated the State Board under the direction of George A. Bellamy, chairman. The present State Board of Censors, according to the investigators, is composed of three members, two of whom are actually doing the work of censoring. The third is elected to do the clerical work of the board.

Governor Willis will be asked by the Chamber of Commerce to call a statewide conference of all individuals and organizations interested in the censorship. The proposed volunteer board would be organized in all Ohio cities, subsidiary to the main board.

OHIO BRIEFS.

Smoke filtering from the operators' booth when a strip of film ignited and the cry of "fire" by some person on the street caused a score of men in the Alvin Theater, 2360 Ontario street, Cleveland, to bolt for the doors. Louis Zoffer, manager of the theater, turned on all the lights and started the electric piano and held the audience from panic. But for the cry of "fire" from the outside, Zoffer says, all of his audience would have remained in their seats. A passer-by who saw the smoke turned in a fire alarm, but firemen had nothing to do when they arrived. Ray Lehr, operator in charge of the booth, smothered the flames by closing the machine and cutting off power.

Irene Tams, formerly of Sebring, featured in film stories produced for her, has been the guest of her sister, Mrs. Reuben Smoyer, at Sebring. During her visit the pictures in which she starred were exhibited at the Sebring Opera House. Miss Tams appeared in person and gave a short lecture at each performance.

HARRY C. CHARNAS OPENS OFFICES IN CLEVELAND.

Harry C. Charnas, formerly Cleveland manager for Warners Features, Inc., has opened offices at 218-21 Columbia Building for the Standard Film Service. He is president and manager of the exchange and has concluded negotiations for the distribution of feature photoplays. He will open branch offices in Detroit and Cincinnati in the near future.

HARRY C. CHARNAS.

Mr. Charnas took charge of the Warner offices when they were established in Cleveland three years ago, releasing as his first feature "Redemption," a three-reel production. In the merging of Warners with the United Film Service he resigned to continue independently the distribution of features. He has concluded negotiations with the S. L. W. Film Company, I. S. P. Film Company, Eclair, Leading Players, Apollo, Ideal, Great Northern and other producing concerns, and will release on a four-a-week basis.

The dean of Oberlin College women is making a departure from the college custom in permitting young women to attend picture shows until 9 o'clock two evenings a week. Previously all women, except seniors, had to be in their rooms at 7:30 P. M.

Mrs. Ohming, proprietress of the Starland theater, Michigan City, loaned the house, recently, for an afternoon to the Amateur Musical Club of that city.

Manager Smith, of the Princess theater, Delphi, purchased a new moving picture machine in Indianapolis for his house.

Jasonville is to have another picture house. George and Covis Passen are the promotors and will open a theater in the Masonic temple building. Vaudeville will be given in connection with the pictures.

The Lyric theater of Decatur was destroyed by fire. The house was owned by H. W. Battenburg.

E. R. Guilford, who has had much experience in the show business, will open the Kingman opera house, at Kingman, as a moving picture theater. The Metropolitan Feature Film Exchange will supply the pictures, which will be shown twice a week—Wednesday and Saturday nights.

Michael Dwane, Jr., proprietor of the King's theater, in Chalmers, has announced that he will make extensive improvements in the building.

Representative Friend has introduced in the Indiana House of Representatives a bill that would require every circus, theatrical or other amusement enterprise showing in any city of Indiana to produce at every performance or exhibition every act, feature and the exact number of persons which it has advertised on any billboard, newspaper, circular or poster and violations would call for a fine of from $25 to $100 for each offence. Any person would have the right under the bill to file an affidavit with any justice of the peace and the justice would have the power to cause the attachment of the box office receipts for payment of the fine.

The people of Wanatah will now be able to see pictures. A theater has been opened in the Eaton building.

National Censorship

Petitions Are Being Sent to United States Senate Asking That Bill Now Pending in Congress Providing for National Censoring of Motion Pictures Be Passed —Organizations That Are Trying to Get Bill Through—An Extra Session the Only Danger.

By Clarence L. Linz, Special Correspondent Moving Picture World.

The Moving Picture World's correspondent during the past few days has seen in the office of the Secretary of the Senate a number of petitions wherein various senators are requested to give their support to the bill now pending in Congress providing for the national censorship of motion picture films. Each one of these petitions has a long string of names appended and one in particular was sent by some Women's Equal Rights Association in Indiana. This state, by the way, is particularly active in this respect. Although it is very doubtful if this particular piece of legislation will come up during the present session of Congress and in failing of enactment before March 4, next, will die a natural death in committee, yet there is possibilities of an extra session when such matters as this might be again taken up, or there is nothing to prevent the bill being called from the committee and pushed to a vote in Congress. For every petition that goes to Congress favoring the enactment of a censorship law, the exhibitors should send two against it and get all the friends of motion pictures to join them.

LITTLE PICTURE ACTRESS SEES PRESIDENT.

The first steps were taken here last month in the making of the feature film, "Maiden America." President Wilson was interviewed by the cameraman and also by little Miss Mary V. McAllister, a budding young actress of six years. The little lady visited the White House prepared to make a nice speech to the highest official of the land, but when the President smiled she forgot her speech. After fumbling around a bit with an autograph album she finally said, "I'm awfully glad to see you, Mister President," and the President was glad to see her. They shook hands together very warmly and Mary will have a happy remembrance of her "conquest."

OTHER WASHINGTON NOTES.

It is reported that John Payette, assistant manager at the local office of the General Film Company here, is about to assume the management of the Baltimore branch. It will be with sincere regret that the local exhibitors will part company with this popular young exchange man.

John Payette, formerly office assistant at the office of the General Film Company in this city, has been placed in charge of the Baltimore branch succeeding J. Leo Yates.

The Central Amusement Company was last week incorporated with a capital stock of $5,000, divided into 500 shares of a par value of $10 each. The object of this new corporation is the conduct of a moving picture theater on Ninth street, Northwest. The trustees for the first year are Harry S. Fischer, Sarah Fisher and Milton Merviss. The offices of the corporation are given as at 430-432 Ninth street, Northwest.

The Goldsmith-Snyder Company, Inc., has petitioned the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia for a dissolution of the partnership. The corporation was formed for the purpose of acquiring the premises at 1223 Seventh street, Northwest, where a motion picture theater was to be operated. The incorporators were William O. Snyder, Louise J. Snyder and Irene Clocker, who are also the petitioners in this case. The capital stock of the concern was $5,000 divided into fifty shares of the par value of $100 each. The dissolution is asked for because of the abandonment of the project. The corporation states it has no liabilities and its assets consist of a motion picture projecting machine valued at $350. If there be any objection to the dissolution of this concern, the same must be stated on March 1, when the case will come up in the court.

Guy Barret, who was formerly assistant to Harry Crandall, at Crandall's theater, is reported as manager of the Belvidere theater in Lynchburg, Va. The house was formerly managed by its owner, C. M. Casey.

Leo G. Garner, booker of the United Film Service Corporation, is making quite a reputation for himself as a singer. He appeared last week at the Fairfax theater, operated by Jack E. Breuwer, with a number of animated song pictures.

Pathe news pictures will hereafter be shown at the local Keith's theater, replacing the Hearst-Selig films.

J. A. Gebhardt is now in control of the Clover theater, formerly the Amusu, at 414 East Baltimore street, Baltimore, Md.

George Kline, of the Bunny theater, 1225 Columbia avenue, Baltimore, Md., was a visitor here during the week.

The New theater, in Baltimore, Md., will hereafter run high-grade motion pictures exclusively. The features shown are "DuBarry," "The Spoilers" and others of that type.

H. E. Reddish, Maryland representative of the Electric Theater Supply Company, was at the local office last week.

Jack Levy, manager of the Philadelphia office of the Greater New York Film Rental Company, and S. Michaels were here last week working up trade for that concern.

N. W. Baxter, who operates the Palace theater, Petersburg, Va., was registered in town early in the week.

Keller Bros., it is reported, have disposed of their interests in the Marvel theater in Frederick, Md. The house has been rented by a Mr. Barbour of Harrisburg, Pa., who will make a number of improvements, including the installation of a modern heating and lighting plant, and will make it the equal of any city house. Wertheimer Bros., of Cumberland, Md., operating the Victoria, have purchased the old equipment for reserve purposes. When the house is again opened in first-class shape it will be with new projecting machines, etc. The United Film Service program is to be used.

It is reported that a $60,000 house is soon to be erected on Connecticut avenue, Northwest. This is a very select locality and the plans for the new theater are said to be in keeping with the surroundings. The house will have a large frontage and will be of a good depth.

F. H. Smith, who operates the Empire in Frederick, Md., sent out real wedding invitations in connection with his exhibition of "Runaway June." This is a bit of live-wire advertising worthy of notice. The Empire is a ten-cent house.

The United Film Service Corporation is said to be fast outgrowing its present quarters and Manager Sidney B. Lust is now on the lookout for a place that will give him more space in which to handle the business. He contemplates including an exhibition room and the making of many other improvements. At the same time a branch office is to be opened in Norfolk, Va.

The application of W. M. King for permission to make alterations to the building at the southwest corner of King and West streets, Alexandria, Va., that it may be utilized as a motion picture theater has been referred to the street committee of the Alexandria city council for investigation.

WISCONSIN SCHOOL RUNS SHOW.

By Midwest Special Moving Picture World News Service.

NINE hundred persons attended a recent moving picture show which is conducted by the school at Waupaca. A nominal admission fee is charged pupils, parents and friends. The Majestic theater at Sheboygan recently furnished the films for one of the school shows, which are being given in that house, the regular supply failing to arrive from the University of Wisconsin.

BELOIT CAMERAMEN IN SOUTH AMERICA.

Beloit friends have received word from Robert Becker of that city that the Collins-Day Big Game Expedition party to the Andean region has reached Ancon in the Canal zone. The party is also going after moving pictures, carrying a complete outfit.

JOHN BUNNY AT DAVISSON.

John Bunny was at the Davisson theater in Milwaukee with his company. This was his only booking in Wisconsin.

KIND TO NEWSIES.

Life is one grand sweet song for newsboys of the Leader in Milwaukee. In one week they were enterttained by the Atlas, Climax, Lexington, Mozart, Paris and Empire moving picture theaters.

MILWAUKEE JURY GIVES AN EXHIBITOR DAMAGES.

A JURY in North Milwaukee has given $300 damages to J. B. De Lorenzo, proprietor of a moving picture house on Villard avenue. De Lorenzo alleged that the village officials interfered with a hypnotic show put on at his theater and arrested him, declaring that he had no license for this kind of performance. He sued for $10,000 for false arrest.

EDUCATIONAL FILMS WERE LATE.

The State University has been failing to get its educational films on time for the two-cent show by the Mothers' club at Sheboygan theater. The Majestic theater has loaned films twice, but rather than continue this borrowing, the women will discontinue the shows if service is not improved.

OTHER WISCONSIN BRIEFS.

The Gem theater at Omro has been trying a vaudeville act in addition to its three reels of pictures at ten and fifteen cents. The La Crosse theater at La Crosse is another that has been using vaudeville recently, featuring two "mysterious" home-talent acts.

The Rainbow Theater company of Milwaukee, which purposes to operate theaters in that city, has been incorporated with capital stock of $10,000. The incorporators are Sol H. and Julius M. Ettenheim and Louis M. Nehin.

The overturning of a small kerosene oil stove caused slight fire damage in the Crystal theater at Oconomowoc.

Films showing "The Ill Effects of Alcohol" were shown at the Elite theater in Rushford under the direction of the local W. C. T. U.

"Scrooge" was shown at the Monroe theater in Monroe for the benefit of the Adelphia Sunday school class. The electric light company has started an all-day Sunday service in Monroe, and this theater has inaugurated double matinees for Sunday. A different bill is used for Sunday evenings.

R. J. Roth has sold his interest in the Monn theater at Prescott to John Ptacek, Jr.

The Lyric theater at Superior, Wis., which has been reopened by the Northland Theater Company after being closed several weeks for remodeling, will be strictly a five and ten-cent house, no matter what the feature, it is announced. The opening attraction was "The Drug Terror."

The People's theater at Superior is being remodeled so that after March 1 three or four acts of vaudeville can be used in addition to three or four reels of pictures.

Manager Herziger of the Doty theater at Menasha has leased the building adjoining his theater to be used as a resting place for those waiting for second shows. The local camp of the Modern Woodmen of America secured the film "The Man Who Came Back" to be used in addition to the regular program at the Doty one night.

The films put out to raise a fund for the orphans of German soldiers were shown at the Plankinton Hall Auditorium in Milwaukee for three days.

Profit-sharing coupons are now being given by the Opera house at Two Rivers. A coupon is given with each ten-cent admission on Wednesdays and Saturdays. Ten of these are good for another admission. "Cabiria" was recently shown at the Opera house under the direction of the Two Rivers high school.

The Empire theater at Two Rivers played a return date on "America" by request.

The Lyceum Circuit moving pictures has recently taken over the Locust theater, corner Locust and Bremen streets, and will take possession Feb. 1st, with a change of program, running pictures, cutting out the vaudeville, except on special occasions. The house seats 380, and the admission will be 5c and 10c, four reels, three shows of the better class of films, and with music to fit the picture. A $1,600 equipment.

A. A. Greene of Antigo has leased the Neenah theater at Neenah and for the first time in years Sunday shows will be played.

The Colonial theater at Green Bay had an essay contest on "The Perils of Pauline." Prizes of 100, 50 and 25 tickets to the Colonial were offered for the best 100-word efforts on the serial.

The Palace theater on Third avenue at Grand Rapids has been opened.

Manager Adler of the Opera house at Marshfield gave a benefit for the Parents-Teachers club of the Washington school. This house has inaugurated an amateur night.

The Belgian Relief association got half the gross receipts from a recent night's show at the Ideal theater in Grand Rapids.

Construction of the new theater building on the west side at Grand Rapids, in which R. A. McDonald is interested, is rapid and the opening soon will be announced.

Two thousand feet of film, showing Kenosha scenes and people has been made for the San Francisco fair.

The Locust theater, pictures and occasional vaudeville, Locust and Bremen streets, in Milwaukee, became a part of the Lyceum circuit February 1.

Feature pictures will be the policy of M. Draeger, new proprietor and manager of the White House theater at Racine.

Industrial and scenic films of Wisconsin will be shown in the Palace of Education at the San Francisco fair. This is the only state to arrange for a moving picture show outside of its own state building.

Getting the front seats twenty feet from the screen was one of the many improvements made while Milton L. Lamb and Walter H. Schwaner kept the Metropolitan at Chippewa Falls closed. Since the transformation it will be known as the Palace theater. Lamb, who was operator at the Empire for four years, will have charge of the projection and Schwaner will be house manager.

Repeated turnaway business is responsible for the announcement that the O'Klare theater at Eau Claire has secured a building to the north of the present structure, will raze it and erect an addition which will double the capacity of the house.

The Majestic theater at Rhinelander, H. C. Zander, proprietor, is to be remodeled into a moving picture and occasionally "legitimate" house, seating between 750 and 800 persons. It will be refurnished throughout. The work will begin some time in the spring.

Daley's theater, John E. Daley, manager, Grand Rapids, has installed a new Wurlitzer organ which will be operated by Cleve Akey.

G. Harry Smith, Jr., of Chicago has purchased the Orpheum theater on East Market street and the Crystal theater on the West side in Kenosha. He will have charge of the Orpheum and Thomas M. McKibben of Chicago the Crystal. Smith owns a theater on Sheridan road in Chicago.

The Rex theater at Delavan has been sold to Clarence Bailey.

Owners of big factories in Wisconsin are checking up on their employees who are interested in safety first motion pictures. Where a factory worker attends one of the shows given by the state industrial commission he is asked to sign his name on the back of his ticket before depositing it at the door of the theater.

L. J. Koles is the new manager of the Antigo Opera house at Antigo, succeeding A. A. Green, who has taken the management of the opera house at Neenah.

Crossed wires in the operating room are said to have caused the fire which destroyed the new Colonial Opera house at Waukesha, with a loss of $3,000. The house was managed by Mr. and Mrs. Harry Jones.

The Palace at Grand Rapids is one of the selected few houses in the state to give Safety First shows for the State Industrial Commission.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Clark of Amacov Lake have started a moving picture show at Osceola.

John Radke's new Astor theater, Samuel R. Pylet, manager, has been opened at Astor and Brady streets in Milwaukee. Admission will be five cents and fifteen cents for boxes, except on Saturdays, Sundays and feature nights, which will be ten cents and fifteen cents for boxes. The house, of concrete, brick and steel, seats 950.

BUFFALO NOTES.

Buffalo is attracting favorable attention on account of his extensive advertising. Mr. Sherry has arranged with the Buffalo Times to have many columns of special write-ups of his shows in that paper. He also distributes unique advertising matter in the downtown section.

A deed conveying property on East Water street, Elmira, N. Y., to be used for the new Strand theater which will be erected by the Harton Theater Co., was recently filed in the County Clerk's office in that city.

The authorities of Lestershire, N. Y., recently closed the Delphi theater there. This was done pending an investigation as to whether a moving picture show could be legally operated on the second floor of a building.

At a recent meeting of the village trustees of Highland Falls N. Y., the question of operating moving picture shows on Sunday was discussed. Peter Bejoras, manager of a theater, explained his side of the story. He said that as long as the show did not start until church services were over and did not interfere with the religious ceremonies he did not see where there should be any ground for complaint.

Manager Laughlin of the Majestic theater, Buffalo, recently featured moving pictures showing war scenes in Germany.

Binghamton, N. Y., aldermen have held up the license of G. A. Goodwin to conduct a moving picture theater in Court street, that city. This was taken pending the final settlement of the dispute over Sunday shows in Binghamton. Alderman Tyler said he objected to the advertising displayed by the theater, especially on Sunday.

BUFFALO NEWS LETTER.

By Billy Bison, Special Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE Palace, Buffalo's newest moving picture theater in the downtown section, will open Saturday, February 27th. Deshler Welch, a theatrical man and news writer, will be house manager. Harold Edel will be managing director of the Palace and Strand. Edward Hyman, associated with the Mark-Brock Theatrical Enterprises for years, will manage the Strand. The Palace orchestra will be under the direction of Isaac Shapiro, former first violinist of the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra. The Paramount service will be used at the Palace and Strand.

W. H. Linton of Little Falls and Howard P. Clark of Utica have leased the Hippodrome Theater of the last-named city.

Chief Engineer O'Rourke of the State Fire Marshal's office has ordered that the Delphi Theater, Lestershire, N. Y., remain closed permanently. The reason for this action is that the house is located on the second floor.

A Seneca Falls newspaper says that in moving picture shows newspaper men solve mysteries and are praised, but that in real life they guess at mysteries and get kicked by irate subscribers.

William Bowers, Jr., and Carl Weisel have filed plans for a moving picture theater in Delaware Avenue, Albany. The proposition is opposed by the Delaware Avenue Section Improvement Association of that city.

The resolution of Alderman John P. Sullivan, requiring the licensing of moving picture operators, has been referred to the Aldermanic ordinance committee.

The Ogdensburg, N. Y., Journal, in a column editorial on "The Anniversary of Moving Pictures," says, among other things, that they are the poor man's boon, and that the world, its drama, etc., are brought before him for a nickel or a dime.

Moving pictures of Syracuse industries will be shown during a "Made in Syracuse" campaign to be launched shortly. This plan will be in connection with a special display and sale of articles manufactured in that city.

Mrs. R. D. L. Evans has closed the Princess Theater, Norwich, N. Y., and bought the Orpheum Theater at Port Jervis, N. Y.

At a recent meeting of Yonkers churchmen, a resolution opposing the opening of moving pictures on Sundays was adopted.

The anti-Sunday picture committee of Oswego, N. Y., will confer with District Attorney Culkin on the question of Sunday shows.

William W. Koveney, of Troy, and Edmund J. Lynch, of Albany, will open a vaudeville and moving picture theater in State street, Schenectady, N. Y. Mr. Lynch will be in charge.

G. S. Schlesinger, manager of the Regent theater, Buffalo, recently used advertising matter showing the picture of a youngster crying. Under the picture appeared the words: "I want to go to the Regent to see Mabel Taliaferro in Cinderella, etc."

Proprietors of moving picture theaters of North Tonawanda, N. Y., have appealed to Mayor Rand of that city for permission to open their houses on Sunday.

New York State theatrical men are watching closely at Albany the bill of Assemblyman Mitchell providing for a State Board of Censors of moving picture films.

Recent offerings at Buffalo moving picture theaters: "The Spoilers," Hippodrome, "Old Dutch," Strand; "Her Bargain," Keith's; "The Master Key," Allendale; "The Wishing Ring," Elmwood.

The Buffalo Times last Sunday used a picture of Walter Moon, manager of the Happy Hour Theater of that city. The Times referred to the fact that Mr. Moon is one of the representative men in the local moving picture industry.

NEW ORLEANS NOTES.

Maurice F. Barr, recently appointed traveling representative for the World Film Corporation, back from his first trip through the territory tributary to New Orleans, reports no depression in sight and everybody talking good times, county seats, cross-roads and all.

S. W. Grow, manager Southern Paramount, reports business for January, 1915, in excess of business for January, 1914. Prospects are for further increase and greater prosperity, thinks Mr. Grow. The company's Pickford releases, he reports, are going exceptionally strong.

A. G. Shear, New Orleans manager for the Consolidated, has returned from a trip to Pensacola and Mobile, where he reports business excellent. The "Master Key" is drawing big, he says, at Fraenkel's Crescent in Mobile. Mr. Shear is enthusiastic about Fichtenberg's Pensacola house which, he says, is the finest in the South.

J. E. and Josiah Pearce are just back from Lake Charles, where they have been looking over their legitimate house and their three picture houses. Business in Lake Charles is good, all houses pulling well.

The emanations from a heterogeneous assemblage are likely to be odiferous. In plain American, it's apt to be smelly in a moving picture show. Herman Fichtenberg's Plaza theater has settled this diffuilty. When one enters the theater, one is at once struck by a draft of pure, sweet air. Not only has Mr. Fichtenberg installed draft fans a'plenty, but he has a system of ventilation all his own. He hasn't exactly given up the secret, but whatever it is, his system brings perfumed air and much of it where it is needed.

Tom Campbell's Lafayette has announced Williamson's submarine pictures, released by the Universal Film Company.

Pearce's Tudor is showing "Cameo Kirby," with Dustin Farnum in the lead, to mighty big houses. Certain of the scenes of the play are laid in New Orleans.

DEMBOW ON OVERCROWDING OF THEATERS.

S. Dembow, Jr., special representative of the Box Office Attractions Company, who was here Wednesday, had something to say on this subject of overcrowding in the suburbs, touching further on overcrowding in the picture business on the whole. He took the cheerful view that the fittest survive, so putting the business on a higher and higher plane, with the devil taking the hindmost. His remarks were made in the course of a talk with a suburban exhibitor who had come in to talk over his film problem.

Fifteen per cent. of the population in a well-to-do neighborhood, he said, might be counted as moving picture patrons. The neighborhood in which the exhibitor is located has a population of 15,000 to draw from; fifteen per cent. of this number is 2,270, but, it developed, there are five houses operating in this territory. "It can't be done," said Mr. Dembow, "that is, there isn't enough business for every one of these and some one will be forced out."

LYCEUM HAS SCREEN CALLS FOR PATRONS.

The Lyceum, St. Charles street picture house, recently remodeled, doubling its seating capacity, has adopted its screen for calling persons out of the audience when they are desired on something urgent. The scheme is quite workable as the Moving Picture World's correspondent noted some nights ago, after a single reel comedy had been "passed by the board of censorship," when a hastily written slide was flashed on the screen, saying: "Dr. Smith is wanted at his home at once." Later an auto, standing in front of the house, was found to be too near the curb, violating the traffic ordinance. A policeman inquired as to whether the owner was inside, asking for the owner by the machine number. The screen flashed: "The owner of auto 446 is wanted outside immediately." It worked and the car was duly moved to a proper position.

Special Lenten Shows

New Orleans Problem That Many Exhibitors Even in More Protestant Communities Have to Provide For—Thoughtful Consideration of the Subject by United Program Manager—Religious Meetings in Theaters—General Observations.

By Southern Newspaper Bureau Special Moving Picture World Correspondent.

WHAT character of Lenten releases will best hold the attendance for this off season is a subject that is now giving New Orleans film and exhibition men considerable concern. Certain houses announce special Lenten releases, such as "The Sign of the Cross," "The Eternal City," etc., while others say that religious subjects are, at best, good only occasionally and that their releases will not be different from the usual all-year run in this respect. The preponderance of Roman Catholics in this territory makes for a more extensive observance of Lent than in most other parts.

Al Durning, special representative of the United Program Film Service of Louisiana (formerly Warner's Features), one of the companies which will make special Lenten releases, speaking from some years of experience in Louisiana, analyzed the situation from the standpoint of mass psychology, giving his opinions as to the difficulties of the problem. These ideas of Dr. Durning's will, it is thought, prove of some value even in the territories where Lent is least observed.

The attitude of the press and the pulpit in the territory to be considered, says Mr. Durning, is the deciding factor as to whether Lent will be honored in the breach or the observance, and this attitude is subject to all the complexities of the body politic, the press and pulpit being interpreters of the public mind as governed by events rather than by outside influences thrusting something on the people. A reform political campaign, for instance, would be likely to precipitate an attitude of more than usual righteousness and height of religious feeling and observance of church teaching. A great public disaster bringing with it thoughts of the shortness of human life would, its depressing influence aside, serve similarly to increase the religious observances of the season. On the other hand an outbreak of radicalism such as the Colorado mining troubles, bringing with them attacks on the church as a part of the established order, would tend to lessen observance of the season.

The New Orleans outlook now is for an "open" Lent.

The majority of exhibitors will offer some Lenten attractions, but will not attempt to offer a greatly increased number of religious films during the season, even though the film houses are preparing to meet a demand for religious films should a demand arise. The Pearce and Fichtenberg interests, the two largest exhibition organizations in the South, seem to have set the pace somewhat in this regard, purposing to offer some Lenten attractions but not too many.

Pearce's "Tudor," it was announced in this connection, will be used by the Protestant Ministers' Alliance for mid-day addresses during the season, this being the Pearce contribution toward the Protestant plan of bringing the church to the business district during Lent. The Tudor, particularly good for this purpose by reason of its magnificent organ among other things, was used for mid-day talks last Lent, such distinguished men as Bishop David Sessums speaking.

The near approach of Carnival, the more or less wild season terminating in Mardi Gras, after which comes Lent, is a matter of some concern to the suburban exhibitors, for, during a whole week, all New Orleans is centered in Canal street for the public pageants and general jollifications and the suburban man might as well close shop, as some of them have already announced that they will do. Some will make an attempt to keep their crowds by offering extra inducements, but for most it will be impracticable to make such efforts, owing to the overcrowding of the suburban territory, which makes this class of exhibition houses not highly profitable at carnival time.

CHILD LABOR LAW GETS EXHIBITOR IN TROUBLE

New Orleans Picture Man Accused by Juvenile Court of Employing Child.

Information was filed February 2 against Victor Perez, owner of a string of motion picture houses in New Orleans, alleging violation of the Child Labor law, relative to the employment in theaters of girls under eighteen and boys under sixteen. The specific charge was that Mr. Perez employed a girl under the legal age limit in The Audubon, one of his newer houses. Mr. Perez furnished bond and will answer the charge in the Juvenile Court at an early date. The application of this law has given the legitimate stage in the state a good deal of trouble, but this is one of the few times that it has been brought into effect against a picture house. The law was framed to safeguard children against misemployment rather than against employment and stage folk are hot against it, claiming that it has been stretched to cover something not intended in its framing. Legitimate attractions with children in the cast are now under the necessity of showing the Juvenile Court and the Mayor that the children are attended by parents or guardians. When this is done a permit is issued.

HIMEL APPOINTED ACTING TREASURER.

Augustin J. Himel has been designated assistant secretary-treasurer of the United Program Film Service of Louisiana (recently Warner's Features). Both the secretary and treasurer have been assigned to points away from the home office, which is at New Orleans, so Mr. Himel is in active charge of all financial matters at headquarters.

Several exhibitors have adopted the policy of "money back if you've seen our pictures elsewhere," and not infrequently they are called upon for the refund.

LICENSED FILM STORIES

BIOGRAPH.

IN RED DOG TOWN (Feb. 15).—Bad men galore—the funny side of them The lynching bee is interrupted by a call for the sheriff; a desperado has been cutting up rough in the town. So they tie the loose end of the rope to a boulder and rush back. The negro swaps places with a compatriot for two bits. More fun and frolic are the inevitable result, when the lynchers return and find the wrong victim.

HIS LOSING DAY (Feb. 15).—The broker's clients besiege his office to cash in their bets on the stock market. He sends a message to the bank. On his way back, the boy forgets all about the money in his enjoyment of a thrilling Wild West story. Meanwhile the ticker is showing bigger and bigger losses to the broker. When, at last, he gets the cash, pandemonium breaks loose.

DWELLERS IN GLASS HOUSES (Special—Two parts—Feb. 16).—District Attorney Carlisle's campaign to clean out the grafters begins with the move to indict Callahan, a police lieutenant. Ford, a henchman of Boss Rogers, brings the news. The boss is furious. "We must dig up something in Carlisle's past, or we are all lost!" he storms. Ford gets busy and cultivates the acquaintance of the district attorney's chauffeur. The man is reluctant to talk until Carlisle discharges him for negligence. Then he tells something which causes Ford to call up Rogers and announce: "I've got the goods on the district attorney!" Next morning Carlisle receives a telegram from Rogers asking him to call without fail at his home that night. Admitted to the house, he finds Ford and the discharged chauffeur with Rogers. The boss opens fire at once. "You and a woman were at the home of Lawyer Bennett the night he was murdered, and we propose to find that woman'!" Carlisle merely smiles. From behind the curtains comes a stifled scream, and Mrs. Rogers, the young wife of the boss, rushes into the room. "I was the woman!" she exclaims, and plunges into the tale of her past. Bennett had won her love as a girl. Learning that he was already married, she shunned him. Carlisle, then a struggling young lawyer, aided her. After her marriage to Rogers, Bennett threatened to show a letter she had written him. In his room she resisted his advances, felling him with a heavy vase. The blow was fatal. Carlisle alone knows the secret. Her dramatic story arouses Rogers' admiration for the district attorney, and because he loves his wife, the boss stops the conspiracy against Carlisle. A powerful illustration of the adage that "people who live in glass houses should not throw stones."

THE BOX OF CHOCOLATES (Feb. 18).—Alice Lorimer thought more of her lover's box of chocolates than of the diamond necklace with which old Lorimer had sought to make her forget George Thorne—"an ordinary clerk!" In his fury, Lorimer charged Thorne with disorderly conduct. They were at the station house when Alice telephoned for the police. Two thugs were breaking down her door. At the news, George rushed out and leaped into Lorimer's motor car. A motor cycle policeman gave chase. Other policemen hastened to the house. But George was before them, battling with the crooks, whose frantic search had failed to reveal the jewels. And when it was all over, and Alice, pointing to the scattered chocolates, explained how she had hidden the diamonds, old Lorimer could not find it in his heart to keep these two young lovers apart.

THEIR VILLAGE FRIEND (Feb. 19).—Rose Grey, the dramatic critic, has long ago forgotten the village in which she was reared. Her single connection with the old life is her sweetheart, Dan. So, when Effie, her former school friend, comes to town with the manuscript of a play she has written, Rose attempts to avoid her. But it is hard to snub a village friend who wants you to read her play. Effie is alone in Rose's rooms when Dan calls. Rose, returning, discovers them with their heads together, and becomes jealous. But she is mistaken; they are merely planning to surprise Rose by disposing of the play she won't read. In a theatrical agent's office Effie meets Norton, a star, who is won by her personal charm. He accepts the play and calls with Dan. Only then does Rose discover her mistake.

THE COWBOY'S CONQUEST (Feb. 20).—Disappointed in love, John Brayton, a wealthy New Yorker, seeks forgetfulness on his ranch. In cowboy attire, he falls in with the Van Pelt touring party and loses his heart to Edith. She soon prefers him to her foreign suitor, who reports certain things he has seen to her parents. Mr. Van Pelt wrings a promise from Brayton that he will abide by Edith's decision after she has seen him in her own sphere, away from the glamor of the cow country. So, dressed as a cowboy, he comes to New York. Edith is not ashamed of him, not even when her friends snub John at the reception, and they are quietly married. But when Brayton turns up at the Van Pelt home in conventional evening dress, looking the debonair aristocrat that he is, Edith's friends change their tune.

THE HEART OF A BANDIT (Feb. 22).—With a price upon his head, Texas Pete takes to the open country. A halfbreed learns of the reward, trails him, and, coming upon the bandit asleep, is afraid to take him single-handed. He goes for aid, leaving behind him a copy of the advertisement by which he has recognized his man. Awaking Texas Pete finds the paper, pockets it and decamps. His horse tiring, he abandons the animal and seeks cover in a rancher's barn. The halfbreed, coming to the ranch, frightens the rancher's wife. She seizes her husband's rifle. The halfbreed snatches up her child and, holding it as a shield, backs into the barn. She drops the rifle and rushes after him. Texas Pete, hidden in the hay, shoots the halfbreed. The rancher, hearing the shot and seeing his rifle on the ground, seizes it and shoots the bandit, who thus gives his life for another. Dying, he asks that the reward be paid to the child's mother.

HIS ROMANY WIFE (Feb. 23).—On a surveying trip Travis, a civil engineer meets Zara, the belle of a Gypsy camp. Despite the warning that Gypsy love seldom brings happiness, he marries her. Tonio, her lover, vows revenge. After her son is born Zara pines for her people and returns to them. Travers takes the baby home to his mother and renews associations with Alice Gray, his boyhood friend. Zara is taken from the camp by Gorman, a theatrical manager, who trains her as a classical dancer. Tonio follows her to the city. Travers again meets the Gypsies and is told that Zara is dead. He asks Alice to marry him, and she consents. At the theater he recognizes his Romany wife in Zarita, the dancer. He rushes out distraught. After a sleepless night he reads in a newspaper that La Zarita is dead, stabbed by a jealous lover. Tonio has executed his oath of vengeance, and Travers is free to marry Alice—a woman of his race, with ideals like his own. For Romany love seldom brings happiness.

THE CALL OF HER CHILD (Feb. 25).—Content with life as she knows it the woman lives happily with her husband and their little son in a humble cottage. Then, on the invitation of a school friend she goes to the city and soon learns that there is another life, much more fascinating, apparently, than that to which she is accustomed. An artist is her constant cavalier, and by degrees the gay life takes hold on her. She writes her husband that she will not return. He is crushed by the blow, but must give evasive answers to the boy's impatient cry: "Why doesn't mamma come home?" A young artist sees the little fellow and paints his picture. It is exhibited, and the mother, seeing it, is drawn irresistibly back to her child. When she returns to the cottage her husband roughly orders her away, but his heart is touched by her penitence and by the child's joy, and finally he forgives her, and they are happy once more.

THE BOOB AND THE MAGICIAN (Feb. 26).—The magician astounds his audience with his feats of prestidigitation. Young women appear in clouds of smoke; innumerable apples and eggs come out of a hat and so on. In response to his call for an assistant from the audience, a boob comes on the stage. He promptly spoils one of the magician's best tricks by allowing the ropes which support the Floating Maiden to become visible to the audience. For the last effort the magician allows himself to be padlocked into a cask full of water. The boob pockets the key and, wandering behind the scenes, sits down to share the lunch of the young lady assistants. When the key is needed there is a mad search for him. Finally the magician is rescued. All agree that the entertainment was a howling success, though not quite what it was intended to be.

ROSE O' THE SHORE (Feb. 27).—The fisherman's daughter has two suitors. One brings her a rosebush, which she plants beside the cottage door. His rival crushes the plant with his heel. The girl plants it afresh and in time it blooms. In a teasing mood she tosses the rose down the cliff and tells the two men that he who brings it back to her will win her hand. The giver of the rosebush is first to grasp the prize, but, losing his footing, he falls and breaks his leg. The rival easily recovers the rose, brings it to the girl and soon marries her. Meanwhile the fisher lad, taken to the cottage of a passer-by, is tended by the latter's daughter, who falls in love with him. Convalescent he learns that his rival has married the girl to whom he gave the rose. Then his eyes are opened to her unworthiness and to the true love that waits for him in the little cottage where he was nursed so tenderly back to health.

VITAGRAPH.

BURGLARIOUS BILLY (March 1).—Finding that his attentions to Nellie are undesirable in the eyes of Jenkins, her father, Billy tries to elope with the girl, but the young people's plans are overheard by the old gentleman, who disguises himself in Nellie's cloak and veil and attends the meeting place himself. Father beats Billy up and chases him away from the place after ordering him never to come back. Billy conceives a brilliant idea. With his handkerchief over his face, bandit-fashion, he sneaks up to the Jenkins home that evening and climbs in a convenient window. It happens that Mike has also decided to burglarize that particular house on the same evening, and he gets in by the cellar. He goes up the cellar stairs and emerges into the kitchen. Nellie and her father are upstairs. Billy sneaks up, while Mike advances to the dining room and begins to select silverware. Billy gets the drop on Jenkins, whispers a word to Nellie, which puts her wise and backs out of the place with her. Meantime, the maid runs into Mike and with a scream runs out for the police. Hearing her cry, Billy thinks he is discovered and he and Nelly hide in the dining room. Meanwhile, old man Jenkins collides with the maid and the officer. Not recognizing each other, a general fight ensues. Billy sees Mike watching the scrap from behind some curtains, throws off his disguise and pulls the curtains down. A fierce struggle ensues. Nellie screams for help and the others rush in. Mike is arrested while Billy assumes an appropriate "hero" attitude. With a smile of triumph he asks papa if he can have Nelly now, and Jenkins, with a snort of suspicious distrust, throws up his hands and walks out.

THE SILENT PLEA (Broadway Star Feature—Three Parts—Special—Mar. 2).—Immediately after his admittance to the bar, John Aldrich tells Marie Carson the good news and confesses his love. She is obliged to tell her good friend that she does not love him and announces her engagement to Phil Carson. John, concealing his sorrow, goes abroad on business. Shortly after her marriage to Phil, the latter is killed by an automobile and Marie moves to the city to seek work. At first unsuccessful, she finally gets piece work to be taken home. The boss tries to make advances to her and when she repulses him, is discharged. Her long hours of work leave little time to look after her children, with the result that Audrey and Tom are gradually transformed into tough, incorrigible types of the street. Meanwhile, John Aldrich has returned, but learns that Marie has left no address. Things go from bad to worse with the little widow. Tom is caught playing craps and arrested. Unable to properly care for her children, they are taken away from her and placed in an orphanage. There they grow away from their mother's good influence, still more, and on their return, she is powerless to stem the tide which is sweeping them down the path of their weaknesses. The boy absconds with some money and is sent to prison. Rendered desperate, Marie determines to appeal to her old frind, John Aldrich, whom she has learned is now a State Senator. He is overjoyed to see her and her story serves as a great enlightenment to him, as he was preparing a speech in opposition to the Widowed Mother's Pension Bill. An audience with the Governor is secured which results in a pardon for the boy. Her sweet gratitude awakens John's love and taking Marie in his arms, he receives her consent to become his wife. The following day John makes an impassioned speech in the Senate in favor of the Widowed Mother's Pension Bill, representing the little ones as the wealth of the Nation, and his eloquence is largely responsible for the bill's successful passage.

THE GIRL AT NOLAN'S (March 3).—Grasping and unscrupulous, Wiles, a middle-aged rancher, covets the land adjoining his own property, which belongs to the widow Colby. Wishing to marry the widow, he plans to kill two birds with one stone, so he offers her the ultimatum of marrying him or the foreclosure of her home, on which he holds a mortgage. Mrs. Colby and her son, Will, both dislike Wiles, and rather than see his mother marry him Will goes to the city to ask help of a wealthy cousin. Wiles observes his departure, follows, and at the stage stations drops a hint to some desparadoes that Will is carrying a large sum of money and they plan to hold him up. Kitty a niece of Nolan, the tavern-keeper, overhears this and hastens to Mrs. Colby with the information. She warns Will by letter, and on his returns he plans to outwit them. The evening of his expected arrival, the hold-up men waylay the incoming stage, but are much surprised to find the only passenger is a young and timid girl and a middle-aged miner. The chagrined party allow the stage to proceed on its way. On its arrival at the tavern that evening, Kitty looks with trepidation for the arrival of Will, but sees only the miner and the girl. She is greatly puzzled, but soothes the girl and offers her the use of her own room that night. As Kitty is about to undress, she is startled by a most unladylike yell and turns to see the supposed "girl" yank off her wig and reveal the agitated countenance of Will. He secures the girl's promise to help him escape, and by means of a clever trick, the bandits are sent off on a wild-goose chase while Will gets safely away to his home. There he delivers the money lent him by their cousin, and when Wiles arrives later, he is crestfallen to receive in full the money due him. He signs a release and retires like a whipped cur, and shortly afterwards, Will keeps his whispered promise to Kitty by calling on her. He discovers he has found the girl of his heart—and the rest may be guessed.

PEGGY OF FIFTH AVENUE (March 4).—Pestered by scores of suitors, and surrounded with every luxury, Peggy Bryant, orphaned daughter of a millionaire, lives on Fifth avenue, chaperoned by Aunt Sarah, who is socially ambitious. Count Bergeroff is the most persistent of all, and finally, under pressure brought to bear by Aunt Sarah, Peggy becomes engaged to the Count. Peggy has a childhood sweetheart, Bruce McAlpin, M. D., but she had become piqued because his professional engagements prevented him from dancing attendance upon her, and had thrown him over. Peggy begins to wonder if the Count does not love her for her money more than for herself, and determines to find out. From reading Charles Reade's book, "Peg Wolfington," she conceives a startling idea, has her portrait painted and when it is finished, she invites the Count and some fashionable friends to view it. The Count's peasant wife, whom he had deserted, calls on Peggy, and tells her how he had left her and adopted a title, to pass himself off as a nobleman. The following day, just before the reception, Peggy cuts out the head of her portrait, gets behind the picture and sticks her own face through the hole in the portrait. When the Count and their friends come in without Peggy to view the portrait, as they suppose, their remarks are anything but complimentary. After tea is served, to the still unsuspecting company, the artist announces the "grande picture of the exhibition is in the other room." The Count and the others trail in and there the rascally Count is confronted by the portrait of his own wife! To his horror, the portrait apparently comes to life, and his wife stepping from behind the frame denounces him before them all. The "Count" makes a quick exit. Next day while visiting Bergeroff's wife, Peggy meets Bruce McAlpin, whom she learns is treating Mrs. Bergeroff free of charge and is well known in that neighborhood for his free services to the needy. Love is rekindled in both hearts, and without a word, he takes her unresisting in his arms.

TWO AND TWO (March 5).—Completely disgusted with their husbands, because of their laziness and refusal to help in the smallest degree with the housework, Mrs. Bunty and Mrs. Doty, living in adjoining houses, attend a suffrage meeting. There the speaker's words being in sympathy with their own thoughts, the women become full-fledged suffragettes, and on their return home, commence to propogate their newly-acquired theories. Instead of letting their good-for-nothing husbands loaf around the house, while they do the work, they make things so hot for their hubbies, the men are thankful when, the following Saturday, the women attend another suffrage meeting. During their absence, Bunty signals to Doty to come over and play pinochle. They talk over their troubles and Bunty gets an idea from a newspaper item. He suggests they pretend to take poison and in that way make their wives feel sorry for all their abuse. Doty is delighted. They get a bottle of bichloride of mercury tablets and a smaller one labelled "Dyspepsia Tablets." They accordingly take several of the "Dyspepsia" tablets, spill a lot of Mercury tablets on the table and when their wives return, begin kicking and screaming, as if in great pain. The women are greatly shocked on learning the reason for their actions, and hastily call a doctor. The physician arrives in a hurry, and after a careful examination, takes the women aside and whispers, "They're faking! Put them on bread and water until they confess." The men are nearly starved, but the women tell them they must wait until the doctor comes before they can have regular meals. On his arrival, he surreptitiously pastes a poison label on the bottle of dyspepsia tablets and convinces them they really did take poison. Both men beseech him to give them something, but he tells them the only cure he knows of is to exercise the poison out of their systems, so Doty and Bunty both make a rush for the woodpile and the carpet-beater, making themselves generally useful, while the doctor winks at the two smiling women and departs.

ROSELYN (Special—Two Parts—March 6).—Roselyn Lynn, a talented young actress, is deeply in love with Phillip James, an ambitious young lawyer. Her love spurs him on to success. He loves her, but is selfish and egotistical, and when he meets Helen Marr, whose father is very wealthy, he falls in love with her, and gratifies his ambitions for social position by marrying her. Roselyn is neglected, and when she learns of Phillip's marriage to Helen, her love turns to intense hatred. She marries John Ware, a worthy and good man, and becoming melancholy from brooding over her revenge, makes their married life miserable. The influence of time and motherhood softens Roselyn's heart a bit, but when her baby dies, she becomes more bitter than ever, leaves her husband and returns to the stage. Phillip, now a prosperous lawyer, seeing Roselyn's name on the billboard of a theatre in which she is playing, is seized with a desire to see her again. He enters, and at sight of Roselyn, is again fascinated by her. He sends word to her after the show, and she, with the spirit of revenge still strong, maliciously leaus him on, finally succeeding in inducing him to write a few compromising lines in her autograph album. With this, and some letters he had written her, as evidence, she calls on him the day his wife arrives from the East. She sees Phil' 's child singing and rocking with her dolls in the nursery, is reminded of her own, and the memory of this one bit of sunshine in her life, drives away the shadows from her heart. She resolves to spare Phillip for the sake of his child. She succeeds in escaping from the house unnoticed, and returns penitently to her own good husband.

ESSANAY.

SWEEDIE'S HOPELESS LOVE (March 1).—Sweedie has fallen in love with the grocery boy, and in order to gaze upon his smiling face orders groceries at every possible opportunity. She does not appeal to the grocery boy, so he keeps his distance. One day while Sweedie is expressing her love to her Romeo, her mistress appears upon the scene, and, in her confusion, Sweedie pushes the grocery boy into a closet and locks it. That night when the man of the house comes home, he finds the grocery boy in the closet. He reproaches his wife and throws Sweedie and her sweetheart into the street. The grocery boy manages to make his escape, but some time later, when he is rescued from a burning building, he recovers to find Sweedie had been his rescuer. He decides he would rather die, so crawls back into the building.

THE DANCE AT ALECK FONTAINE'S (March 2).—Angue Guyot, a big, strong and good-natured son of the north woods, meets Adele Fontaine at a dance. He dances with her, and unconsciously laughs in the face of "Bad" Bovee, her fiance. She invites Angue to a dance at her home, and he accepts. Bovee swears revenge, and when Angue goes on an inspection trip through the woods a few days later, he follows, and shoots him. Angue is only slightly wounded by the bullet, but Bovee thinks he has killed him. There is a superstition in the north that "the soul of a strong man slain by a weaker one will arise and wreak vengeance on the slayer." The night of Adele's dance, Angus appears, and Bovee, thinking it is his ghost, runs into the woods and leaps over a cliff to his death.

A COUPLE OF SIDE-ORDER FABLES (March 3).—The first comedy is about Fastidious Fannie, the only child of a banker, and fair to look upon, so the young men came buzzing around to try to cop her off. She was all for propriety, and as fast as the suitors put in their appearance, she put the blue tag on one after another, simply because he didn't come up to her standard of propriety. Finally the whole bunch was in the scrap heap; then it dawned upon her how foolish she had been. Moral: Marry him and roast him afterwards.

The second fable is about Azalea anl her Celebrities. Azalea loved to dig up a genius every day or two and bring it home and feed it. She was so daffy about Celebrities that her patient husband finally rose up and went into the same thing. He went to the burlesque theater and brought the Queen of the chorus home with him for dinner. From that time on the Celebrity's chair was vacant. Moral: You can't make a High-brow out of a tired business man.

SLIPPERY SLIM'S WEDDING DAY (March 4).—Slippery Slim becomes engaged to Sophie, much to the disgust of Mustang Pete. On the morning of the wedding Slim oversleeps, and Mustang while passing his home sees Slim's foot sticking out of the window. Mustang paints his foot black, then rushes to the doctor, telling him that Slim is the victim of the Black Plague. The doctor, after examining Slim, nails up the door and windows and places a quarantine sign on the door. Meanwhile Sophie and her wedding party are waiting at the minister's home. Mustang breaks the news to them and Sophie faints. Very shortly Slim comes tearing in, having escaped through a trap door. Hiram Clutts kicks him out, then starts in pursuit. Slim takes refuge in the river, and discovers that the black washes off. They then return to the minister's home and the wedding takes place.

BRONCHO BILLY'S VENGEANCE (March 6).—Broncho's former wife writes a note to him shortly before her death, asking him to forgive her, also the other man. Broncho is heartbroken at hearing of her death, and his memory takes him back to the days when they were happily married. Then this scoundrel came into her life and finally succeeded in parting them. The old memories make the blood run hot in Broncho's veins, and he swears vengeance. After many weeks of searching he finds the man, the proprietor of a gambling joint. That evening Bronchoe attacks the gambler as he is going home, and after tying him to a tree, prepares to brand him with a hot iron, when he thinks of his wife's last request, that he forgive the man. Broncho releases him, allowing him to go unpunished.

"THE STRENGTH OF THE WEAK" (Special—Two Parts—March 5).—David Fleming is addicted to morphine. His mother surprises her son in the act of injecting the drug. He promises to fight the habit for her sake and that of his sweetheart, Lalia Fenton. With the drug ever near Fleming is unable to conquer his desire. Finally his mother dies. Heart-broken, he tells his sweetheart of his failure. She begs him to go away and fight it out. He leaves for a small village in the mountains where the drug is inaccessible. Stanford Black proposes to Lalia and is rejected. He offers her a beautiful jewel in a plush box, but she refuses to accept it. Black learns from Lalia that Fleming is making a successful fight against the drug. He sends his rival morphine in the box which contained the jewel he offered Lalia.

Fleming is almost overpowered by the temptation. He rushes from his cabin in his effort to fight off the craving. The night before Lalia had had a dream in which she saw her sweetheart in trouble, and persuades her mother to go with her to the mountain cabin. They reach the cabin just after Fleming has rushed out. There she finds the plush box and understands Black's villainy. She finds Fleming kneeling, fighting his temptation. He wins. When they return Lalia confronts Black with his perfidy and orders him from the house, while she opens her arms to Fleming, a man once more.

IN SPITE OF ALL (An adaptation of the famous play by Steele Mackaye.) (Special—Three Parts—Mar. 1).—Carroll Clendenning, a man of the world, attends a performance of the "opera bouffe" and sees the radiant "Stella," the prima donna, with whom he is immediately infatuated. He meets her at a dinner in her honor, and is only one of the many admirers she has. There is a spirited rivalry between them. "Stella" worships only at the shrine of the god Gold, and in order to enjoy a top place on her list of eligibles, he buys her a diamond ring, significant of their prospective engagement. He is admiring her Aphroditic features when Blake, one of her victims, enters and warns him of the flame which has singed many a timorous moth. Carroll realizes that he is a fool, and throws her photograph to the floor. The next day he rides far into the country, trusting that a couple of days away from the debilitating urban conveniences will refresh both soul and body.

He is ensconced at the home of the Knickerbockers in the country. He falls in love with Alice, a pretty and clever country girl. They are married and return to Carroll's city home. Jack, Alice's brother, visits the city and is introduced to "Stella," whom Carroll has eschewed since the episode with Blake. As others before him, Jack becomes infatuated with her. Alice finds it out and asks Carroll to prevent Jack from paying further attention to the actress. Carroll goes to see "Stella" and is captivated by her charms once more. He agrees to buy her a beautiful bracelet. The bracelet is delivered at his home and it falls into Alice's hands. She goes to the theatre posing as the delivery girl and from behind a screen sees her husband shower his affections upon "Stella." She returns home and is broken-hearted. "Stella" suspects that Alice is Carroll's wife and stricken by pity, goes to the Clandenning home and with the aid of De Granville, a gay old admirer of "Stella," she shows Carroll his folly. Carroll realizes his mistake for the second time, and in spite of all, Alice forgives him.

HYPNO AND TRANCE—SUBJECTS (Mar. 2).—Hypno and Trance are given a couple of tickets by Professor Smelgarlic, the hypnotist. They attend the performance and are hypnotized, doing all kinds of foolish stunts on the stage. The "prof" makes men walk tight rope, and petrifies one so that a concrete slab is broken on his rigid body. Hypno and Trance get a book and proceed to hypnotize each other. Hypno works the spell on Trance and the latter is placed under the corner of a house which is jacked up ready to be moved. Hypno removes the jacks and the house falls on to the unfortunate subject's stomach.

Hypno goes for help, but a gang of laborers will not lend assistance for a full hour, as it is just twelve o'clock and they must have their lunch and rest. As poor Trance has nothing on his stomach but the house, Hypno gets a dinner pail from a boy and brings it to him. A detective, who was given a half shave in the barber shop where Hypno and Trance were employed, has been following them, and his remarkable detective powers suggest that if the house is jacked up the victim can be removed. He does it and Trance is taken out. They go off together reading the book and meet a girl whom they try to hypnotize. The detective thinks they are flirting with the girl and arrests them. They are sentenced to the cooler and through their wonderful hypnotic powers are able to spirit each other through the bars to safety.

THAT HEAVENLY COOK (March 3).—Gladys never did stand for indignities at the hands of the cook, so when impertinent, Bridget resented a scolding, Gladys discharged her. Gladys then volunteered. Henry, Gladys' husband, while he loved his wife, was more or less of a slave to his stomach, and when he and his father-in-law considered some of the weighty things handed up by the enthusiastic wife, they threw the biscuits and the other "coarses" out of the window and hied themselves to a restaurant. Gladys is in high glee when she sees the food gone and is told by the deceivers that they have eaten it all with much relish. While they are gone, the gardener finds the biscuits on the lawn and brings them in to his mistress, fearing that the birds might eat them with dire results. She cried and mildly denounces the ingrates who turned up their noses at her cooking. She goes to the employment agency and gets Bridget back again, arranging to play a trick on Henry and her father. Bridget prepares a tempting meal, and when the men have disposed of it, Gladys tells them she cooked it. They are loud in their praises of the new "cook," and tell her that Bridget never cooked a meal like that in her life. This is too much for Bridget, who, forgetting her manners, listens at the door. She rushes in, asserts herself and pulls the mask from Gladys' face. So happy are the men to get her back they pay her liberally in advance.

A TRAGEDY OF THE RAILS (Special—Two Parts—March 5).—Belle, a telegraph operator at a small railroad station, notices an announcement of a coming masquerade to be given by the railroad employees. She decides to attend the affair with Bob Hillman, an engineer. When they part at her house after a ride down the tracks on a handcar, he tells her he will call for her at eight o'clock. She takes her brother's clothes, leaving a note to the effect that she has borrowed them, and asking him to bring her the boards he has promised her to be used as shelves at the station. Bob dresses as a monk, and they arrange to attend the ball together.

Arrayed in men's clothes and a long black mask, Belle is dared by the other girls who helped her to dress, to go into the men's smoking room. She opens the door and enters without hesitation. The men slap her on the back and laugh at the frail physique, wondering who it is. Someone pushes a cigar into her mouth, and she puffs vigorously on it. She soon becomes ill and collapses. The mask is withdrawn and Bob sees who it is. He reproaches her for wearing men's clothes and walks away angrily. He snubs her the rest of the evening, and she goes off with Tony Maline, later in the evening giving an exhibition of dancing with him. She leaves the hall with him, while Bob, who really loves her, waits in the hall. The next day, Tony, who accompanied her home, enters her station and makes advances to her. She repels him and after a scuffle, he tells her he will tell Bob that Belle is unfaithful to him and that she permitted a practical stranger to kiss and embrace her. He mounts the engine which Bob is preparing to take out and tells him exactly as he threatened. Bob is enraged by his statements and there is a battle which results in Bob being thrown to the floor of the car senseless. The engine is started by the victor, who is fatally wounded, however, when a cocked revolver goes off in his pocket during the struggle.

Belle gets a message that No. 33 is running wild against a fast express, and realizing that something must be done immediately boards a gasoline hand car and starts it down the track parallel to the derelict engine. She lets it overtake her and boards it, finding Bob on the floor. The huge superheater is brought to a stop, and started in the opposite direction. The express engineer sees the engine on the same track and is unable to stop his train until it has proceeded past the spot where the engine had been reversed. Being unimpeded by cars, the engine accelerates quickly and gets out of the way, the express coming very close to it, however, before the single engine pulls out of danger. Bob is revived and the lovers are reunited.

THE PORTRAIT IN THE ATTIC (March 6).—Thelma, Mr. Chadwick's little daughter, is not at all agreeably surprised when her father returns from his honeymoon with his second wife. With undue frigidity, Thelma meets her new mother, and then recoils, as if wholly displeased with the selection. She is called into the next room by her father, given a scolding and told to go out and meet her stepmother as any nice little girl should. She goes reluctantly and stands looking at the new arrival doubtfully. As the days go by, Thelma's attitude toward her new mother remains unchanged, despite the fact that the latter has done practically everything in her power to alter the narrow perspective of the child's mind. Thelma and her dog, Jerry, played together and the girl took little or no notice of the sorrowful mother.

Occasional trips were made to the attic by Thelma for the purpose of gazing at the portrait of her real mother which had been relegated to the heap of rubbish and antiques. One evening, after a birthday supper in Thelma's honor, she went to the attic to spend a few minutes with her real mother. Jerry followed her, but before he could get up through the trap door, it had slammed, breaking off the strap which was used to lift it. Thelma went to the old couch and took the picture. She soon fell asleep with the picture in her arms. She dreams that her real mother had come back to her and tells her to love her always, but to love the new mother for father's sake and as she deserves. In her dream, Thelma embraces her real mother.

In the meantime, the others are frantic not finding her in bed, as expected. They search the house and finally hear Jerry barking upstairs. They go up and find him at the foot of the stairs to the attic. The dog rushes upstairs when he sees them, and soon they are at the couch where Thelma is asleep. The stepmother sits at the foot just where the real mother was in the dream, and when Thelma is awakened, she embraces her stepmother, thinking it is still the dream and that she is her real mother. Suddenly realizing, she recoils and then remembering what her real mother had said to her in the dream, throws her arms about her stepmother and forthwith calls her mother.

PATSY BOLIVAR, NO. 10.—PATSY AMONG THE FAIRIES (March 1).—In Chapter nine we left poor Patsy asleep in a cornfield after his frustrated elopement. But there comes to sweeten his slumber the most wonderous dream that ever visited tired mortality. He is suddenly conveyed to Fairyland, where he finds the best of his friends. Mary and her husband, Jack, are king and queen. Arriving before the throne of Titania, his torn and tattered clothes are changed to those of mischievous puck, and he is asked to express three wishes, all of which shall be at once gratified.

Pursuant to these wishes, his stern father arrives on the back of Nightmare and is spanked by a revengeful son. His evil genius, Sykesy, in the person of the fickle Tilly, is provided with a scolding woman who is never to heave him. Mr. Grace, who has been so instrumental in persecuting him, is sentenced to a lifetime of riding on a bicycle head downward, and the cruel schoolmaster becomes a scarecrow and is held by the Boogaboo while Patsy thrashes him.

The last wish, reserved for himself, is that he may be blessed horever by the love of the faithful woman, and Cupid brings to him the constantly loyal Jane, and the two are led to the marital altar of Fairyland. But poor Patsy, awakening under a pelting rainfall, which his dream has made a shower of fairy flowers, seeks refuge under the top of a farmer's wagon and is for the first time taken to the great city.

WHEN MOTHER VISITED NEIILE (March 2).—Uncle John comes to visit Nephew Henry. Since Uncle John is going to leave Henry a million or so, naturally he is made welcome and when Nell, Henry's wife, gets a letter from her mother, announcing a visit, she wires her not to come, because Uncle John does not like mothers-in-law, having had one of his own once upon a time. Unfortunately mother has already arrived and the situation is saved only by Nell's quick-witted announcement that mother is her sister, and to help along the deception, Nell

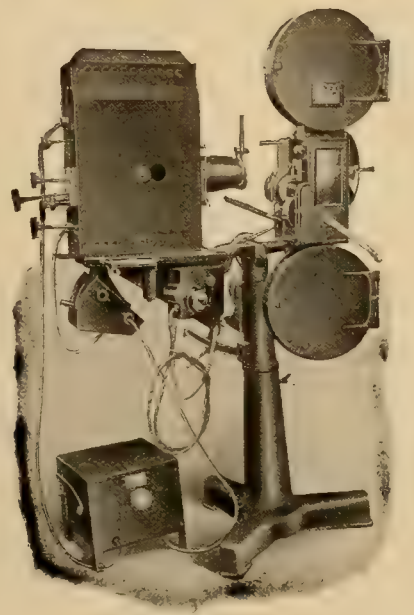
—WHY!—

MR. EXHIBITOR,

can the manufacturer of the Simplex Projectors guarantee quality?



First:

RAW MATERIAL is the best that can be bought, regardless of cost.

Second:

PROCESS OF MANUFACTURE proceeds, step by step, with care and precision. Planned as a result of experience in the production of projectors which dates back twenty years to 1895.

Third:

ORGANIZATION. Consulting engineer, mechanical engineer and superintendent, with experience of twenty years, each in his own particular field of activity, are all made to realize that the first consideration is a product that is absolutely perfect.

Fourth:

TEST of each process or small assembly; test of each mechanism; and, finally, test of the assembled machine set up complete for packing.

The final test, however, is that the Simplex does the work that it has been guaranteed to do slips the wedding ring off of her mother's hand. Uncle John takes a decided liking to the classy "sister," but he stills fears that the mother will intrude and he lays in a stock of revolvers, a couple of buckets of water and he is ready to stand seige. He even takes a chance on the old lady becoming his mother-in-law for he has proposed to the "sister" and has been accepted. A passer-by sits on the steps to rest. Uncle John thinks she is the mother, so he drenches her with water and shoots after her. This precipitates the explanation that the "sister" is really the mother, and joy comes to Uncle John when it is announced that she is a widow, so after all, what should he care?

A WOMAN WENT FORTH (Special—Two Parts—March 3).—Jack Rogers and his wife, Ethel, are happy on their first wedding anniversary. Jack is a successful architect in partnership with his father, while Ethel seeks amusement as an amateur sculptress. Diggs, an unscrupulous competitor of Jack and his father, schemes with his dissolute nephew, Guy Denton, to prevent Jack from winning a $5,000 prize the city has offered for a public arch design. Guy well known as a social lion, succeeds in luring Jack away from his home at evenings, causing him to neglect his work and to create misunderstandings between himself and Ethel.

Ethel has just completed a bust typifying "Fashion." Her society friends urge her to live up to her ideals and embrace the social life. More as a rebuke to Jack than anything else, Ethel plunges into gaiety. In doing so, she meets Guy, who steadily cultivates acquaintanceship with her. Through Ethel's friendship he gains access to her home, finds a completed arch design in Jack's desk, which he had prepared, and destroys it by spilling ink on it. With the simultaneous discovery of his ruined design and Ethel's intimacy with Guy, the breach between the young married couple widens. Jack forbids Guy from entering his home again and with the end of the arch competition only forty-eight hours distant, he starts to work on a new design.

Downstairs Ethel sulks in the living room. Not even the presence in the home of the housekeeper's seven-year-old daughter has awakened in Ethel the desire for children. As she sits brooding over her imagined wrongs, Ethel encounters a passage in a book marked by Jack, "Call not the man wretched who, whatever ills he suffers, has a child to love." With her husband's longing for fatherhood thus freshly revealed Ethel falls asleep in the chair. In her dream she sees herself given over to Guy while her husband, now a ruined man, can only look on in mute anguish. She sees a horde of bright-faced children, led by Nell, swarm down stairs. They have possessed themselves of her gowns and finery, beseeching her to sacrifice Guy and the finery for Jack's sake. In her vision she is approached by Nell, who bears in her arms the design that fate willed to win the prize that would make Jack famous. Nell offers to give her this design if she will sacrifice the finery for the sake of Jack. Ethel at first angrily refuses. Jack enters, furious at finding Guy in the room with Ethel. The men struggle and Jack is killed by Guy. Ethel, in her anguish, now turns appealingly to the kiddies, repeating her ardent desire that they take the finery and give Jack back to her. She sees Guy standing sneeringly at her shoulder and she flies at him in a fury. She awakens to find she has seized her sculptured work "Fashion," and dashes it to the floor. Jack, hearing the crash, hastens from his work into the room. Gladdened at his appearance his repentent wife tells the story of the dream. Unobserved, little Nell creeps to them, and is received with open arms by Ethel. She then tells Jack of the successful design, as seen by her in the vision. Later he wins the prize and a happy future with Ethel, who is now made joyful by the thought of approaching motherhood.

THE HERMIT OF BIRD ISLAND (Special—Three Parts—March 4).—The young Earl of Betzwood is forced, because of an injured arm, to give up racing his famous speed boat in the races of the next day. His fiancee, Viola Van Tassell, an American girl, insists that some one else must take charge of the boat and win the cup. The Earl demurs, but is overruled, and Viola goes away by herself to think it over. By accident she wanders into the fishing village and there becomes interested in Dave Hallow, a young fisherman, who, though he owns a high-power fishing boat, has greater aspirations and longs to be the possesor of a real racing craft. Viola leads him on and Dave, who has never before known a woman of the upper classes, becomes infatuated and promises to race the boat and win for her.

Fully believing in her intimations, Dave starts out in the race while Viola flies over his head in an aeroplane shouting down encouragements. Dave wins the race only to discover that the girl of his dreams is in love with and engaged to the young Earl. That she could care for a young fop like the Earl in preference to a real man like himself deeply hurts and angers Dave. His first impulse is to thrash the Earl, but the hurt being deeper than his anger he leaves them and, in a fit of depression resolves to swim out to sea, becoming exhausted, end it all. Out at sea the shock of the cold water brings Dave to his senses and he resolves to live. He floats and swims with the tide until washed up on a lonely island far from the coast.

Soon afterward Viola's country cousin, Agnes Carroll, comes to visit but finds herself miserable with her snobbish cousin's friends. The young Earl takes a fancy to her and by paying the difference himself enables Agnes to buy an expensive wardrobe with her small savings. Viola accuses Agnes of trying to steal the Earl from her and she learns the trick the Earl played on her and realizes his reasons. She runs away and rows out to sea, loses her oars and later drifts upon the same island. Dave rescues her, remembers his vow, and thinking her a shallow society girl like the others, leaves her at his palmetto hut. For days and weeks thereafter he watches over her and brings her fruit and fish. She constantly and in the most vigorous ways tries to find him but he always eludes her. Finally the Earl's yacht, being in the vicinity of the island, he leaves his party to explore it. Agnes sees and runs to meet him. He tries to take advantage of her being alone, but Dave, seeing it all from afar, comes to rescue and gives the Earl a thrashing. Then, unable to keep his secret longer, Dave bursts out his love to Agnes. She almost gives in to his pleading, then pushes him away and sends a note to Viola by the Earl telling her to bring a minister back with them that evening and if her fisherman lover proved a real man during the day's test she would marry him. Dave proves his manhood and when the party arrives late they are married and stay on the island for their honeymoon.

THE GOOD IN HIM (March 5).—Poncho is an outlaw with a price on his head. Hotly pursued by the sheriff and a posse, he dodges into a ranch yard where all the men are absent, leaving a girl alone in the house. At the point of a gun the desperate fugitive compels her to secret him in the house and send the pursuers on a false trail. But Poncho is badly wounded and no sooner has the girl sent the posse away at his command than the reaction sets in after the excitement. He collapses and the girl finds him at her mercy. Woman's pity is stronger than her resentment, and instead of binding him and holding him captive she ministers to him, afterwards permitting him to go his way to safety. He knows no way to express his gratitude except by offering her money which she declines.

A little time passes and cattle rustlers, who move into the vicinity, make trouble for the ranchers. The girl's father, making a trip on foot over his ranch, falls in with a trio of these marauders and they make him a prisoner, intending to hold him for ransom. The girl and her sweetheart, gathering flowers among the foothills, discover the father's predicament. Help is a considerable distance off, so the lover, telling the girl to remain where she is and where she will be safe, hurries for assistance. Seeing that his captors are taking her father out of her sight, the girl disregards instructions and cautiously follows. From a distance she sees her father taken into the cattle rustlers' camp and bound.

Meanwhile, one of the rustlers, returning to camp, discovers and captures her. She also is taken into camp and her position is terrifying when she discovers the nature of her captors. Poncho, keeping well back in the hills to avoid his enemies, stumbles upon the camp just at this time and discovers the girl's situation. Cautiously creeping through the surrounding underbrush he releases her and starts to take her to safety. She pleads with him also to rescue her father, but his attempt results in his discovery. Telling the girl to run for her life, he remains behind, one man against fifty, to cover her flight. He succeeds, but at the cost of his life, for when help comes at last the rescue party finds that the odds are too heavy.

SOCIALLY AMBITIOUS (March 6).—The Pringles, mother and son, Howard, are social climbers, but are handicapped by a "shoe string" bank account. When they learn that a long-forgotten country cousin, Nancy, has fallen heir to a lot of money they concoct a scheme to get next to some of it. They get Nancy to leave her happy home in the country to come and live with them, thereby breaking up a rustic love affair between Nancy and Dan Sully, a young farmer. When Nancy leaves for the city to become a society lady, Dan decides to surprise her and accordingly begins a course of correspondence lessons on social efficiency.

Nancy is a shock to her relatives, but her money counterbalances all for a time. Their scheme is working out nicely until, one evening, when they are entertaining some important persons (on Nancy's money), Nancy insists upon making her debut, when suddenly and quite unannounced there enters Dan, who has come from the country to stagger society. Society is stag-

MINA.

WHERE'S MY HUSBAND? (March 11).—Harry's married life is a telling lesson in conjugal happiness, notwithstanding the fact that his fair partner delights to assert and maintain her leadership in a most convincing way. As there is a silver lining to every cloud, Harry has his—a shimmering, golden dream called Mazie, who is his nearest, and dearest, and sweetest neighbor. After a severe session with his wife, Harry is quite ready for the little tempter. Would Harry go to Kidd's Rathskeller with Mazie for companion? He would. Anticipating a few hours of freedom, fun and frolic, Harry starts the celebration with a visit to the wet emporium around the corner. Maude (Harry's wife) gets on the trail and, after getting the hook, hubby is forced to trail home behind the irresistible mate.

Night comes; Maude retires and is soon asleep. Alert Harry, ably assisted by the iceman, climbs out of the window; meets Mazie and together they enter the portals of Kidd's Rathskeller, where he starts studying noodle soup and wine. Though asleep, Maude's mind is not at rest. Mind triumphs over matter, and the sleeper ceases to slumber. "Where's my husband?" she shrieks in a voice of thunder. Mazie's innocent little note, reposing on the bedroom floor, gives her the clue. Out in the midnight air rushes raging Maud. At Kidd's, merrymaking is at its height. Does Harry enjoy the fine cabaretian show? He does. "Where's my husband?" roars Maude as she cyclones in upon the festive congregation. Brave men try to stop her, but none can withstand Maude's terrific charge. Harry is finally cornered and he now knows that hell hath no fury like his Maude.

PARAMOUNT.

THE COUNTRY BOY (Lasky—Five Parts).—Tom Wilson, who has grown up in a small town under the watchful care of his widowed mother, falls in love with Jane, the daughter of Judge Belknap, but the judge refuses his consent until such time as Tom shall be able to support a wife in comfort. Tom, who has a very good idea of his own ability, thinks that he can win his fortune more quickly in the city than in the country and goes to New York, accepting a position at $15 per week which has been offered him by one of his father's friends. At his boarding house in New York, Tom makes the acquaintance of a chorus girl by the name of Amy, who immediately sets about fascinating him, partly for amusement and partly to make her lover jealous. The rest of the story concerns the manner in which Tom meets his downfall, the way in which he is saved from taking his own life as the result of shame and remorse, and the means through which he returns to the country town and regains his self-respect. Tom finally wins the approval of Judge Belknap and the romance of Tom and Jane comes to a happy conclusion.

THE WARRENS OF VIRGINIA (Lasky—Five Parts).—Agatha Warren, daughter of the aristocratic Southern General Warren, has, before the Civil War, fallen in love with Ned Burton, of New York. With the beginning of hostilities, Gen. Warren takes command of many of the Southern troops and Burton, enlisting in the Union army, becomes a Lieutenant, the lovers being separated by their different sympathies. Most of the action of the drama takes place during the closing days of the war, when General Warren's soldiers are suffering from the lack of supplies. Burton is forced by his superior officers to use his intimacy with the Warren family in carrying a ruse which leads to the defeat of the supply trains coming to the relief of the Confederate army. When he is captured, Agatha, still loving him in spite of herself, offers him the means of escape which he is too proud to accept. The timely surrender of Lee at Appomattox is all that saves him from being shot. The sequel to these stirring events is the ultimate reunion of the lovers.

THE HARD ROAD (Three Parts—Feb. 22).—Myra is a stenographer to a rich broker, Thorne. Her sister, Bess, is a salesgirl. Bess and Tom, an honest workman, are in love. Thorne makes love to Myra, giving her flowers and making things pleasant by inviting her out. With no thought of harm at first, Myra drifts and gradually yields. She sends a note to her mother saying she is tired of all work and will try to play. The mother has a stroke of paralysis. Bess goes to Thorne and pleads for news of her sister, but he disclaims all knowledge.

Going wearily home from work one evening, Bess watches a richly-gowned woman alight from her limosine, and recognizes Myra. She follows and begs Myra to return home. Myra contrasts her luxury with Bess' poverty and refuses. Bess says, "It may not seem so now, but yours is the 'hard road' and mine the easy and happy one." Learning that her mother is dying Myra hesitates. Thorne enters, bids her choose, and loving him, she stays.

A year later, Bess is happily married. Myra, living a life of luxury and gayety, is miserable, for Thorne is tiring of her. They quarrel; he insults her, and finally breaks an engagement on the plea of business. Myra, dressed and waiting, decides to show him there are others, and in a spirit of bravado and misery, telephones for Lawton, who has attempted to make love to her. They go to a gay restaurant and there meet Thorne with a rich girl whom he is wooing, and her father—the girl having, in all innocence, begged to be taken where she could see "life."

Lawton tells Myra that the girl is Thorne's fiancee, and Myra, already miserable, nervous, hysterical, loses all control of herself and makes a pitiable and scandalous scene. Thorne pretends she is crazy, and orders the waiters to throw her out. The girl, unexpectedly, pities her, puts her arms around her and speaks gently, and Myra suddenly comes to herself. Quietly, pathetically, heartbroken she leaves. Thorne refuses to have anything more to do with her. She tries to get a position as stenographer, but fails. Finally she succeeds in securing a position as maid. Lawton comes to the house—his aunt's—and she is dismissed.

Six years later, Bess and her two children while Christmas shopping meet Myra, an outcast. Bess takes her home, and Myra thinks she has at last found rest, but she overhears Tom, kind, but with his children uppermost in his heart, say, they can't keep her, as she would disgrace the children. Like a hunted thing she leaves. Having no place to go, and being thoroughly repentant, Myra decided to enter into the door of the "Sheltering Arms" when she sees another derelict, whom she thinks needs help. On speaking to the derelict (much to her surprise), she finds it is none other than Thorne, the man she loved and who wrecked her life. She gently takes him by the arm and together they walk to the door of the "Sheltering Arms" and enter as the picture fades out.

THE LAUGH THAT DIED (Feb. 26).—Carlotta loves Dick. Dick loves Carlotta, and why not? Is he not the grand boss, at the big job where Padra worked? Each day she would see him when, with Padra's dinner, she went to the big job and found Dick waiting for her. Already Dick had said when the flowers came they would journey to the little church and have the grand blessing.

Then into the life of Carlotta came Regi, a powerful, bad Padrone, who looked at her with leering, evil eyes. He would have her; no one else should stand in his way. Regi, realizing that Dick and Carlotta love each other, takes much joy in telling them that she would see Dick no longer. After Regi leaves Carlotta she writes a note to Dick which she throws to him from the window.

The next day when all is in readiness for the wedding. Dick climbs the fire escape to rescue Carlotta. In a hall he meets Regi. In a fight Regi and his followers wound Dick. Still intent on rescuing Carlotta he ascends the fire-escape, but lack of strength leaves him and she hides him in a closet in her room.

When Regi and his party find Carlotta there she tells them Dick has gone down stairs. They follow, taking her with them. They leave her with three drunken men while they continue their search. Realizing that her lover will die if left alone in the closet, Carlotta sets about to escape by getting her three guards fighting among themselves. She succeeds in locking them in the room and starts to rescue Dick.

With her bleeding lover unconscious she struggles to get him out to the police for protection. On her way she meets Regi and his cutthroats, but with a knife stolen from one of her jailers she holds them at bay. She forces Regi and his band out of the house and into the hands of the police. After the recovery of Dick, during Regi's imprisonment, Carlotta and Dick are married.

SMOULDERING FIRES (Two Parts—March 1).—Nameless and homeless and just a bit of human driftwood, the boy comes to a Western town. He meets with curses and rebuffs when he attempts to get work, but is finally engaged as porter at the principal saloon in town. The brute and a few choice companions are the bullies of the section. They have the general populace cowed, as well as the sheriff, and ever engage in daring bits of outlawry, without fear of capture. One day they are in the saloon where the boy is acting as porter and the brute, who is an expert gunman, exhibits his prowess to the men assembled.

He gruffly orders the boy to hold a card while he shoots at it. The boy is afraid and runs away. He seeks refuge with an old lady, the mother of a girl who sings at the saloon dance hall. She protects him from the men who are pursuing him and makes him comfortable. It is through her that he has the first taste of what he has never known—mother love.

Later the brute attacks the old lady's daughter and forces his unwilling attentions upon her. Arriving home, exhausted, the girl tells her story. A great change comes over the boy and the smouldering fires of manhood are fanned into flame. A new courage possesses him and, going to the saloon he tackles the bully bare-handed and by sheer grit is soon choking the life out of the brute, who at heart is a coward. The sheriff and others attempt to make him release the brute and the brute's men come to his assistance. The boy grabs his gun, however, and "cleans" the place. The men recognize the courage they themselves have lacked. They congratulate the boy and the sheriff, feeling himself unequal to this new-comer, unfastens his star and pins it upon the boy's breast.

The boy has been born again, according to the principle that a man may always be what he might have been. For the nameless lad the old life is past and a new future opens.

THE UNEXPECTED HONEYMOON (Two Parts—Feb. 15).—Mrs. Wallace Guilford is entertaining at her country home. Among her guests are her sister, Irene, and Lane Manning, who is in love with Irene, but awkwardly shy. Mrs. Guilford has made arrangements with the famous singer, Mme. Trilby, to entertain her guests. A violent storm comes up. Her husband, Wallace Guilford, a prominent lawyer, 'phones his wife that he will be detained at the office on a very difficult legal matter and will not be out until late. The guests arrive, but Mme. Trilby does not come. Mrs. Guilford is worried by her delay. Finally a messenger brings a note from the famous singer, saying that owing to the inclement weather, she cannot risk her voice by going out. Mrs. Guilford does not know what to do, now that her plans have miscarried.

A guest suggests that they have a "mock marriage." The idea is hailed with delight. They draw cards, and Irene and Manning are "elected." They go through the ceremony. Mr. Guilford arrives in time to witness the finish of the ceremony. He walks in and announces that by the laws of the State of New York, the marriage is binding and that Irene and Manning are legally man and wife.

Irene becomes hysterical and is assisted to her room. Manning retires to his room and refuses himself to all callers. Later that evening one of the ladies suggests that they all go to her home and leave the "unexpected honeymooners" alone.

The next morning Irene and Manning each receive a note from their late hostess explaining the desertion and telling them to make the best of the situation. This does not appeal to either of them. Breakfast is served for the two in the large dining room. Time hangs heavily; they discuss the predicament that they are in and finally Manning comes to the conclusion that the only way out is through a divorce.

Irene will not listen to such a thing and leaves the room.

Each independently of the other decides to go for a canter. They meet in the woods. Irene has fallen in love with her husband, but to hide it from him, she unmercifully snubs him. He is hurt and does not show up until later in the morning. Irene watches for him from her window, utterly wretched and lonely.

At the luncheon the messenger brings a note to Irene from her friend, Mrs. Brandt, who says she has found out about her predicament, and as she is going to Reno, offers to take her along so she can secure a divorce also. Irene shows the note to Manning. He cannot offer an objection in the face of her apparent relief at the solution of the matter, and agrees to drive her to the station that afternoon. Carson overhears, and 'phones to Mrs. Guilford. He does as she tells him and draws off the gasoline in the tank of the automobile.

Irene's baggage is quickly placed in the rear of the car. She and Manning get in. Much to their surprise, the machine won't run. The chauffeur says he is out of gas. While the chauffer fills the tank, Manning writes a note to Mrs. Guilford, telling her that they have decided to stick it out. Irene and Manning finally decide to make the best of the situation and, after leaving a note of thanks to their late hostess, go off on their belated honeymoon. Mrs. Brandt goes to Reno alone.

ROOMS FOR RENT (March 5).—Mrs. Felt, finding that her husband has developed a tendency to spend an undue amount of his money in saloons, decides to curtail this habit by carrying the family purse herself. She receives an invitation to visit her mother. Before going, she searches hubby's pockets, taking all his money except a little change. Felt, feeling desperate, resolves to raise money somehow and decides to rent their bedrooms out during her absence. Securing a cook, he fills the rooms with boarders.

Mrs. Felt returns unexpectedly, however, and the cook, not knowing her, throws her out. Mrs. Felt, discovering the state of affairs, secures the garden hose and soon drowns the boarders out. Felt, returning in the midst of the excitement, receives such a warm reception that he "sinks through the floor" and completely vanishes.

THE TREASON OF ANATOLE (Two Parts—Feb. 26).—As Anatole, an old bachelor, goes up the stairs past the rooms of the von Holm family, on his way to his dreary, little third-floor-back, the prattle of the two little children, Wilhelm and Freda, and the cheery voice of Freda, come filtering through the door. He stops to listen, envying the big, good-natured Fritz and his happiness with all his starved soul. And as he labors up the stairs, he shakes his head sadly and thinks how different it all might have been if only Celeste—but what was the use.

He sits in his pitiful loneliness after the long days spent in his fruitless search for work, takes his frugal sup of wine and his crust, and then his beloved violin, and plays the rhapsodies that his soul conceived, but which he could never seem to put on paper. And as he played the von Holms below him listened to the melody, the two little tow-heads would creep out of the bedroom and stand at mother's knee while her hand sought Fritz's. "Shoen," she would whisper.

And Fritz would nod his head as he looked into the fire, and clasp her hand a little tighter and answer, "Shoen." It got to be an institution with the von Holms this nocturne of Anatole's. But one night they missed it, tho' they listened, and the next. Anatole had staggered up the stairs, after his day of weary search, and there was no bread or wine. Hunger and disappointment claimed their own—Anatole lay upon his pallet too weak even to caress the strings of his violin. Something must have told Fritz; at any rate, he went up to see what was the matter with "the third-floor-back." He knocked and got no answer. He opened the door and went in, and he saw what was the matter in a second. And in ten seconds more, he had gathered up the pathetic figure and carried him down to his flat.

They nursed him back to health and strength, and from that moment the fortunes of Anatole were in the ascendant. Fritz knew Herr Schmidt who ran the big cafe and rathskeller. Herr Schmidt wanted a first violin. The music publisher thought pretty well of that study of Anatole's—it all came at once. How happy they were now and Anatole was a member of the family. The two little tow-heads would nestle at his feet, and Freda and Fritz would hold hands in the firelight while he played.

Big Fritz went up to Anatole's old room and brought down his things. He balked a moment at the big portrait of Napoleon, but he looked at the little, bristling Anatole and laughed, and took it down stairs and hung it beside the portrait of the Kaiser on his wall. Anatole would play "Die Wacht am Rhein" as soon as he had finished "La Marseilles." Then it happened—war. Of course, they both went, Fritz because he was a reservist, and Anatole because his great grandfather had fought and died under the First Napoleon. They parted with a tight hand-clasp and moist eyes, and Freda and the little tow-heads wept bitterly for both.

The recruiting officers didn't want to take Anatole—Anatole and his fifty years, but he told them to let the best swordsman among them take a sword, and he, Anatole, would show him how old he was—and he did. When the best swordsman had enough, they let Anatole enlist and gave him a musket. In an angle of the wall in the little town they took Fritz, red-handed—spy. He was in civilian clothes, and that mean the drum-head court-martial, a firing squad, and then blank wall at sunrise. Anatole stood by, unseen by Fritz, and heard the sentence. And they put Anatole to guard him through the few remaining hours of the night! Fritz didn't want to have Anatole charged with his escape. But while Anatole stood guard in the silent watches, there had come to him many visions of Fritz as he lifted him from his pallet when he lay starving; of Freda and the two little tow-heads as they ministered to him; of the little family waiting in far-off America for the husband and father—and Anatole simply wouldn't have it any other way.

Of course, it was the drum-head, the firing squad, and the blank wall for Anatole, but as he stood there in the dim morning light, there was a smile on his face. For Anatole was a man, and he believed in paying his debts.

Dick Carson, just released from three years in prison, wanders to a park bench. He takes a five dollar bill from his pocket given him at the prison, and the picture fades away. The following scenes tell the story of Dick, formerly Doctor Carson:

Dr. Carson is a prosperous young surgeon with all the world before him, but his weakness for drink and gambling are slowly but surely undermining his health, his skill and his practice. His professional rival, Dr. Grant, is a clever surgeon, but not popular and has little practice. After an all-night session Dr. Carson gets a 'phone message from Mr. Wilson, a prominent citizen, whose wife is seriously ill. Dr. Carson pulls himself together, and after examining the patient, tells Wilson to telephone him if she should get worse as he may have to operate. On the way home he meets Dr. Grant and invites him to come home with him. Dr. Carson confesses that he is afraid to perform the operation because of his condition. Grant notes Carson's unsteady hand and wonders why this man should have so much practice and he none. Carson answers a call at his door, and finds two of his cronies, who want him to play that night. He tells them Grant is in. They refuse to leave, and he hides them in his operating room.

During Carson's absence Dr. Grant uses his phone. He thinks of the message that may come from Mr. Wilson, and disconnects the wires. That night, as Carson and his crowd are drinking and playing cards Grant is waiting, Mrs. Wilson grows worse and her husband tries to telephone Carson. In a fight in Carson's rooms his wrist is injured. Wilson arrives to get Carson, sees the fight in progress and Carson's condition. He finds the wires disconnected, and tells Carson if his wife dies he, Carson, will be held responsible. He meets Grant, who accompanies him home to find Mrs. Wilson dead. Carson, still intoxicated, arrives at the Wilson home, and is thrown downstairs.

Five years pass and Carson is down and out. Grant is successful and the father of a baby girl. Nell, a thief, is Carson's only friend. She is being forced to rob a house, and appeals to Carson for protection, but she is taken away. He sees her enter the house by a window and follows, hoping to save her. A policeman sees him and gives the alarm. Carson takes the stolen jewels from Nell to return them to the safe, but the arrival of the police prevent him. In the attempted getaway a shot is fired, a scream is heard, and all look toward a door. Carson opens the door, to find a baby girl lying shot. Carson tells the policeman only an operation will save her. Nell volunteers to help, and we have the unique situation of a tramp doctor and a girl thief performing an operation to save a life.

The house and the baby are Dr. Grant's. He enters, sees his old rival operating on his child. He dare not interfere, as he might cause the child's death. He informs the police that Carson is a rogue and criminal. Carson finishes his work, sees Grant and tells him the child will live. Carson is led away to prison.

NESTOR.

A COAT'S A COAT (March 9).—It happens that Eddie and Mr. Bates, with offices in the same building, have delivered to them upon the same day overcoats exactly alike in every respect.

Eddie becomes engaged to his sweetheart, Victoria, and buys a ring to give her. In his hurry to keep an appointment with her, Eddie forgets and leaves the ring in his office. He meets his sweetheart and tells her that he has a surprise for her, asking her to close her eyes and hold out her hand. He then finds that he hasn't the ring and is forced to confess its absence to his sweetheart. She promises to wait for him until he goes to his office and gets it. Mr. Bates has some papers which he desires Eddie to witness. When Eddie arrives at his office he places the ring in the same pocket with Victoria's gloves, which she has given him. He then goes into Mr. Bates' office. When Eddie leaves he picks up Mr. Bates' overcoat, believing it to be his own.

He meets his sweetheart again, but to his consternation finds that the ring is missing. Angered by her second disappointment, Eddie's sweetheart demands her gloves, intending to leave him. She is much incensed when Eddie is unable to produce them. She leaves and goes home. Mr. Bates meanwhile has returned home to his wife. She again admires the coat which she has seen once before. She runs her hands into its deep pockets and finds the ring and gloves. Mr. Bates is at a loss to explain their presence in his pocket and his wife, believing he has been out with another woman, becomes very angry and decides to leave him. Bates goes back to his office.

Eddie, Meanwhile, has telephoned the police concerning the loss of the ring, gloves and coat. They put plain-clothesmen upon the case. Mrs. Bates sends a letter inviting Victoria, who is her friend, telling her that as she is about to leave her husband, she desires her to call for a farewell visit. Plain-clothesmen pick up Mr. Bates and follow him home. Victoria is there and recognizes her gloves. Mrs. Bates at once surmises that her husband has been out with Victoria. The plain-clothesmen telephone headquarters that their man is safe in the house. When Eddie calls upon them later for information they tell him that the man who has the coat is in the house at No. 200 Hollywood Drive and ask him to go there at once to claim the property.

Eddie goes to the number indicated and recognizes it as the home of his friend. The plain-clothesmen assure him that the thief is within and escort him into the house. Bates and Eddie come face to face. Eddie recognizes his ring which further complicates matters. Later he and Bates discover that they have coats identical in appearance. Explanations follow, bring the matter finally to a friendly settlement. Eddie wins back his sweetheart and Mr. and Mrs. Bates are reconciled.

"HOW DR. CUPID WON OUT" (Feb. 19).—Dr. Cupid falls in love with the daughter of the police commissioner, not knowing, however, that her father is the police commissioner. He tries to make her acquaintance, but fails. One day as he is driving his car, he sees her crossing the street and hits upon a plan to run her down and then take her to his hospital for treatment, thus bringing her into his power.

His plan succeeds. Her father puts Detective Plots on the case. The detective locates the girl at the hospital and surrounds the place with officers. Dr. Cupid sees his plans are to be ruined and, calling his attendants, orders Plotz confined in an insane asylum. Meanwhile he escapes with the girl. Detective Plotz escapes and with his officers starts in pursuit.

A merry chase follows. In one place the pursuers are cut off by a freight train and the fugitives are hastily married. They then meet the girl's father and explanations follow. Detective Plotz arrives and is given the merry laugh by all present.

WHEN HE PROPOSED (March 2).—Eddie calls upon his girl. The family, as usual, give sister's beau the "once over" and cause him no end of trouble before his visit is over. Taking father to one side, Eddie tells him that he bought a nice little home the day before and has $300 left with which to furnish it. The girl's father is very much pleased. Eddie then proceeds to ask the old man for the hand of his daughter. The latter's consent is readily given.

Trouble starts, however, when brother sees an advertisement offering to sell a five-passenger touring car, last year's model, tires all good, for only $300 down and $50 per month. The family at once decide they need a machine. Eddie protests that he needs the $300 to buy the furniture, but brother and sister see the car. Brother says it is a "bear," and seeing no other way out, poor Eddie is forced to buy it.

Eddie is married and wifie's family virtually take possession of the car. They decide to build a garage and charge it up to their new son-in-law. After many trying experiences, Eddie at last decides to sell the machine and to buy furniture. The family come around to visit, intending to take a ride in "their" car. Eddie tells them he has sold it and has bought furniture. They are very indignant that "their" car has been disposed of and finally leave in a huff. Wifie is sad to see her parents thus chagrined but decides that she loves Eddie better than her folks after all.

A VOICE IN THE NIGHT (Two Parts—Feb. 17).—Rex Malden is the star reporter on "The Times." He is walking home when he stops at the sound of a girl's voice pleading with a man. The man breaks away from her, however, when she attempts to hold him, and the girl, seeing that to plead with him is useless, walks sadly away. As she comes up to him, Malden looks deep into her eyes and is struck by the look of terror which is mirrored there. He is about to speak to the young woman when she turns and flees.

Malden then hurries down street after the man whom she has just left. He finds the man who had been talking to the girl masked and struggling with an armed figure in the street. In the struggle the masked man secures the revolver and a shot is fired in the air. As the masked man flees he admonishes Malden:

"My cause is a just one. It will be best for you to say nothing of what you have seen." Malden makes his way to the prostrate body and finds that it is that of Pollard, a government agent, whose name has been connected with several unsavory affairs but who has never been "caught with the goods."

Malden then hurries back after the masked man. From a safe distance he watches the latter hide his revolver and mask. The masked man then makes his way into the best residential section of the town and suddenly disappears into one of the mansions when Malden is several block away.

Malden reports the murder to his old friend, the sergeant at the West Locust street police station. The sergeant orders an investigation, but when Malden requests that he alone be permitted to handle the case the sergeant consents. Malden admits that the only clue he has is the voice of the masked man.

The papers, of course, are full of the tragedy, for Pollard, the dead government agent, had been prominent in the last political campaign. Various theories are offered and Pollard's political enemies at first are suspected, but this theory later is dropped.

Malden, quite by accident, comes across the picture of a young society woman in a New York periodical devoted to chronicling the doings of the smart sets in large cities all over the country. He recognizes the girl as the one who ran past him on the night of the tragedy. Acting at once upon the clue, the reporter calls on the young woman, whose name, as indicated by a caption under her photograph is "Mrs. Braybach of Sheridan Park," one of the best known society leaders of the younger set. Malden calls on Mrs. Braybach on the pretense of obtaining society notes, but the butler will not permit him to enter.

Malden then tries to peer through the windows of the Braybach home, but is ejected from the grounds by one of the gardeners. For the time he is forced to give up his endeavor to see Mrs. Braybach. The managing editor calls Malden into his office and tells him to get into the jail and secure the life story of Jim Graham, a murderer, who is to be sentenced that day for murder. Malden elbows into the courtroom in an effort to secure permission from one of the attendants to visit the murderer in his cell.

As he enters the courtroom Graham is led in to be sentenced. Malden is astounded when he hears the judge on the bench pronounce sentence, for in a moment he realizes that he has found his man, whose voice only he remembers. And the man he is looking for is not Jim Graham the murderer, but the judge on the bench! The reporter laughs loud and long, for he realizes that the judge is judging: that a murderer is passing sentence on the murderer.

Malden returns to the sergeant and tells him to have the money ready, for he has his man. He then gets the mask and gun the murderer discarded and an hour later stands before the judge in the latter's home. The judge, confronted by his accuser, admits the crime and tells his story.

His sister, Mrs. Braybach, was happily married until Pollard, the dead man, came to her home, secured papers incriminating her husband from a government official as security for a loan. Pollard coveted Mrs. Braybach and refused to restore the papers which would ruin Braybach until Mrs. Braybach had bowed to his will. Mrs. Braybach appealed to her father, the judge, and the latter in the struggle which Malden witnessed, takes Pollard's revolver from him and kills the scoundrel. Shaking the judge by the hand, Malden assures him that he did perfectly right and returns to the sergeant to whom he gives back the money he has wagered.

"I lose," Malden explains. "I had the wrong man."

The police sergeant later learns the facts of the case, but agrees that justice has been done.

THE OATH OF SMOKY JOE (March 3).—Joe, a village youth, becomes engaged to his sweetheart, Dora. Later, on account of his wild habits, she breaks the engagement. Joe goes west, where in a frontier town he wins a reputation as a gunman and is given the sobriquet of "Smoky." Finally he is sought by the sheriff for a killing, but escapes and meets another outlaw, Red Peterson. The two swear loyalty to each other and establish their hiding place in another county. Dora comes West to visit friends and while out for a ride meets Red. He falls in love with her and, compelled to hide from the sheriff while riding with her, shows her the notice of the reward for his arrest and tells her he is an outlaw.

Dora tells him that they will elude the sheriff and ride out of the valley where he can commence life anew. Afraid to tell Joe of his love affair, Red slips off in the night, leaving a letter behind telling of his plans. Angered at what he thinks is a trick upon him, Joe takes an oath to kill Red and starts in pursuit. Thinking that possibly Red might elude him he leaves a note for the sheriff, telling him to watch the pass and he will catch one of the outlaws he is after. For safety Red takes the old unused trail to the pass and Joe follows and from concealment shoots him. Rushing out to where Red is lying he comes face to face with Dora.

Their recognition is mutual. Joe pleads for forgiveness. Dora refuses. Red is placed on his horse and they hurry on to reach the next town for medical aid. Joe realizes that the sheriff will capture Red as he attempts to go through the pass and by a roundabout road reaches there first and allows himself to be taken prisoner. On the way back to town with the sheriff he looks back and sees Red and Dora riding the pass to safety.

WHERE THE FOREST ENDS (Two Parts—March 7).—Rose is brought up by an old hag in a miserable hut on the side of the mountain, but in spite of the cruel treatment of the hag, Rose has a dream world all her own. Her nature absorbs all this beauty of the mountains and she steals away at every opportunity to her secret leafy bower where she adorns herself with leaves and vines.

Jack Norton, a manly young mountain ranger, and Silent Jordan, an old prospector, whose nature has been chastened and refined by sorrow, are the only men in the vicinity. Jack Norton has an affection for Rose, which is ripening into love, but before he declares himself he is called away to patrol a distant part of the canyon. Silent Jordan, when he sees Rose, recognizes in her a perfect likeness of the girl whom he once loved and whom he knows must have been Rose's mother.

A man's shadow obscures the sun from the rose when an artist, Paul Rouchelle, comes into the mountains to sketch. He sees Rose in the costume of leaves, dancing and, declaring the wood nymph shall be his model, he gets her to pose for him. She is fascinated by the polished gentleman, and finally consents to run away with him. He takes her to his studio, but one day she learns that he already has a wife and child. She leaves at once and returns to the mountains. The wild rose which has been transplanted to the hot house, fades and withers in its unnatural environment. She finds the hag has died and she has no home. She is utterly discouraged and exhausted. Silent Jordan appears and tells Paul to get out.

The Ranger arrives at this point and Paul is so enraged that he tells him that Rose has been his mistress. The ranger chokes Paul but Silent Jordan interferes and lets him go.

The ranger asks Rose if it is true. Rose slowly nods her head. The ranger turns from her. Silent Jordan asks him to forgive Rose, but the ranger refuses to do so and starts to leave. Silent Jordan, however, leads the young man and Rose to a little grave. Warning them not to make the same mistake he did, he tells them his life's story—how he loved a girl and on his wedding day discovered she had a baby girl. He left her; but go where he would he couldn't forget her. Her face haunted him.

He finally returned and on the hillside found a grave with a rude cross on it. His sweetheart had died of a broken heart. He became a recluse and folks called him Silent Jordan. Jack, with tears in his eyes, takes Rose in his arms.

THE MYSTERY OF THE MAN WHO SLEPT (Feb. 25).—Fearing an epidemic of typhoid among the workmen, the foreman suggests that they be vaccinated. The boss assents, and, as the foreman recommends a specialist of his acquaintance the work of putting the affair through is turned over to him. The engineer, Christie, is persuaded by Andrews to have himself vaccinated. He does so and is taken mysteriously ill immediately afterward. A doctor who is called in says there are signs of foul play. Queer is called in to take the case up. Christie, meanwhile, is succumbing to what appears to be sleeping sickness.

Queer finds out from Andrews what doctor did the vaccinating. He calls but finds the doctor out. Without waiting for permission, Queer enters the house by the basement and finds in the doctor's laboratory serum for sleeping sickness and anti-toxin for it. Queer takes the anti-toxin and hurries out to administer it to Christie. While Queer is thus engaged Andrews calls to inquire after his boss. Queer becomes suspicious and follows Andrews. He sees him answering a letter in the shack on the works from a rival construction company addressed to Christie in which that concern offers Christie a bribe to delay the work. Andrews offers to accept the bribe in Christie's place.

Queer hurries back to the president of the company and takes him the carbon copy of the letter Andrews wrote, which carbon copy Andrews left behind him by mistake. Then they both go out to the laboratory of the doctor where Queer discovered the anti-toxin, after first having telephoned for detectives to meet them there. They steal in on the doctor and arrest him. Queer then pulls off the disguise worn by the "Decidedly Distinctive"

An Exhibitor Wrote This Ad.

Just as we were about to write an ad for this week Mr. G. G. G., one of New York's most prominent exhibitors, told us:

"It took me quite a while to come up and see you, but now that I have come I feel that I am fortunate. There is a sort of something in your way of doing business that is hard for me to explain —I guess it is the spirit that prevails. No one has tried to shove anything down my neck, but I did get a lot of good talk, and after I thought it over I saw where you were co-operating with me as no one has ever offered to do before.

"Anyway, you did not try to sell me your service because of so many other reasons outside of the actual picture itself. When you take it all in all it is the picture that I am buying and that I am selling again. I like business methods of that kind. I do not like to have anyone bring up anything that does not absolutely relate to the picture as a reason why I should buy.

"I saw some of your pictures. They are as good as any I have ever seen and many of them are better. That 'Birth of Emotion' is one of the best pictures I have ever seen. The comedies are fine.

"I am going to come up here oftener. It makes me feel good to talk to men like you. I should like to congratulate you, but I do not think the word 'congratulate' is strong enough to fit the occasion. You are doing things that should really be set forth as a model.

"To sum it up in a few words, I like Kriterion Service. You can take that both ways. I like the pictures and I like the way I am served by the people connected with Kriterion. You can gamble that the contract to which I signed my name is good for as long as I am in the motion picture exhibition business.

"With your methods of doing business and high-class pictures, you deserve all the success in the world, and you can bet your last dollar that I am going to pass the good word along. I am for Kriterion every minute."

THE LOST LEDGE (Two Parts—March 6).—Andrew Leslie, a successful mining engineer, invests his entire capital and savings in the Southern oil fields and becomes the owner of a number of very promising oil wells. Unfortunately, just as he begins to realize a profit from his investment a disastrous fire completely destroys his wells. Leslie rushes to the scene of the conflagration and, standing helplessly by, realizes that he is a bankrupt. In a very depressed state of mind he is returning to his office in the city when he is suddenly startled by the shrieks of a woman. He stops his machine just as a runaway horse dashes madly past with a woman clinging to the saddle.

Instantly he speeds up and, overtaking the horse, jumps from the seat of his car, throws his arms around the horse's neck and succeeds in bringing the infuriated animal to a stop. The fair rider, Margaret Wallace, is more scared than hurt. She thanks her rescuer and accepts his offer to drive her home in his car. Arriving at her home he meets her father and learns he is a wealthy mine owner and the owner of large properties in Mexico. The chance meeting and acquaintance later ripens into a feeling of profound admiration on the part of Leslie.

Mr. Wallace, the girl's father, on learning that Leslie is a mining engineer who has lost his properties, proposes to pay him an attractive salary, to furnish him working capital and to give him a half interest in the mine if he will go into Mexico and locate the lost ledge of one of Wallace's large mines located in that country. Leslie accepts the proposition and leaves for Mexico accompanied by Wallace, his daughter, Margaret, and Margaret's fiance, Frank Foster, also a mining engineer of no mean ability, who had previously spent a considerable length of time trying to trace the lost ledge. On arriving in Mexico Leslie proceeds to explore the mine.

For more than a month Leslie and Foster got along very harmoniously, but at the end of that time it becomes evident that they are not entirely of one mind as to the logical manner in which the search should be conducted. Before long there is an open break between them, and thereafter Leslie conducts his search, accompanied only by an old Aztec Indian guide. The breach between Leslie and Foster grows wider as the weeks pass, not alone because of their difference of opinion regarding the search for the lost ledge, but because of the even more important fact that Foster suspects Leslie of entertaining a more than friendly interest for his fiancee, Margaret.

Foster torments himself by brooding over his financial wrongs at the hands of Leslie until sleeping or waking, he can think only of ridding himself of Leslie. With but a half formed thought in mind he starts in by ingratiating himself with the Mexicans, the majority of whom he knows by reason of his previous residence in that territory. The Mexicans keep a close surveillance of Leslie's movements and report to Foster. One day when Leslie enters the mine, accompanied by his old Indian guide, Foster conceives a way of accomplishing his purpose, and bribes the Mexicans to cause an explosion near the entrance to the mine. A cave-in results, hemming Leslie and his guide in the mine. After the first shock of the explosion Leslie and his guide take note of their surroundings and set about fighting their way to freedom.

Frantically they sound the walls and endeavor to ward off the noxious gases. After being imprisoned several days in the mine they come upon an opening which leads them to an Aztec cave. The old Indian recognizes the cave as an Aztec place of worship and prostrates himself before an idol of an Aztec priestess. Leslie at this juncture falls from sheer exhaustion, and the old Indian remains in worship before the priestess, who suddenly seems to become a living being and approaches the old guide and points off. The guide, although prostrate, seems to feel the approach of the priestess and is led on apparently by some power above him. Leslie, meanwhile, wearily rises and staggers after the old guide. After going through devious passageways, Leslie suddenly becomes aware that he has found the long sought "lost ledge," but which does much to revive his waning strength.

Meanwhile, the Mexican who was bribed by Foster to cause the explosion, overcome by his sudden prosperity, has remained in one continuous debauch and, crazed with liquor, has quarreled with Foster and exposed his part in the explosion. In the melee which follows Foster is killed. Disheartened by this double tragedy, Mr. Wallace determines to return with his daughter to their home. As they are leaving the hotel, Leslie, who by following the "lost ledge" has found freedom from his prison, rushes hatless and coatless into the hotel and exhibits to the astonished Wallace and Margaret specimens found in his enforced prison. Wallace and his daughter cancel their arrangement and decide to remain in Mexico in the interest of the newly discovered ledge. The return to life of one she believed dead brings Margaret to a realization of her regard for Leslie, and the happiness of these two brings the story to an attractive close.

THEIR HOUR (Two Parts—March 2).—The story centers about two people, both married. Mrs. Davis, whose husband is unsympathetic and cruel, has a nervous breakdown. She is advised to go to the seashore. She does not regret leaving her husband, but it is hard to part with her one child, a little girl. Mr. Austin plans upon his vacation a trip to the seashore. He expects his wife, a pampered society woman, and his little son, to accompany him, but at the last moment she refuses to go.

Mrs. Davis and Mr. Austin meet in the crowded railroad station. And because the woman looks wan and tired and has too many bundles to carry, Austin assists her to the train, which happens to be the same one he is taking. For an hour they sit opposite one another, she looking out of the window, lonesome and hurt because of her husband's neglect, and he watching her furtively over the pages of his newspaper. Then he takes courage and hands her a magazine, and the two start talking to each other.

They arrive at the junction where a change is made for the seaboard. Both alight to await their trains. Mrs. Davis is going East to Sea Crest and has fifty-eight minutes to wait, while Austin goes west to Ocean Point, and has an hour to wait. They walk to the station benches to be seated when Austin sees nearby an inviting little nook beneath some shade trees near a brook. He signifies they may as well await their trains there. The woman agrees gladly and they both sit besides the stream. Soon they begin to exchange confidences. She tells him how her family were destitute and to save her mother from the drunken father she accepted Davis without loving him. He, in turn, tells her of his wife, how in the little town he took her riding in a new automobile, against her aunt and uncle's wishes and of the breakdown, miles from town and of taking the girl back in the morning and her uncle's harshness in turning her out of the house. Then, to save her reputation, he, too, married without love. And suddenly they realize that for the first time love has come into their lives and that they love one another.

Meanwhile, Mrs. Austin and Davis, who have known each other long, have met and are at luncheon together. But theirs is the different, the sordid love, and they laughingly agree to spend the two weeks together to the best advantage.

Austin holds Mrs. Davis in his arms and says now that they have found one another, they must never part, and with a sigh of happiness she agrees. He takes her ticket from her and tears it up, signifying she must come with him. They start back to the station arm in arm, when Destiny takes a hand in the form of two little country children, a boy and a girl, who stumble on the tracks. Mrs. Davis brushes the cinders from them and Austin pats the little boy's shoulders, and they send them on their way again. Then the man and the woman face each other and know that their love has come too late—that they cannot leave their children, and without another word, they walk to the station.

THE RECOIL (Two Parts—March 4).—The newly elected district attorney, Charles Morrison, like most new officials, proceeds to enforce all laws to the letter. The new state law against professional prizefighting gives him an opportunity to display his enthusiasm in the cause of "Reform." Edna Gardner, a special writer for "The Spotlight," is sent by her editor to cover the first amateur boxing exhibition under this new law. The district attorney attends to see that the law is enforced.

Following the fight the county officials call upon the president of the athletic league, and through a ruse prove that the contest was in reality a professional affair. They arrest all of the participants as well as the promoter. Among those jailed is Ray Flannigan, the lightweight, who in his exhibition has won the admiration of Edna. She is afterwards sent to interview him and finds him in the position of assistant bartender in a second rate saloon. He wins her sympathy by his frankness and during the weeks that ensue they become good friends. The district attorney is tipped off that lottery tickets are being sold in the saloon. He raids the place again arresting Ray Flannigan.

While he is out on bail Ray and Edna meet frequently. During one of their tramps through the city park they see a soicety announcement that Miss Claire Morrison, daughter of the district attorney, is giving a bridge party at her home that afternoon. Flannigan protests to Edna the unfairness of things in that society can gamble at will while poorer men are constantly under the surveillance of the police. Edna evolves a plan and goes with Ray to police headquarters where she calls upon one of the policewomen, whom she has met in her newspaper work. She puts the plan to this official and the trio forthwith go to the residence of the district attorney.

Miss Gardner, by reason of her newspaper connection, is admitted and secures the names of all the guests. She signals the policewoman who enters and places every one under arrest. Miss Morrison is taken to her father's office, where Edna gives the new district attorney the choice of one or two alternatives: Withdrawing the prosecution against Ray Flannigan or being placed in a position where he will be forced to prosecute his own daughter as a common gambler. Morrison takes the former course. Edna secures Ray a position in the press room of her newspaper and he makes a new start in life.

STERLING.

MARRIAGED (March 4).—Dot and her family are anxiously awaiting the arrival of Snitz, the groom, but he fails to appear. Her father phones to him and awakens him from a long sleep. Snitz, worried over his failure to be prompt, runs from his home half dressed and hurries to keep his appointment at his sweetheart's home. On the way he encounters several other pedestrians who are in a hurry and after bumping into several is chased by a vengeful mob. After much excitement he arrives at his sweetheart's home. They find they have forgotten the most important part of the wedding, the minister.

Snitz calms the waiting guests and hurries off to find one. He finally overtakes the minister on the road and puts him in the hack. The horse suddenly rejuvenates and runs away. Snitz falls from the hack while the minister remains inside getting the roughest ride of his life. Horse, hack, minister and all go over a steep cliff. Snitz leaps over after him, and after much hard work finally reaches his bride's home with the minister, only to find that his rival, a milkman, has eloped with her. The guests and Snitz chase them wildly to the depot, just in time to see the train swiftly pull out with the happy milkman and Dot waving a jaunty farewell from the rear platform.

IT MIGHT HAVE BEEN SERIOUS (Feb. 16). Mary receives a letter from her brother, Bob, asking her to meet him for lunch and to bring Ben, her husband, with her, as she has not yet met him. She goes to Ben's office and leaves a note on his desk, asking him to meet them at Clark's restaurant. After she has gone, a young widow comes in, with whom Ben has been carrying on a flirtation. She sees the note from Mary, destroys it and writes one in its place. Ben finds the note from the widow. He arrives at Clark's just in time to see Mary and a strange man (her brother Bob) enter the restaurant together. He hurries home to pack up, intending to leave Mary at once.

A burglar breaks into Ben's house just before he arrives and conceals himself in the closet when he hears Ben come in. A messenger delivering a bunch of flowers, makes a mistake and delivers them at Ben's house. Ben receives them and discovers an accompanying lovey dovey note. Ben thereupon determines to wait and shoot the miscreant. He gets out his gun, finds he has no cartridges and hurries out to secure some.

Bob, the brother, misses the train, and comes to the house. The burglar is still in the closet. A bill collector happens in, and Bob suggests that he wait there with him until some member of the family returns. Ben returns with ammunition, fires off the gun and rushes in. Bob and the collector dash into the closet with the burglar and conceal themselves. Ben, finding the room empty, retires to the bedroom.

Mary meets a book agent at the front door and invites him in. She decides to purchase a set of books as a surprise for Ben's birthday. Ben sneaks down with his gun. Mary hears him coming, and in order that his birthday surprise may not be spoiled she hides the book agent in the closet, without being aware of the others. Ben rushes in with his gun, sees a man's hat on the table, suspects he must be hiding in the closet, and is about to fire through the closet door, when the four men come out. This is too much for either Ben or Mary. Both are dazed. Explanations quickly follow, during which the burglar sneaks off with Ben's packed suit case.

FATTY'S INFATUATION (Feb. 24).—"Fatty" is in love with a dainty little miss who is somewhat of a coquette, for she shares her affections with one Johnny Boston Beans, much to the chagrin of "Fatty." "Fatty" is given a dollar with which to pay the gas bill, but on the way to the office of the gas company he meets the idol of his dreams gazing wistfully at the goodies displayed in the window of a confectionery store.

"Fatty" is sorely tempted, but resists manfully. It is too much however, when Johnny Boston Beans butts in and monopolizes the lady's conversation. "Fatty" falls, and, flashing his dollar bill, he proceeds to treat the fair one. Then to heap coals of fire upon the head of his rival he invites Johnny Boston Beans to accompany them. The dollar is soon spent for ice cream and candy, but poor "Fatty" is up against it for the dollar.

When he returns home he feigns sickness to avoid any possible questioning on the part of his mother, and is put to bed. It is then that remorse sets in and he sees terrible visions of himself in a felon's cell. The next morning he sets out to earn an honest dollar to repay the one he has stolen. At the end of a day of toil, however, he has only fifteen cents to show for his efforts.

His mother starts to prepare the evening meal and finds that the gas company has shut off the gas. His mother and father force from "Fatty" an explanation and he is forced to confess, adding that he "did it all fer love." This is too much for his parents. "Fatty" hears them chuckling and looks up wonderingly, only to be hugged to his father's breast and to receive his parents' hearty forgiveness.

THE CONSTABLE'S DAUGHTER (Feb. 23).—Silas Hicks, the village constable, in wrestling with a chicken thief, is no match for his husky antagonist, who ducks him in the creek. Silas is seized with a violent chill and obliged to take to his room. His daughter, Mildred, pins on her father's badge and arming herself with his six-shooter, runs the chicken thief down, landing him in the lockup. Soon after she arrests Bob, a city tramp, and fines him ten dollars. The young man and his fair captive fall in love instantly. Silas recovers from his chill and returns to jail. He is enraged upon finding the stranger with his daughter. He kicks Bob out. But Mildred steals after him and they stroll to her favorite tree. The constable goes to find Mildred. Armed with a club he swoops down upon the happy pair, and Bob quickly swings himself up into the branches of the tree, whither the constable's rheumatism prevents him from following. Mildred runs back to the lockup and frees Joe, the chicken thief. Father chases Joe and is getting decidedly the worst of it when Bob comes to his rescue. After that he permits the young folks to continue their love affair.

THE DECISION (Two Parts—Feb. 22).—Ida Price has been cheated out of her share in her father's estate by her cousin Charles. She places the case in the hands of Judge Clark. Meanwhile, a strange young man, Robert Graham comes to study law with the Judge, and though Ida is not very well satisfied with Clark, because she is attracted to his new assistant, she allows him to appeal the case to a higher court. Cousin Charles tries in vain to compromise with her. The last day to file the papers arrives and the Judge starts to the court house. Meeting Charles, he accepts his invitation to drop into the club and have a drink. Ida's cousin does his best to get the Judge tipsy, and believes he has succeeded. Really he only delays Clark about ten minutes, who enters the waiting court room smiling and debonair. The appeal is granted. In the supreme court the former decision is reversed. Ida receives her fair share of the property—and incidentally a husband who is Robert Graham.

SHE NEVER KNEW (Feb. 24).—Tom Conway robs his employer, Jack Martin, the ship chandler, and leaves town with Olga, a dance hall girl. Martin goes to Mrs. Conway and demands restitution. Tom's mother pays him with the savings of a lifetime. She tells Alice, her daughter, that some day Tom will be coming back. And every night just before going to bed, she places the prodigal's pipe and slippers near the fire, whispering, "Mother will wait for you always, Tom." George Park, in love with Alice, warns her and her mother against an escaped convict, who is lurking in the vicinity. Park insists upon loaning them a revolver for their protection. Meanwhile Tom has discovered that Olga is untrue to him. In a fit of rage, increased by drink, he kills her. Then he makes blindly for his home. At the moment that Tom stumbles in at the rear door of his mother's house, the convict enters from the front. Meeting Mrs. Conway, the convict retreats at sight of her revolver into the kitchen. There he meets Tom. They struggle and the convict escapes. Mrs. Conway seeing the form of a man in the dark kitchen, fires the revolver and faints. Alice and Park return just in time to carry away Tom's body for secret burial.

WHO GOT STUNG (Feb. 19).—The bliss of the Brays, two newlyweds, is turned to bitterness by a telegram to the effect that Mrs. Bray's mother will arrive next day. Bray carries the old lady's photograph to his office to remind him of his troubles, where it is stolen by two friends of his, Harry and Jim. They decide to put up a joke on Bray. Harry, who is an actor, gets into a make-up as much like the photograph as possible. Meanwhile Bray has returned home to prepare a welcome for his mother-in-law, including a mine under the

MAJESTIC.

HOW HAZEL GOT EVEN (Two Parts—Feb. 14).—Hazel, a cashier in a restaurant, is engaged to Patsy, a bus driver. Patsy earns some extra money by going in on preliminary bouts at the Athletic Club pugilistic exhibitions, and gains a local reputation as a boxer. When a big fighter is suddenly taken ill on the eve of a public contest, Patsy substitutes, wins the match, and suddenly finds himself in line for a bout with the champion of the world. On receipt of an offer for a long tour, he gets a swelled head and repudiates Hazel, who is forced to go back to work in the restaurant. She plans to get even with Patsy. With her savings she hires a coming western fighter, who arrives in town, to clean up her faithless lover. This he does in great shape. When Patsy comes to, he sees Hazel and his victorious opponent strolling affectionately off together.

THANHOUSER.

HIS SISTER'S KIDDIES (Feb. 21).—Samuel Bender, a wealthy bachelor, offers to stay with his sister's children, while she takes a fortnight's rest and vacation. He writes her that nothing could possibly give him more pleasure than to be with his small nephew and niece, whom he has made sole heirs to his estate. He buys all kinds of toys and games—enough to make his life miserable for a month—and departs for the country. In two days his sister receives a telegram, stating that Samuel has been called back to New York on very urgent business. Once aboard the train, he experiences some relief. But he loses no time in destroying his will and making a new one in which he leaves his property, real and personal, to the orphan dogs of Gotham.

THE ADVENTURE OF FLORENCE (Two Parts—Feb. 23).—Florence Clark, as she is leaving her friend's apartment, calls back to her, "If you want me, 'phone Oak 515." John Travers, who is passing the house, overhears. He is greatly impressed with Florence's appearance. That evening the girl has an unpleasant interview with her parents, who wish her to marry Dr. Ward, a business friend of her father's. She refuses to consider Ward. When Travers calls up and asks her to dine with him the next evening, though she realizes that it is a daring and unconventional thing to do, she is in a mood to accept. In Travers, Florence discovers the man she has always dreamed of meeting some day—and later, when her father finds that he holds an important interest in the very mines in which Dr. Ward is interested, he removes his objections to the match.

$1,000 REWARD (Feb. 26).—Madeline's mother is a widow and her twin sister, Marion, is crippled. Mrs. Goddard takes in sewing, and Madeline sells newspapers. The daughter of a wealthy man becomes interested in the little newsgirl, and on further acquaintance May Gordon persuades her father to pay for an operation on Marion Goddard's hip. They take Marion home to their beautiful house to recuperate. Meanwhile, Red Hogan, wanted for burglary, breaks into the Gordon mansion with Whitey, his pal. Marion blocks his operations and effects his arrest. Mr. Gordon has offered $1,000 for Hogan's capture and this he now insists upon awarding to Marion. But she will not take the money. Mr. Gordon retaliates by making Mrs. Goddard and both Madeline and Marion members of his own household.

ROYAL.

TWO JONES (Feb. 20).—Two men, both named Jones, and exact doubles of each other, live in adjoining towns. Neither is aware of the existence of his double. One is married and henpecked. The other elopes with his sweetheart. The two couples go to Cedarhurst for a vacation and a honeymoon respectively. There they become badly mixed. The wives can't tell their own husbands when they see them, and the father of the eloping Jones, who has pursued the runaways, vents his wrath on the wrong party. At last both wives and both husbands meet., And then matters get straightened out.

RELIANCE.

ABOVE PAR (Feb 19).—Berry, a Wall street broker, likes Dick Carson, a young newspaper man and his daughter's fiance, but has little regard for Carson's profession. Berry is approached by another broker, Stirling, with a proposition to secure a corner on a certain product through crooked manipulation of stock. Berry flatly refuses to enter the combine, and Stirling determines to cause the other man's ruin. His secretary, Morton, manages to secure a position in Berry's office and immediately the latter begins to lose heavily through the leak of information. Thinking that there may be a good story in the case, Carson takes it up. He finds out that Morton is in the employ of Stirling. That same night Stirling hires two cracksmen to steal from Berry's safe certain papers, while he and Morton wait in their office for the delivery of the goods. The yeggmen are discovered by Carson, who is unable, however, to overcome them both. Berry and his daughter chance to pass the office and see the light. They investigate. Carson's battle with the robbers attracts the attenion of a policeman who arrives in time to help in subduing the crooks. Stirling calls up Berry's office on the 'phone and Carson, pretending to be one of the yeggmen, tells him that they have secured the stuff and will be right up. The Berrys, Carson and the police go in a body to Stirling's office, where he and Morton are placed under arrest. Mr. Berry changes his opinion about newspaper men.

THE BOUNDARY LINE (Two Parts—Feb. 20).—The Malotek and Canewa Indian tribes are camped near the Coyote wind-break for the hunting season. The chiefs lay out the boundary line between them, and agree, that for either tribe to hunt or kill across the line, is to break faith and bring on war. Awasos, the son of Ty-ee Htas, chief of the Canewas, in the eagerness of the chase, pursues and slays a deer in Malotek territory. He and his companions are captured by braves of the other tribe and carried before Chief Broken Bow. They are sentenced to be killed by torture. Awasos long has loved Awaneta, daughter of Broken Bow. She recognizes in the prisoners her lover and his companions. During the night she frees the Canewa braves. To save the sentry from death, the Indian girl confesses it was she who let the prisoners go. Much against his will, her father is obliged to let her suffer, at the demand of the tribe, in place of Awasos and his men. She is left in a cave to starve. Here she is found and rescued by her lover, who takes her home to his own people. Thither come Broken Bow and his squaw, trailing their daughter from the cave, for they have relented toward her. Ty-ee Htas is restrained by Awasos from putting the Malotekas to death; then Awasos declares his great love for Awaneta. The two tribes make peace and celebrate the marriage of the children of their chieftains.

THE MUFFLED BELL (Feb. 22).—Dan Ward, a detective in Federal employ, is sent to investigate Capt. Flinn's sailors' outfitting shop, suspected to be the headquarters of a band of revolutionary agents. Nettie Howard, who tends shop for the Captain, is in love with Dan. When he is overpowered in the cellar by Basil Cerino and his gang, she pleads for his release, but to no avail. While Flinn is out of the room, Nettie muffles the bell behind the counter by means of which the captain is able to warn the desperadoes in the cellar of the approach of danger. On his return from the conference in the cellar her employer locks Nettie in a room, from which she escapes, and goes to the office of the Surveyor of the Port, Dan's employer. The Surveyor sends her back with several detectives. Flinn, because of the muffled bell, is unable to warn the men at work in the ammunition cellar, and they are surprised. In the fierce fight which ensues, Cerino seizes Nettie and drags her into a secret passage, where Dan, the minute he is freed, goes to her rescue. The leader of the band is taken into custody. And Dan and Nettie soon after are married.

THE DOUBLE CROSSING OF SLIM (Feb. 24).—Mr. Brooks, a young millionaire, shows his wife a valuable diamond. She is pleased with it. Brooks goes to the safe in his library to lock up the priceless gem, while his wife attends to the details of his luggage, Mr. Brooks intending to make a short business trip out of town. Upon going into the library, Mrs. Brooks finds her husband taking some papers from his desk, which he then locks. He now bids his wife goodbye and tells her he will be back by midnight.

Croaky and Slim, two crooks, recognize Brooks as he boards the train at the depot and they recall a newspaper article which told of Brooks' purchase of a valuable diamond. The crooks plan to meet that night at Brooks' home. Croaky covets the diamond for himself and, to carry out his scheme, buys a fake diamond. The crooks gain entrance to Brooks' home and force Mrs. Brooks to open the safe, but not before she has had time to get word to the police, who arrive at the house just as the crooks are making their escape.

Croaky has given Slim the fake diamond,

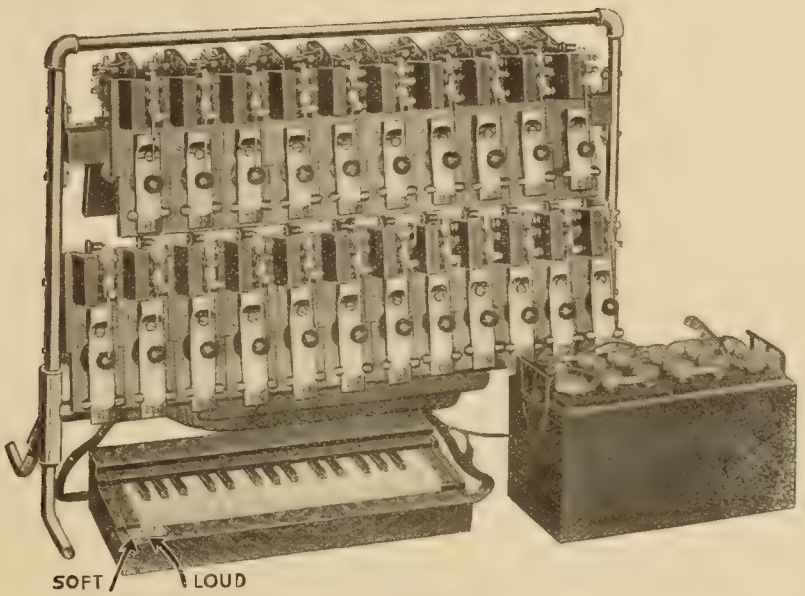
DEAGAN UNAPHONE



Front View of Deagan Unaphone No. 2308
(Size 36 x 34 x 10 inches)

A Musical Novelty Instrument of Unusual Merit Especially Designed for Moving Picture Theatres

The Unaphone is a remarkable instrument particularly adapted to the motion picture theatre. It is wonderfully soft and mellow in tone. Absolutely no harsh bell sound. The Unaphone is as good as any vaudeville act and a musical sensation that will make your audience sit up and take notice. It is played from piano keyboard and any piano player or drummer can play it.

The Unaphone can be used in many ways. It can be played with the orchestra or featured during intermission as a solo instrument. It can be carried out in the lobby and used as a refined bally-hoo to attract the passing crowds.

A mighty fine advertising stunt is to place the Unaphone in an automobile with banners, and drive around town playing the latest popular airs. It's as good as a brass band to advertise a feature attraction.

For traveling exhibitors and State Rights men playing on percentage, the Unaphone is a regular "Bonanza." It is the cheapest and most effective advertising possible and does away with costly newspaper publicity and hand bill distribution.

We have letters from enthusiastic exhibitors and state rights men from all over the country telling us how they are increasing their box office receipts and making money with the Unaphone. Why not you?

The price of the marvellous Unaphone is only $225. We will sell you this money making instrument, if you so desire, on easy terms. Write us today which he purchased for the purpose, and Slim, thinking to double-cross Croaky, gives him the slip, only to be caught by the police. A detective examines the supposed stolen gem and pronounces it an imitation. Slim, angered at being duped, tells the police of the place where Croaky will dispose of the diamond. The detective catches Croaky in the act of selling the diamond and learns to his surprise that it is only paste. He places Croaky under arrest. Mr. Brooks returns home to his hysterical wife and upon learning that the safe has been robbed, he laughingly consoles her, and going to his desk, he unlocks the drawer and takes out the genuine diamond.

THE MAN WITH A RECORD (Two Parts—Feb. 27).—Jim Doyle, an ex-convict, is unable, on account of his record to keep a job. His mother sends him to sell her watch, and the pawnbroker by mistake enters his name opposite the number and description of another watch which has been stolen. Murphy, a detective, and an enemy of Doyle, is put on the trace of the stolen watch. He investigates the pawnshop records and arrests Doyle, who receives a speedy trial and is sent back to prison for five years. The mother's watch disappears. Three years later, Doyle gets word from his sister that his mother is dying. He manages to escape from prison, and again Murphy is put on his tracks. Doyle evades the detective, but while trying to rescue a young girl from injury, he is run down by the governor's automobile. The governor's daughter has Doyle taken to a hospital, where later he is placed under arrest. At his request the governor's daughter goes with a doctor to Mrs. Doyle's bedside. The dying woman recognizes in the watch the doctor uses the very one which she had sent her son to pawn three years before. The doctor tells how he bought it at the pawnshop in his student days. The governor's daughter takes up the case with the board of pardons and before his mother dies Doyle is reprieved.

THE GRUDGE (Two Parts—Feb. 24).—Rio Ed comes down from the mountains and invites all the men in the saloon to drink with him. They are all afraid to refuse, excepting Dick Wayne, who tells Rio he is particular with whom he drinks. This infuriates Rio and he forces Dick to the bar and orders a drink for him. Dick throws the drink on the barroom floor, and deals Rio a stinging blow across the face with his open hand. Dick is pretty far gone with consumption, as a result of his dissipation, and the exertion is too much for him. He falls back weakly into the arms of the man nearest him, coughing violently. Rio, seeing Dick's weakened condition, does not continue the fight, but says he will get Dick into condition to fight with him. He takes Dick forcibly to his cabin in the mountains and there proceeds to nurse him back to health, with the one idea in view: that of getting Dick into condition to fight with him.

Dick's sister comes to the town to search for her brother. When she finds him in Rio's cabin she is under the impression that Rio is nursing Dick for friendship sake, and neither man undeceives her. She tells Rio she will now take care of Dick and Rio allows Dick to depart with Madge. Dick's health improves fast and he is at last able to go to the village. On his first trip there he sees Rio and they go to the back room of the saloon to fight it out.

Mercidio, a low white man, owner of the saloon, covets Madge, but has been ordered by Dick to keep away from her. Mercidio determines to get Dick out of the way and during the fight between Dick and Rio, Mercidio stabs Dick in the side with a knife which he has previously dickered for with a half breed in the presence of Rio. Dick is taken to his cabin and all are under the impression that the stabbing has been done by Rio, who is unable to prove otherwise. Dick's wound is not fatal and he is recovering when Mercidio comes to the cabin and forces his attentions upon Madge. Rio, who has at last recollected seeing the knife in Mercidio's possession, is on his way to the saloon when he sees Mercidio near the cabin. He tracks him there and through the window sees Madge struggling with him. He goes into the cabin where he forces a confession from Mercidio as to the stabbing. In a fight outside the cabin Mercidio is shot. The story ends with a pretty love scene between Madge and Rio.

THE MAN AT THE KEY (Two Parts—Feb. 25).—Bob North, station master at Crescoe Station, is very much excited over the birth of a baby boy at his home and forgets to deliver a train order, thus causing a collision between a fast passenger and a freight train. He is sentenced to five years in the states prison for criminal negligence. During a mutiny at the prison one day, he is left alone in one corner of the prison yard and thinking his chance has come, Bob tries to escape. He is spied by a guard and shot at, the bullet hitting him in the head. He, however, in a frenzied fear, manages to get as far as Valley Junction where he staggers up against the station window. As he leans there he hears the telegraph instrument frantically clicking, and breaking into the station he takes a train order, ordering a meet between the Flier and the President's Special, which in some way has been overlooked and he thus averts a great tragedy. He is overtaken at Valley Junction by the posse from the prison and taken back to his cell. A few days later his wife, Myrtle, comes to the prison with a pardon for Bob. The president of the railroad also asks that Bob be reinstated in his old position at Crescoe.

KAY BEE.

THE SHERIFF'S STREAK OF YELLOW (Two Parts—Feb. 26).—Sheriff Hale, the idol of the citizens of a frontier town, is suspected of cowardice when he fails to bring in a noted outlaw who has been seen nearby. Earlier in the story the sheriff was befriended by the mother of the outlaw, she rescuing him from death in the desert. The mother has died and the sheriff corners Bill in her cabin after her death. The memory of her saving his life causes the sheriff to release Bill Todd, with the warning that if he ever returns to the county he will be shot.

In the meantime the sheriff is accused of cowardice and his resignation is demanded by a committee of townsmen. The sheriff turns in his star and resigns. A fortune in gold bars from a nearby mine is stored in the bank at Gold Bar. Bill and his gang attempt a raid on the bank. The townspeople are terrified and it is only the bravery of the sheriff that saves the treasure and captures the bandits. The sheriff again gets the drop on Bill Todd and forces him to commit suicide to avoid capture. The grateful townspeople return the sheriff's star and reinstate him in his old position.

THE MASTER KEY (Episode Fourteen—Two Parts—Feb. 15).—After spending the night in the camp of the beggars, Ruth, Dore and Sir Donald are given a hearty breakfast. Wilkerson has, meanwhile, decided to keep the idol and he and Drake, with their men, continue on their way back to the city. In the hills they become lost and take refuge in a deserted hut. The lone priest, who escaped from Wilkerson and his men, come upon a band of wandering hillmen and relate to them the story of the stealing of the idol and the murder of his comrades. The hillmen start out to avenge the deed.

Dore places Ruth in the care of the American Consul, where Sir Donald also remains, while he goes into the hills to endeavor to find the elusive idol. Aided by his faithful Indian friends, he arrives in the hills where he is seen by the aroused Hindus. They pursue him to the deserted hut, where he comes unexpectedly upon Wilkerson. It is a case of race against race, and thus the two enemies are forced to bury the hatchet for the time being and fight side by side to save their lives. The hillmen are driven off, and Dore returns to the hut with Wilkerson and Drake.

Ruth has been entertained at the consulate during Dore's absence, a small reception and dance being given. She meets a young American naval officer who later proves a connecting human link in her life of many experiences. After the guests have departed and she goes to the balcony overlooking the market square below her, she has a vision of Dore in trouble and her woman's intuition tells her he needs help—and at once.

THE MASTER KEY (Episode Fifteen—Two Parts—Rel.—Wk of Feb. 22).—Ruth, feeling more forcibly the danger that John Dore is in, hastens into the house to prepare to go with him. She is met by the Consul's wife, who tries to persuade her to do nothing so rash, but neither her words nor those of the consul are of any avail. While he is dressing to go out with her, the girl slips from the house and makes her way to the walled court where her beggar friends spends his nights. She arouses him and with his guidance hurries to the water front in hopes of finding the young naval officer she met at the dance.

The hillmen have, meantime, renewed their attack upon Wilkerson and Dore, and the former, realizing that he will lose his life unless he can escape from the hut, leaves Dore bound to the chair to which he had tied him shortly after their return to the hut. Dore's remaining followers are set upon by Wilkerson's ruffians, the Hindu servant alone getting away. Ruth arouses the naval officer who comes to her aid with a squad of his marines.

The British frontier troops have also been aroused by the continued firing and hasten to quell the disturbance. The Hindu servant meets Ruth and the officer on the road and guides them to the cabin, which has been set on fire by the hillmen. Wilkerson and Drake make a getaway and Dore is rescued by Ruth and her new friends.

On their return to the city Dore learns that Wilkerson, Mrs. Darnell and Drake have sailed for America, carrying with them the secret to the mine. He cables Tom Kane at Silent Valley to arrest them on their arrival. This is done, and when Dore, Ruth and Sir Donald get back a consultation is held.

It is decided not to prosecute Wilkerson and his allies in return for their giving up the plan to the mine. Wilkerson complies, but substitutes a false set of drawings. Dore, with Everett back of him, continues operations. Wilkerson proceeds to seek for the hidden gold at the spot near the original diggings.

In a premature explosion he is killed. Dore finds on his body the real plans. Drake and Mrs. Darnell are apprehended for their part in this trickery. Sir Donald releases Ruth from her promise to marry him, and the story closes with a happy meeting between John and Ruth.

INCOMPARABLE MISTRESS BELLAIRS (London Film—Four parts).—Mistress Kitty Bellairs has decided that Lord Mandeville would be an excellent match for her. Lord Mandeville, unfortunately, has no matrimonial inclinations, but Mistress Bellairs has secured the help of Mandeville's sister, Lady Dare-Stamer, and he often finds himself left in Kitty's society. One night at the theater, Mandeville sees and falls in love with Rachel Peace, a young quakeress, who has been driven by her unhappy home life to London and the stage. Mandeville decides to make Rachel's acquaintance and arrives in the green-room just in time to protect her from the too pressing attentions of Captain Spicer. Lord Mandeville knocks Spicer down and sends Rachel to her home in his own coach.

Captain Spicer is a society parasite who earns a living by his wits. He introduces young Mr. Jernigan to the sights of the town, and the quarrel with Mandeville is doubly unpleasant for young Jernigan, who parts from Captain Spicer in disgust. Lady Dare-Stamer takes her brother to task for his off-hand treatment of Mistress Bellairs at the playhouse and urges on him the necessity of getting married. Mandeville has by this time made advances to Rachel Peace, but has been made to realize that she will have nothing whatever to do with him. Indifferently he promises his sister to propose to Kitty Bellairs. Kitty hears of this and, during a masked ball at Lady Dare-Stamer's house, she takes care that Lord Mandeville shall have a good opportunity for his proposal. Under cover of her mask she piques Lord Mandeville's attention, lures him to an alcove and then unmasks. Mandeville has no alternative but to pursue his conversation and without any enthusiasm starts to make a formal proposal of marriage to Mistress Kitty.

At this point Lydia, Kitty's maid, intervenes. Lydia does not altogether approve of Lord Mandeville. Lydia prefers Daniel O'Hara, the jovial son of an Irish peer. O'Hara has no money but a wealth of affection for Mistress Kitty, who tacitly accepts his doglike devotion and occasionally rewards him with a smile. Lydia, who has been won over by O'Hara's blarney, steals her mistress's invitation to the masked ball and slips it under Rachel Peace's door. Rachel is tempted by the opportunity thus given her of going to the ball. There is no fear of her being detected under her mask and she longs to see Lord Mandeville again. She goes to the ball and recognizes Mandeville in close conversation with Kitty. She makes a pretext to interrupt them, and Kitty, divining who the masked stranger is, goes to her hostess and insists that the guests unmask. Rachel refuses and Lord Mandeville upholds her refusal. O'Hara, urged by Kitty, insists, and just as a quarrel seems unavoidable the Prince of Wales is announced. The Prince's attention is drawn to the one remaining masked quest. Again O'Hara and Mandeville almost come to blows, but Rachel intervenes and to prevent bloodshed removes her mask. For a moment there is stunned silence. But the Prince saves the situation by a genial clapping of hands, in which the guests join. Rachel apologizes to Lady Dare-Stamer for her intrusion and takes a hurried departure. Mandeville picks a quarrel with O'Hara for his interference and a duel takes place. Rachel, on her way home, finds Mandeville wounded by O'Hara. She accompanies Mandeville to his country house and nurses him back to health.

Kitty, deeply humiliated by Mandeville's behavior, returns to Bath under O'Hara's escort. Her coach breaks down and she seeks shelter at the nearest house. To her amazement she discovers that her host is Lord Mandeville. Seeing no way out of the situation, Kitty feigns illness and disappears in the care of the housekeeper. O'Hara and Mandeville quickly make up their differences, and, unbalanced by wine, propose bringing their respective ladies together for comparison. Kitty comes, self-possessed and proud; Rachel with her head bowed in shame. At first Kitty is inclined to snub Rachel, but her good heart triumphs. She takes the shamed girl in her arms and leads her from the room.

The next day Kitty persuades Rachel to escape from Mandeville's house with her in her coach and, later in the day, the two women still accompanied with O'Hara, put up at the Ostrich Inn. Mr. Jernigan, who has been searching London in vain for Rachel, willingly gives the newcomers his room and goes to share a room with another guest, who proves to be Captain Spicer. Kitty returns young Jernigan's courtesy by inviting him to supper with them. Captain Spicer calmly invites himself, but as he is not welcomed he returns their cold reception by rudeness and is thrown from the room by O'Hara. Young Jernigan, furious at Spicer's insults, follows him from the room and challenges him to fight. A brisk fight takes place, which results in Jernigan being wounded by Spicer. Rachel, hearing that she was the cause of the quarrel, insists on nursing Jernigan, and it is while she is engaged in doing this that she is found by Mandeville, who is now profoundly penitent. He apologizes to Rachel and formally asks her to become his wife. Rachel, now convinced of his sincerity, consents, and at the wedding breakfast a few days later O'Hara also has a glimpse of coming happiness with Kitty.

UNITED FILM SERVICE.

THE BLOOD TAINT (Grandin Brand—Three Parts).—Mrs. Van gives a grand ball for the coming out of her daughter Ethel. Coombs becomes enamored with her beauty and youth, which infatuation is incompatible with his dissipated self. Coombs is under the care of Holt, a specialist for an incurable disease, but utterly heartless he calls on Mrs. Van and seeks an alliance with Ethel. Mrs. Van is delighted, and bids him call the next afternoon. The mother and daughter have a stormy conversation, in which Ethel is forced to submit to her wishes. Coombs calls, has a scene with Ethel, and leaves the home engaged to her. The papers announce the engagement, and Coomb's and Ethel's pictures are printed side by side in terrible contrast—a man prematurely aged by every folly—a girl in beautiful womanhood. Holt sees the announcement and is horrified. He hurries to Mrs. Van and tells her as much as a man can tell a woman, but she tells him the marriage must take place. Still determined to prevent the alliance Dr. Holt sends for Coombs. Dr. Holt tells Coombs the absolute truth concerning his condition, but Coombs laughs. David Howard, Dr. Holt's assistant, finds the doctor raging and inquires the trouble. Dr. Holt shows him the newspaper, saying, "I would to God that I were young—like you—I'd save that girl." The doctor's words have their effect upon David. Visions of Ethel rise before him; he sees her at his own fireside. The vision fades and David despairs. Ethel, as the time draws near for her marriage, falls ill. Mrs. Van sends for Dr. Holt. Dr. Holt sends for David.

Two weeks pass and a love interest springs up between David and Ethel. Now it is Ethel who sees visions of life with David in contrast to visions of life with Coombs. Her visions end in despair. Helen Grayson, once the wife of Coombs but divorced by him, is living in a miserable room on the east side. David in his rounds among the poor is told she is ill, and enters her room, where he sees upon the table at her bedside a picture of Coombs. David learns her story and tells her of his love for Ethel. She promises to help him, but when David leaves her face lights up with a devilish purpose. The wedding day comes. Ethel is being arrayed in her wedding finery. Helen Grayson in her poor little room reads a newspaper item. "——— after the ceremony at the bride's home the bridal couple will journey by motor to Heather Downs, the grooms' country home, where they will spend their honeymoon." Helen prepares herself for a journey. The wedding takes place and David sees the girl he loves married to the roue. The bridal couple enter the car and drive away. Helen Grayson leaves the train at a small country station and walks rapidly away. We see her heavily veiled at the gate of Heather Downs as the motor enters containing Ethel and Coombs.

It is night—a light coming from the fireplace lights up the evil face of Coombs and the sad young face of Ethel. Leaning close to her and leering into her face, stroking her hand and arms with all the pleasure of the sensualist, he whispers to her. Her face shows the horror she feels as she rises, bows and exits. Alone in her bedroom, a vision of David comes to her and fades away. Sitting by the fire where she left him sits Coombs. Smilingly he rises and turns, but his smile changes to a look of horror as he stares into the face of the woman he has wronged. Coombs springs for her, but sees the gun in her hands. She motions him into his chair and he sinks down weakly. Helen speaks and a vision of a simple wedding appears and fades quickly away. She speaks again, and a vision of his awful self is staring at him, followed by a vision of Ethel in bridal dress. The visions fade, and holding out the gun, Helen speaks, "Use it first on yourself, then I will use it." Trembling and afraid, he reaches out and takes the gun from her hand. Ethel in her chamber is startled by the sounds of shots. Before the fire lie the bodies of Helen and Coombs.

Two years later, a hallway in David's home. David is pacing up and down when Dr. Holt enters from Ethel's room and speaks. "It's a boy and a healthy little rascal." The last scene shows David kneeling beside the bed containing his wife and child.

THANHOUSER SYNDICATE CORP.

THE $20,000,000 MYSTERY (Episode Fourteen—Reels 27 and 28—"The Missing Million).—The death of Henry Howard, the African mine superintendent, due to his ill-treatment at the hands of Dr. Munn and his hirelings, when he was just on the eve of a confession, which would have exposed the machinations of Madame Duval and her band, was a serious setback to the plans of Zudora's supporters. Through a ruse Madame Duval directs the attention of Tom Hunt, the detective, to the Zudora mine properties in the West. Taking Jim Baird with him Hunt hastens to investigate the clue, while John Storm, Zudora's sweetheart and her attorney, writes a letter to a certain Marcus Villiers, a wealthy mine owner, asking for information about Zudora's father's will and also whether Mr. Villier's has any papers belonging to him.

Meanwhile Madame Duval, who is untiring in her efforts to prevent the vast Zudora properties from leaving her possession, determines to masquerade as Zudora. Learning from her agents that Marcus Villiers is expected in New York, with papers relating to the ownership of the Zudora mine, at Captain Radcliffe's suggestion she invites him to be her guest at a big dinner party.

While they are waiting for the Western capitalists's arrival, another member of the band reaches New York. It is Bruce, who has made a hurried trip to South Africa to get possession of certain gems, which he had left behind on his previous visit. Madame Duval is anxiously awaiting him and more particularly the treasure that he brings. Bruce saunters nonchalantly down the gang plank, although he knows that he is an object of suspicion by the customs officials. He invites them to inspect his baggage thoroughly, which they pass after a search. It never occurs to them that in the pipe Bruce is smoking diamonds of immense value are concealed.

In the meantime, Captain Radcliffe, disguised, has gone West. It is he, who has instigated the plot against Hunt and Baird, and he goes to see that his plans are brought to a successful issue. Thus it happens, when the two champions of Zudora's cause arrive, the trap for their reception is ready and set. The chauffeur of the superintendent of the Zudora mine is in the pay of the conspirators, and when the two get into his car, they do not realize that they are being led into as desperate an adventure as any they have ever experienced.

Following his instructions, the chauffeur drives them to a deserted mine, where a number of the band, who have accompanied Captain Radcliffe, set upon them. There is a terrific struggle, but the superior fistic talent of Baird and Hunt enables them to escape, although badly mauled, and return to the railroad station. There, after a consultation, they decide that their trip West has been in vain and they hurriedly return to New York, where they realize there is urgent need for their presence.

Arriving there, Hunt learns from one of his men, that Bruce has reached the metropolis and also that the capitalist, Villiers, has arrived. They do not know, however, that the latter has received a dinner invitation from Madame Duval, signed "Zudora," and that he has accepted it. Bruce's trail leads them to the old garage, used by the conspirators as a secret entrance to Madame Duval's mansion, and here they take up their posts to await developments.

It happens that their arrival is most opportune. Zudora has received a note to which Madame Duval has forged Villiers' name, asserting that he is a prisoner at 122 Riggs street, the address of the garage, but is still in possession of the precious papers. As a matter of fact Villiers is just then enjoying the hospitality of Madame Duval, posing as Zudora. Zudora and Storm set out for the garage.

In the meantime, the latter observe two burly ruffians lurking in the shadows of the garage. They are preparing to attack them, when, of a sudden, the men disappear within. Their disappearance is followed an instant later by a woman's screams. Running to the door, Baird and Hunt find that the precious pair have attacked Storm and Zudora. Their advent compels the conspirators to turn and battle for their own lives, while Storm carries Zudora out to safety.

COL. HEEZA LIAR GHOST BREAKER (Second Part—Comedy-Cartoon—February).—After his wild and harrowing experience with the ghosts of Castle Clare, the doughty Colonel vows that it was "some time," but he is game for another set-to with spooks. Approaching the ancient castle through a graveyard, he quakes with fear on beholding a skeleton rise from a grave. Heeza beats it for the castle, and locks himself in the bedchamber. He slips into bed, and prepares for developments. His unmusical snores reverberate through the castle when, awakening suddenly, he beholds friend skeleton rising from the floor. Heeza hides under the bed, but old "bones" soon has him on the run. Picking up a chair, Heeza prepares to lambast the spook, but the spook is proof against all assaults, so the quaking Colonel decides to retreat. He goes to sleep in another room, but is awakened by the antics of the furniture, which seems to be possessed with life. "This is no place for me," sighs the Colonel and once more makes a retreat, but "Bones" is on the job and follows him. Heeza scatters the skeleton with a well-directed blow of his club, but it avails him nothing, as the bones refuse to stay scattered. Realizing that he is up against too tough a proposition, Heeza decides that as a ghost breaker he is an "onion" and gives up the fight.

A NATURE BEAUTY SPOT (The Crimea), on the same reel as foregoing (February).—On the trip from Orianda to Simeiz many private residences in this beautiful section of the Crimea may be seen nestling like jewels in their gorgeous settings. The rugged precipitous cliffs, washed by the ever-restless sea, are backed by a heavy growth of most luxurious vegetation. Medieval in architecture, the turret-topped castles are shown, which recall the feudal days of the crusaders.

WHEN CIDERVILLE WENT DRY (February).—Ciderville was wet, very much so, both inside and out, as was evidenced by the hilarious condition of some of its leading citizens; but the suffragettes struck town one day, and they proceeded to put the reverse on the well known masculine thirst. Even the sheriff himself was hornswoggled, and they prevailed upon him to post a notice in front of the village post-office to the effect that there would be an anti-thirst meeting at the town hall that night. Henceforth all was changed, and after that meeting the suffragettes ruled the town and all living things therein. Even the police department was governed by them. One day a force of lady "cops" chancing to see a number of men well "lit" leaving an ice cream and soda parlor, they investigated and learned that all was not as it should be, for the soda which was sold was spelled, b-o-o-z-e. A raid was made and Weary Willie, one of the culprits, was arrested and placed in the cell with the contraband which was captured by the women police in their raid. Through the window of his cell he made a ready sale of the "nose-paint" to the thirsty ones who gathered, and made a "clean up." Haled before the judge, he received a lengthy temperance lecture which was capped by the ultimatum, "$10 or ten days." Digging down into his jeans, he paid the fine from the proceeds of the sales and departed a free man. But he lingered not in dry Ciderville.

MAX IS FORCED TO WORK (February).—"Forced to work!" How terrible the sound of these words. Doubly terrible are they to Max, an incorrigible rounder. Cornered one morning by his parents on his return from an all-night debauch, he is turned out of his home. Chancing to find an invitation to a swell soiree, he takes advantage of his luck and goes to the reception, where he meets the daughter of the hostess, and she immediately falls in love with Max. Max's heart is also touched, and, to make matters worse, he is broke. Being an ambitious youth, however, he secures a job as a waiter. Immediately things begin to happen. He has absolutely no regard for the breakability of china, and soon finds himself knee deep in broken dishes. That evening, he repairs to the home of his loved one, and becomes more deeply in love. But fate is on his trail. She happens to patronize the same restaurant with her father, and Max's lowly position is disclosed. She is heartbroken. Max pleads with her, however, to the great discomfort of the restaurant patrons, and there is every indication that he will soon be "in dutch." He is saved from an embarrassing situation by his father, who enters at the psychological moment. Forgiveness follows, and Max is made happy with his sweetheart.

FERRETS (on the same reel as foregoing—February).—Few who have seen these strange little animals have not been impressed by their oddity. Originally brought from Africa to Spain, the ferret is closely allied to the weasel and the pole-cat families and is principally used in modern countries for the extermination of rats, mice and other household pests. Numerous views of this interesting animal are shown.

KRITERION SERVICE.

(The following are synopses of the pictures to be released on the Kriterion Program during the week of Monday, February 22, to Saturday, February 27, inclusive.)

THE SECRET FORMULA (Alhambra—Two Parts).—While returning from the army experimental station, Lieutenant Lawrence Barr is attacked and an unsuccessful attempt made to rob him of a secret formula for a new explosive which he carries. He continues on his way and succeeds in delivering the formula to the scientist, Robert Bayley, who has made the discovery and with whose daughter, Louise, the lieutenant is in love.

Louis Delano, an adventurer, is detailed to endeavor to secure this formula for the Norovian government and makes an attempt to purchase it from the scientist without success. During this visit Delano meets Louise and sees through her an opportunity to procure the formula. He writes her a note, telling her she has a chance to be of great help toward universal peace by securing the formula and giving it to him, for he will keep it from the world powers. Believing him to be sincere, Louise meets Delano and promises to secure the formula for him at nine o'clock that night. The chauffeur, an old army man, overhears her promise to Delano and confides what he has heard to Barr, who plans to frustrate the scheme. At eight-thirty that night, a forged note is delivered to Louise, purporting to come from Delano, and as she goes to meet him, she is overpowered and carried away by Barr, who, despite her anger and attempt to escape, holds her prisoner until such time as he thinks Delano has grown tired of waiting. Meanwhile, Delano, becoming suspicious at the delay, steals into the house and attempts to secure the formula himself. As he is searching for it, Barr brings Louise back to the house and hearing the noise, Delano switches off the lights. In the darkness he runs against and upsets the receptacle containing the explosive, with the results that it explodes and he is killed.

Barr, Louise and her father, aroused by the explosion, rush into the laboratory and discover Delano, dead. On his body Barr finds a note proving the mercenary cause of his desire for the formula. Louise, now apologetic, asks forgiveness, which is willingly granted her.

BILLY'S STRATAGEM (Santa Barbara).—While on his vacation, Billy meets Betty, a charming little flirt, who invites him to call to see her. Billy responds to the invitation and is introduced to Betty's sister and mamma. He falls in love with Betty and begs her to accept him before he has to go home, but Betty teases him and refuses to give him a definite answer. The day for his departure having arrived, Billy calls to say "good-bye" and, accidentally, overhears a plan of Betty's and her sister. Betty has the following advertisement put in the newspaper: "Handsome unmarried young men wanted for boarders. Unusual accommodations." Billy reads the announcement and decides to stay over. The boarders arrive and the girls become quite friendly with them.

Meanwhile, Billy has disguised himself as an old gent, suffering from rheumatism and applies at the boarding house. He finds the girls and two of the boarders seated in the porch swing, and immediately "butts in" trying to squeeze himself in the tiny space between them, whereupon the young people leave in disgust for more secluded spots, but Billy is on their trail and makes it his business to see that there is no spooning while he is about.

A professor calls that afternoon and presents them all with invitations to visit his gymnasium. The next morning, they all attend. The boarders try to impress the girls with exhibitions of their athletic accomplishments, but the "old rheumatic" gives them the surprise of their life, by knocking them all out. Later, they go bathing, and the boat in which they are seated, upsets. Their escorts cannot swim, but cling to the boat for dear life, but Billy is on the job and pulling off his disguise, he swims out and rescues the girls, and finally succeeds in winning Betty.

WHEN IS A COUSIN? (Alhambra).—At a summer resort, Dora quarrels with her sweetheart because he stops to speak to a girl. He explains that the young lady is his cousin and Dora relents somewhat, but later, when she again discovers Jack swinging another girl and apparently very attentive to her, she becomes angry and refuses to listen to his assurance that this girl also happens to be a cousin of his. When he calls that evening she returns his ring, remarking he has entirely too many cousins to suit her.

To forget about Jack, Dora accepts an invitation to spend a week end in Los Angeles with her newly married young aunt, whose husband, "Duckey," Dora has never met. Jack, learning of Dora's departure, hastens after her, with the inteniton of making up, but arrives while Dora is out shopping.

In the meantime, "Duckey" is speeding home to his bride and by chance he and Dora get on the same trolley; in fact, they share the same seat. "Duckey's" shoestring having become untied, he stoops to fasten it and unknowingly, ties the loose end to Dora's shoelace. Reaching her destination, Dora gets ready to alight when she discovers her shoe is fastened to her neighbor's. She becomes very indignant and refuses to listen to his profuse apologies, claiming he did it on purpose. Her indignation grows no less when she perceives that the man is apparently following; in fact, they both stop right at her auntie's door. The next moment the door is thrown open, and to Dora's amazement her auntie and her trolley companion are in each other's arms, obvious to her presence. Later she is properly introduced to her new uncle and they become good friends.

Dora is still a little reluctant, however, to forgive Jack, who now appears on the scene, but a little persuasion on his part soon wins her over and he again places his ring on her finger.

LOST, STRAYED OR STOLEN (Punchinello). Tired from too much attention, doggie hides in a laundry basket for a little nap and when the man calls for the basket, doggie, who is concealed among the clothes, is taken along. When the dog is missed, there is great grief and an advertisement is immediately inserted in the paper offering $100 for his return. Fatty's girl tells him he can win her hand by proving himself a great detective and bringing the little pet home again. He assures her that doggie will be found and sets out in search of an Italian peddler who called earlier that day and whom he suspects. He tells him he is a detective and demands the dog, whereupn the Italian treats him to a good walloping and doesn't do a thing to him generally. Then he gets two of his pals to sandbag Fatty and drag him into the bushes and relieve him of his clothes. Whereupon Fatty is obliged to come forth attired like Adam in a suit of leaves, and is followed for blocks by a howling mob. Finally he reaches home in an exhausted condition.

The next day about a hundred dogs are brought to the house in answer to the ad, but still no sign of doggie. A couple of thieves read the ad and conclude that anyone who can give $100 for a lost dog is worth robbing. Their plot is overheard by Fatty and he sets out on their trail, entering the house through a window just as the robbers are starting investigations within. They spy him and give him a severe beating, making their escape. Fatty runs after them and is noticed by the police, who suspect him. They follow him all night in an automobile and chase him into the water. He finally escapes through a sewer and rushes to his girl's home just as the laundry wagon arrives and doggie is delivered to his owner to the great joy of all.

HAVE YOU SEEN MY GIRL (Thistle).—The Boob gets an invitation to show his automobile at the Tournament of Roses Parade and he rushes to his sweetheart with the good news. The Villain watches them kiss and spoon from a distance and jealously enters his heart. He "butts in" on the young lovers and the Boob gives him a swift kick which the Villain returns so vigorously that the Boob is sent flying a considerable distance. He picks up a rock and aims it at the Villain but it hits a Cop in the eye, who, thinking the Villain struck him, wallops him with his club. The day of the Tournament Parade arrives and the Boob calls for his girl in his funny little car. After considerable difficulty, he finally gets the car going. Along they go down the road, ziz-zagging at a terrific speed, until suddenly the car runs into a telegraph pole. It explodes and throws the two out in the road.

The Boob hurries to get some tools and while he is gone along comes the Villain in his big swing the big people into line, if he, the gover-car and persuades the girl to go to the Parade with him. The Boob returns to fix the machine, finds his girl gone and starts in pursuit. He arrives at the fair and stops everyone he meets with the question, "Have you seen my girl?" with the result that he receives many hard punches and kicks and gets into all kinds of trouble.

Meanwhile the Villain and the girl are taking in the sights, and he buys her peanuts and soda. After the parade, the girl is still hungry and wants a sandwich, but the Villain refuses to spend any more money that day. Just then along comes the Boob and the two forget the Villain in their happiness at finding each other again. The Boob buys his girl some sandwiches which she shares with him and the Villain is left standing alone, cursing his fate.

THE BORDER RUNNER (Navajo—Two Parts).—Gay Sherman and her unscrupulous guardian live close to the Mexican border. Her guardian and his Mexican accomplice, Peto Montrey, are engaged in smuggling opium into the States, which violation of the law they accomplish by secreting the opium tins in water canteens that Gay unsuspectingly carries back and forth.

Frank Weldon, a government officer, who is in love with Gay, suspects Montrey as being the ringleader of the smuggling conspiracy, and starts investigations. He is made prisoner by Montrey, but escapes and tells Gay of the part she has been playing in the operations. Thinking he suspects her, she returns his ring and confronts her guardian with his duplicity. The shock of discovery causes heart failure and he drops dead. Montrey, fleeing from the law, takes Gay with him into the mountains. She longs for Frank but does not know of any way to reach him. Frank, having later found Gay innocent of any part in the smuggling, repents of his hasty judgment and starts to search for her without success.

Supplies run short and Montrey disguises himself and goes to town. On the packsaddle, Gay has tied a knot which Frank taught her and prays that he may see it and give him a clue to her whereabouts. Montrey in his disguise passes detection, but the knot catches Frank's eye, and he loosens a rope, unknown to Montrey, which drags on the ground, leaving an easily followed mark which Frank pursues and finally reaches the hiding place. Discovering his approach, Montery shoots Frank, dropping him. Gay finds Frank and seeing her anguish over him, Montrey's jealousy is aroused and he tries to kill her, but Frank rallies enough to send a shot which places Montrey outside the pale of the law. Later, things are satisfactorily explained and Gay again wears Frank's ring.

SYD'S LOVE AFFAIR (C. K.).—Cupid, bent on mischief, sends an arrow through the heart of Myrtle, an old maid, and at the same time sends another dart to Syd, a man of all work. Syd, finding his "missing rib," immediately starts lovemaking. Myrtle tells Syd that before he can steal her heart, he must become famous. Syd leaves in search of fame and as a parting gift sends his lady-love a string of sausages, which is duly appreciated.

Syd meets a hypnotist who makes him believe he is a great poet, whereupon Syd creates "An Ode to his Dog Schneider." He recites this to several people with diastrous results. Then he tries it on his girl, who drenches him with water and orders him out. Syd promptly returns to the hypnotist and gives him a good thrashing for getting him "in wrong." Syd then meets an actress who suggests he seek fame through acting and takes him to a moving picture studio. Syd is given a try-out, and is soon taught how to kiss a pretty girl.

Meanwhile, Myrtle repents her harsh treatment of Syd and starts out to find him. She runs across the hypnotist, who, wishing to get even for the beating he received, tells her Syd has gone to the studio with an actress. Myrtle breaks into the studio just as the scene in which Syd is kissing the girl is being taken, and taking Syd firmly by the ear, she leads him out and marches him to the Justice of the Peace, where they are married on the spot. Cupid chances to pass a little while later, and realizing he is the cause of all the trouble, Syd promptly gives chase, followed by Myrtle. Syd catches Cupid, pulls off his wings and destroys his bow and arrow, when Myrtle again catches up with him and leads him away by the ear.

A COURAGEOUS COWARD (Trump—Two Parts).—When Dick Howard comes home to his wife, Dora, somewhat the worse for liquor, Dora brother's, Hal Easton, in an attempt to protect her, strikes Dick down with the result that the older man, striking his head against the mantle, is apparently fatally injured. Police and doctors are called in. Dora pleads with Hal to flee, begging him to go for her sake. He makes his escape, and after several experiences, during which time the memory of the fatal blow he has struck becomes more and more an obsession, he falls totally worn-out, into the care of a farmer and his daughter, Nance.
